Believers who share Brother Blessing's idea between resurrection, pretend to see a difference between resurrection and emergence. If resurrection is subsequent to and distinct from emergence, then Dr. Thomas may have believed in immortal resurrection and still have believed in mortal emergence. It is also probable that there is some ground for our brother's other observation to the effect that Dr. Thomas changed his views from immortal emergence to mortal emergence in his "mature" work called "Anastasis." The doctor was not a clear writer, and it is rather difficult to tell just what his ideas are on matters of detail, even after you have read his books critically. He says four times in "Anastasis" that the resurrected saints come forth in bodies like Adam's before he sinned. He claims, with considerable absurdity we think, that saints who are raised from the dead have lived in three bodies—in flat contradiction of Paul, who avers that there are only two bodies, the natural and the spiritual. These two bodies he is careful to say are possessed in this order: "First the natural, and afterward the spiritual" (1 Cor. 15:46). The apostle makes resurrection the dividing line between these two bodies. "The natural body" being the "first," it is possessed now, and is called "the image of the earthly;" "the spiritual body" being possessed "afterward," is called "the image of the heavenly." A natural body now; a spiritual body then. This Pauline doctrine did not fit the "mature" (?) findings of Dr. Thomas, and therefore he had to get over the difficulty some way; and he solved the problem by inventing a third body! We quote his own words: "Now the thing to be accomplished in resurrection is the development of a spirit-body, with the consciousness that the character flashed upon the new earthy body was evolved through an old earthy body in a previous state. In this wonderful development, the new resurrection-earthy body takes the place of the old body dissolved in the grave; so that, as far as body is concerned in the matter, the one character on record in the Lamb's book of life, when glorified, will have been related to three bodies, more or less intimately connected—the first, the body of sin; the second, a body like Adam's before he sinned; and the third, this second new body changed. . . . When this is manifested, the process is complete; and the spiritually embodied character, named Abraham, for instance, is 'clothed with his house which is from heaven.' He is then 'raised incorruptible' " (Anastasis, p. 35).

We repeat, the Doctor has used these or similar words four times in Anastasis. Allowing that this book contains his "mature convictions" on the subject of resurrection, fairly stated they are as follows:

1. We have now a mortal body, which he calls "a body of sin."
2. When raised from the dead we shall have "the second, a body like Adam's before he sinned," and which he calls "a new body."
3. After "the old earthy body, dissolved in the grave" has emerged from the grave in the form of "a new body," and which he avers is "a body like Adam's before he sinned," it is then "changed" and "raised incorruptible." The second body is transmuted into the third! And let all who claim Dr. Thomas as their father in mortal emergence remember that he does not say the second or "new body" emerges from the grave mortal, but it comes up " a body like Adam's before he sinned."

The word "anastasis" means, as Brother Blessing has correctly explained, "standing again in an erect posture after having fallen;" but this definition, excellent though it is, does not quite suit the "mature convictions" of those who believe in mortal resurrection, therefore he feels constrained to add an illustration to show that the word is "not restricted to the act of rising up from a lying pose." No one, brother, wants to restrict this word to an "act;" but does it not always include the act? The doctor says to his patient (to use our brother's own illustration): "You must drink a cup of hot water on rising in the morning. It will cleanse your system of impurities." Now does not "rising in the morning" include the "act" of rising? If the patient were to drink hot water in a "lying pose" (before he gets up), is there any "rising" (anastasis) in the case? None. Rising does not mean to drink water! Is putting your clothes on in the morning, after you get up—is that getting up? Is eating breakfast an hour after "rising," the same as getting up? Does "rising" mean to drink water, clothe yourself, eat breakfast, etc., etc.? No! Rising is "an act," and drinking water, dressing yourself, etc., are subsequent acts, quite distinct and separable from "rising." The brother has mistaken an "act" for a state; he has confounded things that differ in nature and time.

Certain Bible texts are quoted which speak of post-resurrectional conditions, such as Luke 20:35, and then confounding the "act" of resurrection with the condition into which that act is the introduction, we are asked to believe that when Paul said, "The dead shall be raised incorruptible," the apostle is speaking of the "incorruptible state to which the righteous attain." Here again an "act" is confounded with a "state." Webster says the word "state" means "the condition or circumstances of a being or thing at any given time." The "given time" in the case we are considering is resurrectional. "Rising," says Brother Blessing, "is not only the act of coming out of the grave, but the attainment to that to which they are called forth." Since "state" means the conditions and circumstances of a being, when the dead are raised, of course they are introduced into conditions and circumstances. Only by resolving the raised saints into ghosts can this conclusion be evaded. The question then is, Into what condition and circumstances are the dead introduced by resurrection? If "rising is not only the act of coming out of the grave," as our dear brother puts it, it does embrace this "act." That the saints enjoy a "state" after they are restored to personalities by resurrection, every rational man must admit. We frequently get post-resurrectional glimpses of them in the word of God. One writer sees them in glory, "singing aloud upon their beds" and executing judgment (Psa. 149:5-9); while another sees them serving God in his temple (Rev. 22:3). Let us keep things which are different, separate and distinct. The "state" after resurrection is a state of glory for the redeemed, but resurrection introduces them into this condition. Please do not confound that which is but the introduction to a thing, with the thing itself. The saints sing and serve God post-resurrectionally; but resurrection is not singing! Resurrection is not service!! As natural birth introduces the one born into a "state" of mortality, so spiritual birth introduces the one born into the "state" of immortality. Now both states are manifold in circumstances. Natural birth is an "act" which introduces a child into the state of mortality; but the child is mortal when it is born, and remains after its birth " in the attainment to that to which it is called forth." Resurrection is an act which introduces the dead into a state of immortality; they are immortal when they are "born again," and remain ever after in a condition or state of immortality. If the resurrection is the "act," or if it even includes "the act of coming out of the grave," then when Paul says "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," he means, despite the "mature convictions" of any man or angel, that the dead are incorruptible as soon as the "act" of resurrection is performed.

The attempt in the latter part of the article to prove by the parables of the talents and pounds that immortalization of the saints follows the "inspection, decision and separation" of a "personal judgment," is a fiasco. Flying to parables to prove important doctrines is to build on a sandy foundation. Because in some New Testament parables the reckoning is represented by a man reckoning with his servants, by their giving a verbal account (because their master had no other means of knowing but by what he saw and heard), some have sought to prove a ceremonial judgment or trial for life after the dead are raised, and after Jesus comes, in utter defiance of all other scriptures. Their logic is the same as those who seek to prove the present immortality of man by the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus (Luke 16). The reader is asked to notice that according to the parables quoted by Brother Blessing, the servants were rewarded according to what they had done (not what they said about it), and that both the accepted and rejected then root back into the soil of now. "Whatever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. 6:7). We are in the sowing time now; the resurrection at the Lord's coming is the harvest. The harvest will correspond with the seed sown—neither "personal judgment" nor anything else can reverse this law of nature and law of God. God is now making inspection of his people; he is now reaching a decision as to their worthiness or unworthiness; and at his coming the separation of the two classes in an enforcement of his decision, called by inspiration, "the revelation of the righteous judgment of God." The text quoted from Luke 20:35 settled this point: "They that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead." Their worthiness had been decided before they were raised from the dead. When God judged the old world, how was it done? Noah was tried, or if our Brother prefers, was "inspected," before the flood came, and the decision was rendered according to this standard: "Thus did Noah; according to all that God commanded him, so did he" (Gen. 6:22). Hear Jehovah's verdict concerning his servant: "Come thou and all thy house into the ark; for thee have I seen righteous in this generation" (Gen. 7:1). God is not waiting till he inspects Noah with a "personal judgment" at the coming of Jesus Christ; he has already passed on his case; he rendered his decision " in this generation." In the first century Christ "walked in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks" inspecting his servants, approving some and condemning others; entering new names in the Book of Life, and blotting out others (Rev. 2, 3). Read these chapters and you will see that to each of

EDITORIAL

The brethren in Los Angeles, Calif., meet every first and third Sunday in the Taft Hall, 730 S. Grand Ave.

Whatever comes from the mind carries the hue of the place it came from, and whatever comes from the heart carries the heat and color of its birthplace.

May 28th, after making the "good confession," Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Usher, formerly Methodist, put on the name of Christ by being baptized into his name. Sister Taverneir, whose obedience was recently reported, was the instrument by which the truth reached Brother and Sister Usher. "Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbor" (Zech. 8:16) is a divine command, and God is ready to honor his commandments when we obey them. Several others are much interested, and if the Lord continues to tarry, we hope that his goodness to usward will be taken advantage of by them to render the obedience of faith. God bless them and help them to enter the ark of safety before the Armageddon storm breaks.

No subject can be of greater importance, either to the believer, or to the unbeliever, than the investigation of the evidences of Christianity. If the unbeliever be actuated by a spirit of free and fair inquiry, he cannot deny his obligation to examine its claims to a divine origin. He must sometimes at least realize how difficult it is to prove his views of unbelief, because they are all negative; and they can never be established till all direct and positive evidence to the contrary be destroyed; and this too before Christianity is disproved. Without this critical and candid examination, all gratuitous assumptions, fanciful speculation, and hypothetical reasoning, and analogical inferences that seem to militate against the truth of the word of God, may be totally erroneous. Skeptical objections may be pausible and excite a transient doubt, but they cannot justify a settled unbelief. We are now living in a critical age; old beliefs, well established opinions, and superstitious fables are being scattered to the winds by modern criticism. Every thing which cannot prove its right to exist, seems doomed to perish. Amen. The truth of God will survive the wreck. Truth invites criticism: it shines all the brighter for close and critical examination. The truth suffers more from the indifference of the people than from their hostility.

A man flippantly tells us that he is an unbeliever. He rejects the word of God, he says. Dear friend, will you be kind enough to prove that you are an unbeliever? We want the proof, understand. Plenty of men say they are Christians, but give us no evidence that they are. Were we to call upon them for the proof, they could not give any. You say you are an infidel; now prove it, please. You have no more right to expect us to believe you are an infidel without proof, than the Christian of pretence has a right to demand you believe he is a Christian without evidence. Why do you keep saying you are an infidel? That amounts to nothing. People often say one thing and mean another. Many a man has said he was an infidel when he was well, and has taken it all back when he was sick; and might it not be just that way with you? Of course you say you are an infidel; but do you know what an infidel is? You will have to prove it. If you cannot prove it, then there can be no truth in your professions. If you always practiced infidelity, we might be able to believe you are an infidel; for actions speak louder than words. But the Bible commands you to pay your debts, and you pay them; live peaceably, and you live peaceably; work diligently, and you work diligently; to be temperate and quiet, and you are temperate and quiet; to earn your own bread; and you earn yours. All of these requirements are either commandments of Christ or his apostles; and you obey them all! By what rule of justice or common sense, then can we believe your pretentions to infidelity? Reasonable now: If a man who claims to be an infidel, cannot prove that he is an infidel, with what grace can he find fault with Christians, and demand stronger proof of the truth of the Bible than he is able to give of his own profession? We have far stronger and better evidence that the Bible is true than an infidel has to prove that he is an infidel. Therefore we believe the Bible.

"GALILEAN, THOU HAST CONQUERED"

Such was the dying exclamation of Julian, the Roman emperor. Though once a professed Christian, he apostatized from the faith, and employed all his energies for the overthrow of the religion of Jesus and the establishment of idolatry. He shut up the Christian sanctuaries, reopened and patronized heathen temples, and in face of the positive assertion of Christ that the Jewish temple at Jerusalem should remain in ruins, impiously attempted to rebuild it. But he contended against One far mightier than himself, and was forced to submit. Wounded in battle by a Persian lance, he took a handful of his blood, and casting it toward heaven cried, "O Galilean, thou hast conquered."

A PREACHER GRILLED

We asked a preacher recently if a man could be saved without believing what he taught? He first answered, "Yes." When then asked him, Can a man be a Christian without being a member of your church? He answered "Yes." Then as we can be a Christian and be saved without believing what you teach, and you preach the gospel, it follows that we can be a Christian and be saved without believing the gospel! "O, but a man must believe the gospel." Then do you preach the gospel? "Yes, of course I preach the gospel." Then, does it not follow that a man must believe what you preach in order to be a Christian and be saved? "Yes, a man must believe the gospel, and I preach the gospel." How many gospels are there? "Just one, of course."

Now as you preach the gospel, and there is just one gospel, and man must believe the gospel to be saved (Rom. 1:16), does it not follow that all men must believe what you teach to be Christians and be saved? Now, Paul says, "God takes vengeance on those who obey not the gospel" (2 Thess. 1:8). As you preach the gospel and God takes vengeance on those who obey not the gospel, will not God take vengeance on all who fail to obey what you preach? "Well, yes, I suppose he will." You said at first that we could be saved without believing what you preach. Now you say, we must believe and obey what you teach before we can be saved. How about this any way?

"Well a man must beieve and obey the gospel to be saved, and I preach the gospel." Very well: now, if we believe and obey what you preach, won't we, by so doing, become a member of the same church of which you are a member?

"Well, no, not necessarily." As you preach the gospel, and men hear and obey what you preach, just this and nothing more, and do not by this belief and obedience become a member of your church, what do you have to teach men in order that they may become members of your church? "O, I preach nothing but the gospel." People become members of your church by believing and obeying what you preach, don't they? "Of course they do." Then a man becomes a member of your church by believing and obeying the gospel. Does it not follow that all who believe and obey the gospel will be members of your church? "Well, it looks like they would." Didn't you say a man must believe and obey the gospel to be saved? "Yes, I say that." Now you say the man who believes and obeys the gospel will be a member of your church. Now does it not follow that a man must be a member of your church to be a Christian and be saved? "O, I don't believe that at all."

Again, will what you preach make a man a member of the Methodist Church, as you are a Baptist? "No, sir, no man will ever be a Methodist by accepting what I preach." And you preach the gospel? "I certainly do." Then the preaching, belief of and obedience to the gospel will make no man a Methodist. Now, do you believe the Methodists are saved? "Why, of course, I think they are Christians." Can a man be a Christian without believing and obeying the gospel? "No, he can not." Now, as you preach the gospel, and man cannot be a Christian without believing and obeying the gospel, and Methodists are Christians, then if a man believes and obeys what you teach he wil be a Methodist, won't he? "Never, I tell you never." Then tell me how the Methodists are made Christians. "Well, by preaching the gospel to the people." Do the Methodists preach the gospel? "Of course they do." A man has to believe and practice what the Methodists preach in order to be Methodist, does he not? "Certainly, a man must believe what they teach and by complying with same he becomes a Methodist." You say the Methodists are Christians, and become Christians by complying with what they teach, and you further say the Methodists preach the gospel. Now I ask: Do you preach the same things the Methodists preach? "I do not." Then the gospel to a Baptist is one thing and to a Methodist it is a different thing. Yet believed and obeyed they make the same thing—a Christian! Tell us how this is any way.

"I'll not do it, and I don't want to talk to a man who thinks a man can not be a Christian without believing as he does." Well, but—"I won't talk to you."

COMMUNICATIONS

From A. E. Shaw

Dear Brother Nutt:

Enclosed you will find six dollars and fifty cents; five dollars to be used for the linotype fund, and one fifty for a new subscriber. We trust those of the blessed truth will not have to be urged to contribute to this fund.

Yours in hope.

From Brother S. T. Blessing

Manager Restitution:

I am sending $2.00 to extend the time for a year. The 50 cents is for the helping fund.

I saw my first copy of The Restitution in 1877, when I was earnestly studying the scripture on the nature of man, and the nature of the award to be given to such as would obey. I immediately sent in my subscription to The Restitution and have been a continuous subscriber and reader ever since. Very truly.

From Dr. and Sister C. W. Fry

Dear Brother Huggins:

Enclosed find draft for $25.00 to apply on the linotype fund. We are anxious to keep The Restitution alive, for it would be sad indeed, to know it did not have friends enough to support it. We hope others will respond with pledges or cash, that it will soon be paid for. When I mentioned this to the Doctor he said, "Why just send cash," and promptly wrote out a draft, for he too watches for the weekly visits of Our Dear Old Paper.

You can say this is from friends, or if you think best, publish our names, for it comes freely and willingly.

Sincerely,

From J. W. Campbell

Editor of The Restitution—Dear Brother in Christ:

While I am not a subscriber of your paper, I am a reader of it; I get it from my mother. I am a member of the Brethren, or what is called the Dunkard Church. I am a firm believer in your doctrine except baptism, and I am earnestly seeking all the light on that subject possible, hence this letter. Can you or some of the able writers of your paper trace the backward action of immersion before the Reformation, A. D. 1517? Also please explain what Judson says on the action in his "History," page 112. Also why do the Greeks use trine immersion if single immersion is what is taught by the commission. It seems to me if this command was given in the Greek tongue, they ought to understand the meaning of their own language better than we. Also is there any church with any claim to antiquity that did not at some time practice trine immersion.

Then if possible please trace single immersion beyond the middle of the fourth century. Was Eunomius the father of the practice of single immersion, or can you trace it before his time? Was single immersion generally accepted as Christian baptism before the Council of Toledo, which met some time after it is claimed Eunomius introduced single immersion a Christian baptism.

Now dear brother, I am not asking these questions for argument's sake, but am seeking all the light possible on the subject. I have done the best I can to make these questions plain; and if you or some of the writers of your paper will please answer them through the paper, you will oblige one who is truly seeking the light. Hoping to see something on this subject in your paper, I remain yours for Christ,

(Above questions are answered in this issue in an article entitled "The True Nature of Baptism." This article will be concluded next week.—Editor.)

From Mrs. M. F. Randolph

Dear Editor "The Restitution:" I wish you would explain in your paper just what is meant by "Josephism" and "Josephite." I have seen it mentioned several times in The Restitution, and do not understand it. I am not a member of the church, but enjoy reading The Restitution, even though I do not agree with all things published therein. Respectfully Yours.

(Mrs. Randolph is one of our new subscribers, and we are glad she enjoys The Restitution, although she cannot assent to all its teachings. "Josephism" and "Josephite," two terms frequently used which she does not understand, refer to individuals among us who are leavened with Unitarianism, and who in turn tried to leaven the Church of God with the same heresy, but we refused to be leavened. They teach that Joseph was the father of Jesus in the literal sense, and deny the inspiration of the scriptures. They deny the sacrificial death of Christ, and are in agreement with Unitarians in all other essential points. We give them a wide berth.—Editor.)

From Brother J. E. Hammond

To the Editor of The Restitution and those rooted and grounded in the Faith:

I have learned to look forward to the coming of The Restitution each week as I would for a letter from a near friend. Besides the light of truth it upholds, the many letters contributed by those scattered abroad, give an inspiration to press on and not take our hand from the plow. Let us thank God that the light of truth separates us from the great sea of darkness and a world of mythical worship. The nearer we get to truth and God the less we think of Platonic theories and the doctrines of men which make void the word of God. When we forget self, popularity, desire for worldly wealth and seek for truth, the nearer we get to the Isle of Patmos, and behold the Kingdom age of the restitution of all things foretold by the prophets.

I'm glad we have in Nebraska such a defender of God's word as our worthy Bro. Almus Adams. I had the privileeg of attending Bro. Adams' class at the Y. M. C. A. building in Omaha this spring. Had he been willing to sidertcak the true gospel for fables and preach to suit the people, he might have had some of the Billy Sunday popularity and a fat pocketbook. Prominent ministers of the city used every influence to keep people away from the class, and finally succeeded in having the class shut out of the building. As Paul was cast out of the city after healing the cripple of Lystra, stoned and left for dead, but arose by the help of God and went on his way proclaiming the gospel, so our brother is undaunted, having been accustomed to such treatment for years. As in the days of Jeremiah when 450 prophets of Baal were pitted against one true prophet of the living God, so Brother Adams is confronted by about that number of false teachers in Omaha. But the woodman's ax is slowly doing its work in the forest, and the chisel in the quarry. and God's people are being fitted for his Kingdom.

Brothers and sisters, we know today, more than ever before, that government under man is a failure, and our hearts yearn for the return of the rightful heir to the throne of David when righteousness shall go forth from Zion and fill the earth as the waters cover the sea. Until that great day is here may our patience and zeal not fail us, but stand firm for the truth.

Your Brother, waiting for the Kingdom.

From Brother T. O. Myers

Dear Restitution: Enclosed please find one dollar and fifty cents for which send the Restitution to David Chaney. He is an aged man of 78 years. and has confessed he never knew God's plan of salvation till lately. He says he wants more truth, and is ready to be baptized in the one name.

I will express a few of my thoughts in words, and if they are worthy of appearance in The Restitution, let them appear. Mrs. Myers and myself are the only ones of the faith here in this "short grass country," as it is called. We read Bibles of different versions and The Restitution, and one or two other papers, for Jesus said "When the Son of Man comes, will he find faith on the earth?"

Listen to a parable of our Master: "A certain man of noble birth went into a distant country to procure for himself royalty, and to return. And he called ten of his servants and gave ten pounds, and said to them, Trade till I come. But as his citizens hated him, and sent an embassy after him, saying, "We are not willing for this man to reign over us." And it occurred at his return, having received the royalty, he ordered those servants to be called to him, to whom he gave the silver, that he might know what they had gained by traffic (Diaglott, Luke 19:12-27).

Our Savior here is comparing the coming Kingdom to Archelaros, who was respected by his citizens. See Josephus on Archelaws; notice the great gain by trading of the first servant (verse 16); also the good trading qualities of the second (verse 18). The other gained nothing, not even so much as interest (verse 23). "Out of their own mouth will I judge thee" (verse 22). He lost that which the man of noble birth gave him, and it was given to him who had ten minas (verse 24).

Our Savior also says that to every one who has, more shall be given, and from him who has not, even what he has shall be taken away (verse 26). "But those enemies of mine who were not willing that I should reign over them, bring them hither." What for? "Slaughter them in my presence." Archelaws did this very thing to those who were adverse to him, after his father delivered him royalty. So let us watch for this Man of Noble Birth to return. Brothers and sisters, let us take this home to ourselves, and not say: "There is a man just over the fence that this just suits;" but let us trade, because the Lord is not slack concerning his promise, but the day will come as a thief in the night. What day? Let Paul tell us (Act 17:31; Rom. 2:16). Why, the day of judgment, of course. What will we be judged by? That man's words of noble birth (John 12:48). Jesus said he would return and reign with royalty, and at his return he will render us a crown of righteousness, providing we maintain a good contest, finish the race and guard the faith (2 Tim. 4:7-8). Age lasting destruction if we fail in duty (2 Thess 2:9). Destruction would be an awful reward for me if I thought it would be my portion. The man of noble birth says every branch in me that beareth not fruit by "trading," "he (God) taketh away."

Your Brother in the one Faith.

There is no policy like politeness; and a good manner is the best thing in the world, either to get a good name, or to supply the want of it.

Remarks

The month of April was a busy one. As previously reported, we had taken a class at the Y. M. C. A. by request. We met on Monday and Thursday evenings. Wednesday we met with the Brethren at Avery, making three nights in the week. We were teaching and odd evenings we would run up to Kennard or Blair. As a result we met April 30 and included into the family of God, 14: two young ladies from Blair, eight from Avery, and four of my class at the Y. M. C. A. It was a great day of rejoicing. Joy and happiness seemed to be depicted on every face, not only the brethren that looked on who had previously obeyed, but the candidates all seemed so happy. As they sat there all in a row they seemed anxious for their turn to come. A more intelligent lot of people would be hard to find to accept the truth all at once. Brother Leather, one of my class at the Y. M. C. A., who has been located here since last September, has now gone to his home in Brooklyn, N. Y. He belonged to the Baptist Church, but had the courage to walk out and take a stand for the truth. He studied hard and came to my home and took private lessons. We recommend him to the household of faith at Brooklyn. Brother Bray had been brought up in a Methodist home. He holds an important position with the U. P. railroad—a young man of splendid worth. His estimable wife is a music teacher, and will be a great help to the church and is calculated to adorn it with her presence and worth.

Brother and Sister Harper had only recently united with the Presbyterian Church, but saw their mistake and with the courage born of the truth, made the good confession before men. One only has to visit the home of Brother and Sister Harper and enjoy their hospitality, to esteem them highly. Sister Larson was a Lutheran, a teacher in the school at Avery, where we held our meeting. A young lady more than ordinarily bright, loved by all for her Christian quality. Another splendid acquisition to the body of Christ. Brother Sailing had become interested in Russellism, but saw the many errors of that system, and boldly stood for the truth. His wife had been immersed before, but gladly yielded obedience to the truth. This old couple in the decline of life made sure their future. And our next meeting is to be at their home.

Brother and Sister Hayden belonged to the First Christian Church, a very large and popular body. Don't you think it showed marked interest to leave a place like that and join with a people who have no certain dwelling place? Brother Hayden has learned very fast and talks like an old believer. They "hit the trail" when Sunday was here, but found they were on the wrong trail. Lucile DeCamp is the daughter of Sister Flora DeCamp, whom I baptized when Lucile was a little girl. She is now a member of the high school of [illegible], a young lady of splendid demeanor. Sister Gertrude Johns, is the daughter of Brother Arthur Johns, and a niece of Sister Carrie Free so well known. Sister Johns is also in high school, she and Lucile being constant companions. Gertrude is a very quiet girl, but will have her influence by a commanding presence. So the work cannot help receiving an impetus by these additions. All pray for them that they may continue faithful. Sister Hammond, the estimable wife of Brother John Hammond, who got us to go to Avery, was unable to be baptized, but we trust the Lord will keep her in health till she can become obedient to the faith.

Your Brother in the work,

EDITOR'S COMMENTS

the churches he expressed his "decision" of either their good or ill standing in his sight. The advocacy of Christ, his inspection, decision, account taking, the determination of the Judge—all save the execution of the judgment, called "the revelation of the righteous judgment of God" (Rom. 2:5) precedes the second coming of Christ. And this "revelation" of judgment at his coming can only be a rendition of a "decision" he has already formed.

DAUGHTERS OF GOD

What a glorious position we hold, dear sisters, if we are truly daughters of the living God! What peace of mind it gives us when we are trying our very best to please him in keeping as near as we can in the footsteps of his dear Son, our elder Brother. Sometimes the way seems long, and we find ourselves a long way behind, and we almost lose sight of our Master. If it was not for his footprints he has left behind we would find it very difficult in keeping on the narrow path; and if by carelessness, not looking where we are going, we miss our way and get on the broad road, we then, with penitent hearts, cry out to our Father in earnest prayer; for we know that he is full of compassion, for he has told us he will never leave us, nor forsake us. So once again we retrace our steps and through the pleadings of his dear Son, on our behalf, our Heavenly Father puts forth his loving hand and guides on the narrow path again.

Once more our hearts rejoice as we go on our journey. This time we look well to our feet that they turn neither to the right nor to the left but straight ahead. As daughters of the living God we find the broad road is no place for us, for there we find our sisters in the flesh, dressed in the heights of fashion, very pleasing to the eye, but their thoughts are as far from God as the earth is from the sun. To the world they appear right: they go to church on Sunday and, of course, they must have pleasure so that life is not so monotonous, so they have their card parties and their dance halls, and all such things; but alas, when trouble overtakes them, they find no comfort, for they have not put their trust in the living God. They do not even know what God requires of them: they have not time to read his word; their time is all taken up with the things of this life. If death robs them of their loved ones, they find no hope, no consolation, and on they go down the broad road that leadeth to destruction. We too, dear sisters, each have our troubles at different times, but we expect them while we are in this mortal state. Oh, how different when in Christ, when trouble comes. Our Father has said, "Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me" (Psalms 50:15). How happy are we although sometimes sorrowing when we can say from our hearts, "The Lord is my strength and my shield: my heart trusted in him and I am helped, therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth, and with my song will I praise him" (Psalms 28:7).

What beautiful words these are, and we know that they belong to us as long as we keep in the narrow way. "In all thy ways acknowledge the Lord, and he will direct thy path." "Draw near to me," our Father says, "and I will draw near to you." If we can let such thoughts as these dwell in our hearts, how pure our conversation will be. We shall not find time for slandering one another, but like our motto, we must not even think ill of one another. Evil thoughts flash through our minds like telegraphy before we are aware, but we must banish them as quickly as they come. Our Father knows our thoughts, and he knows that we are trying to overcome this weakness. Christ understands, for he was tempted the same as we are, and he overcame all these obstacles and came off conqueror. Oh that we may always be trying to imitate Christ, that our Heavenly Father may see the likeness of his dear Son reflected in us! I am sure the prayer of every one of us is that we may be found in Christ when he comes.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-53); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17) and belief in the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 5.18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31). PULPIT ECHOES—SAVING THE LOST

The excellent addresses given by our pastor, Bro. R. G. Huggins, every Sunday morning and evening, the writer thinks should have a larger audience. To attain this object he desires to use the columns of The Restitution, as often as it will be found convenient, to bring to the attention of its readers an intelligent synopsis of several of these discourses from time time to time, reporting them under the above caption, viz., "Pulpit Echoes."

Peter exhorts the church to "super-add to their faith, virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness." The word "godliness' really means Godlikeness, or being in disposition and character like God.

The question arises, How can we be like God? Well, in answer to our question we suggest that first we must know a person before we can understand or love him. Jesus said, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." How can we know God? We know the fathers of our country by their biographies: their life and character is revealed to us, though many of them have lain in the silence of the grave a century or more. We love them and revere their memory proportionately to our knowledge of their biography.

We know and love God in an exact ratio to our knowledge and understanding of the revelation he has given us of himself, revealed in the Bible, to us believed and revered as the word of the living God. "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake, moved by the holy spirit" (2 Pet. 1:21). "Yet many years didst thou forbear them, and testified against them by the spirit in thy prophets; yet would they not give ear" (Neh. 9:30).

The Bible, then, is a revelation of God's character, his disposition, his purposes, concerning the past, present and future of the human race.

First, we notice God's remarkable solicitude for mankind.

The scriptures abound with declartions that "God is our Savior." Notice David's appeal to his people in Psa. 106:21: "They forgot God their Savior, which had done great things in Egypt." Read Isa. 43:3-11; 45:21, 22.

Here is a wonderful pen picture giving a description of God. Observe how the prophet lays emphasis upon this fact, that it is God who is the Savior, none other. "I, the Lord, and beside me there is no Savior." "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else." If, as Trinitarians teach, Jesus Christ personally pre-existed co-equal with the Father and the Holy Spirit, God alone could not be, as he declares he is, alone the Savior, and none other.

In Luke 1:47 Mary rejoiced in "God my Savior." In 1 Tim. 1:1 Paul said that he was an apostle by the commandment of God our Savior. In 1 Tim. 2:3 the same thought is expressed. This designation of God as the Savior of men is continued in Titus 1:3; 2:10; 3:4; and Jude 25, "To the only wise God, our Savior."

But God, "the only Savior," in his marvelous beneficence, has appointed others to share with him in the work of saving the lost.

The one upon whom God has bestowed before all others this high honor is his own beloved Son, Jesus of Nazareth. In Isa. 43:11 and Hosea 13:4 God reiterates that he alone is the Savior; but when we read Matt. 1:21, 23, we find that the being God delights to call his Son, he instructs Joseph to call his name Emmanuel, which, being interpreted, is "God with us."

Now we see God, the only Savior, being manifested in his only begotten Son. The shepherds are informed by the angelic host that "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:11). While God still retains the honor and glory of being "the only Savior," to accomplish his wise purpose in saving men he appoints his well beloved Son as the instrumentality. Hence then "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life; for God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved" (John 3:16, 17).

After Christ's death, burial and resurrection we read that "Him hath God exalteth with his right hand to be a Prince and Savior, for to give repentance to Israel and forgiveness of sins" (Acts 5:31). Paul testified to the rulers of the synagogue the same glad tidings that of David's seed "hath God, according to his promise, raised unto Israel a Savior, Jesus" (Acts 13:2). In Eph. 5:23 Paul elaborates this and shows how it is done: "For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church; and he is the Savior of the body." John still goes further than this and declares that "we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Savior of the world" (1 John 4:14).

Another thought which may startle some: God permits us to save our own selves and also assist in saving others.

Acts 2:40, speaking of Peter on the Day of Pentecost, says: "And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation." Paul himself in Rom. 11:14 speaks of himself saving some. In 1 Cor. 1:21 he says some are saved by the foolishness of preaching. Again, in 1 Cor. 9, he declares that to save some he was willing to become all things to all men. In this same epistle he writes that the wife may save her own husband, or the husband his wife (1 Cor. 7:16).

Timothy was told to "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them, for in doing this you shall both save thyself and them that hear thee" (1 Tim. 4:16). James the practical, who believed in faith and works, told his hearers to "Lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls," and "That he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins" (James 1:21; 5:20). In Jude 23 we are exhorted to save others with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garments spotted by the flesh. And in the coming glorious kingdom Obadiah the prophet declares that there will be "Saviors"—notice the plural—"Saviors shall come up on Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau; and the kingdom shall be the Lord's" (Obad. 21).

How, then, can we successfully save the lost? Beloved, to accomplish this important task we must at all times pursue the plan observed by Christ and his apostles.

First, like Jesus, we must seek the lost. These must first be sought out. The parable of the lost sheep, as recorded in Luke 15:3-32, makes this clear. It was the lost always that was sought for. Sinners will not come to us; we must carry the gospel message to them.

Notice how Jesus dealt with Zaccharus, who was chief among the publicans, and although even his friends murmured because he was the guest of a man who was a sinner. Nevertheless, his heart being honest and sincere, Jesus declared: "This day is salvation come to this house, forsomuch as he also is a son of Abraham, for the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost" (Luke 19:1-10).

Secondly, having found the lost, to save them, they must be taught. What are we to teach them? Some say, "Stand up;" others, "Sign a card; that will save you." But what saith the scriptures? First, Paul declares we are to preach the gospel, for in 2 Cor. 4:3 he unequivocally declares: "But if our gospel be hid it is hid to them that are lost, in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." In Acts 26:18 we learn that we are "to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light and from the power of satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith." We must intelligently teach the things concerning the kingdom of God. This begets hope, and Paul says that "we are saved by hope" (Rom. 8:24). Only those who have a love of the truth will be saved (2 Thess. 2: 10). The doctrines of God revealed are essential to salvation (1 Tim. 4:16). The necessity of preaching (Rom. 10:13, 14). A faith that believes confidently in God (1 Pet. 1:2, 21; Heb. 11: 6; 10:38, 39).

But who are we to seek?

First, the heathens. Where shall we find them—in Africa? No; right here in Cleveland! Paul found them in cultured Athens (Acts 17:16-23). Paul says these men were really too religious—they worshiped every god in the universe recognized by the philosophers, both known and unknown. What they did not worship or know Paul declares was the true and only God, to them unknown: "God that made the world, and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands."

The next class we must seek as those who are lost are the wicket; Peter tells us who these are. It was his own kinsmen after the flesh. "Him (Jesus), being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God; ye have taken and wicked hands have crucified and slain" (Acts 2: 23).

The last class, the hardest of all to reach, are the religious professors. Two examples of this class are given us in Acts 8:10. Simon the sorcerer sought the truth only to be used for commercial purposes. Jesus, speaking of this class, said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, ye seek me not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves and were filled" (John 6: 26, 27).

Paul met this class in Thy-a-tira. They are an hopeless class and hard to convert. But among these religious professors are some honest of heart, and will gladly embrace the truth when intelligently presented; Lydia of the city of Tyatire (Acts 16:14), Cornelius and his company (Acts 10:22); the Ethiopian (Acts 8:27-38), and certain disciples at Ephasus (Acts 19:1-6). These all desired to know the truth. God knew that their hearts were honest, but notice they were sought out. Paul, Phillips, Peter, Apollos, Silas or Barnabas carried the message to them. We must be active, always abounding in the work of the Lord, sowing by the sde of all waters, ever alert to discover the listening ear, and then with patience teach the truth as "the truth is in Jesus," and God will bless your efforts, counting you among that class who in the kingdom shall shine as the stars for ever more (1 Cor. 15. 15; 58; Dan. 12:3).

GEO. B. ALLDRIDGE.

In the education of our children, we should never seek that for them which will dissipate religious sentiments, foster pride, and make them charming to the light minded and superficial; but only such an education as will make them efficient in advancing the kingdom of Christ and the glory of God.

Six things are requisite to create "a happy home." Integrity must be the architect and tidiness the upholsterer. It must be warmed by affection and lighted up with cheerfulness; and industry must be the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere and bringing in fresh salubrity day by day; while over all, as a protecting glory and canopy, nothing will suffice except the glory of God.

RE 2 CORINTHIANS V.

To many who have learned to see the beautiful scriptural harmony of what is called "conditional immortality," viz., the doctrine that immortality or eternal life is a gift bestowed upon conditions to members of the mortal, perishing race of mankind, some pasages in the New Testament still seem to lend support (at least by inference) to the doctrine of responsible personality apart from the body. Such passages, it is true, are few in number in comparison with the scores that emphatically teach otherwise; but "orthodoxy" (so called!) is strangely inconsistent in seeking an explanation for every difficult text, however inferential it may be, before it will acknowledge the countless plain statements regarding the nature of man and his destiny.

Among these passages 2 Cor. 5 is supposed to be conclusive evidence supporting their idea. Doctrine, however, can not be based on inferential language, because of the adaptability of such language to more than one point of view. Sound doctrine (or teaching) must necessarily be couched in language that admits of no ambiguity. It must be plain and comprehensible to all concerned. The passage under consideration can not honestly be said to be unambiguous. The only possible way, therefore, to obtain a right construction is by comparison with similar language previously used in a manner the meaning of which can not be mistaken. Fortunately this line of argument can find ample opportunity in the scriptures under consideration; but it seems to me the passage may correctly be classed among things hard to be understood (see 2 Pet. 3:6), and perhaps harder still to teach, unless both teacher and taught have the "word of God dwelling in them richly." A passage may be perfectly clear to one's own mind, but the difficulty is to make it clear to another who has not studied other themes which have direct bearing upon it.

All are, I think, agreed that the main lines of thought are clustered around the following terms, which are the hinges of the argument on either side:

"Our dwelling" (see Variorum Bible): "Tabernacle," or "bodily frame" (see R. V. margin); "building," "house," "clothed," unclothed," and "naked."

Orthodoxy maintains that the passage teaches that at death man as a "naked spirit" or "soul" (sometimes one, sometimes the other) leaves the body as a tenantless house. If it could be established by plain scriptural statement that man apart from his body was a "naked spirit," the orthodox interpretation of 2 Cor. 5 would have a strong presumptive evidence in its favor. Nowhere, however, does the Bible so speak, nor does it anywhere express language from which any such supposition may logically be deduced.

We admit, and the admission is in our favor, that God's word does not speak of man apart from his completed bodily organism, and we would affirm that the one correct solution of the matter can be obtained by ascertaining how and in what manner the word of God does so speak. All the terms above quoted may be found, with direct reference to the nature of man, elsewhere in the Bible, and not one of them contains any hint or suggestion of man as a spirit being apart from his bodily organization. One of the most frequent references to man in scripture is by the term "seed," and it is indisputable that this has reference to him both apart from his completed bodily frame (see Gen. 17:7, 8) and fully developed manhood (see Rom. 9:7, etc.). Man, according to the Bible, is emphatically the product of seed, but he can not strictly be called man apart from his body, for it is by that he is distinguished from the rest of the animate creation, even as they are from each other. It is here that the scripture's statements, "God giveth it a body," and "to every seed a body of its own," so beautifully fit in. To the thoughtful mind there is no clash in the Bible statements that the body is the man, and the numerous references to him as "seed;" rather the fact is emphasized that personality can not be manifested apart from bodily organization.

These remarks bring us to the consideration of 2 Cor. 5:3, where Paul says: "If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked." There have been various explanations of this pasage, none of which, so far as I am acquainted with them, meet the requirements of scriptural proof as fully as one might wish. The idea of separate conscious personality in the form of a "naked spirit" awaiting a resurrection body, and meantime performing bodily functions, is altogether incongruous, and the view that life is the "clothing" only partially answers the question. Paul in an earlier epistle, in his wonderful chapter relative to the resurrection of the dead, illustrates his remarks by reference to "seed." So vivid and didactic are his statements it seems more reasonable to believe they are fact and not figure, and to my mind there seems little question that he believed the very frequent use in the scripture of the term "seed" in relation to mankind was scientific truth. In that remarkable chapter we find the expression "bare (or naked) grain." Wonderful, marvelous, as that grain is, it can not perform its God-intended functions without a body, so "God giveth it a body as it pleased him, and to each seed a body of its own." Surely we can reasonably conclude that when Paul speaks (each time with reference to man) of "bare grain" and "being found naked," that his ideas are analogous, so that in each case he means without body. Our Savior's remarks also throw light on the passage we are considering. "If God so clothe the grass of the field." God made every seed to bring forth after its kind, and clothed each with a body of its own. Few people would go so far as to say because God clothed the lily seed with a body of its own it therefore had separate existence as a lily apart from its body—the complete plant! Merely as a seed the lily did not exist, and merely as a seed the man does not exist.

The phrase, "We know that if the earthly house of our tabernacle (R. V., bodily frame) be dissolved, we have a building from God, an house not made with hands," etc., is taken as proof that man is a tenant inhabiting a house, of which he and his actions are entirely independent. The fact is Paul does not use the terms "dwelling" or "house" in that sense, and this is proved by his speedy change of metaphor from house to clothing, and his use of the term "bodily frame" is doubtless like most of his illustrations drawn from the Old Testament scriptures, where King David says: "He knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust." The word "building" has also its preceeding serpture, for in Genesis 2:22 (see R. V. margin) we get the expression "builded he a woman," and it is well to note that it refers to the woman and not something to put her into. And what can more aptly describe the growth of seed into manhood or womanhood than that term "building." Truly we are fearfully and wonderfully made, and "fitly framed together." Our condition now is a fleshly condition and is temporary. Our future condition of existence will be houselike, permanent, a building eternal. Now we are flesh and blood (see Gen. 6:3; "he also is flesh" Gen. 7:15; Psa. 78.39; 103:1416;; Gen. 3:19; Ecc. 12:7). Then he shall be like unto the angels, and can not die any more. If it is only the house that the man lives in that dies, and not the man, how utterly absurd and meaningless becomes the words of our Saviour just quoted. R. H. JUDD.

"A SISTER" ON DANCING

I have read very carefully every article "Dedicated to A Sister," and wrote in answer to each, but did not send in any of my replies till all had finished. I answered the first articles with the following:

I am very much puzzled indeed. I see some light on the playing for dances, but I am still puzzled. I blame no one for anything written, and appreciate the interest shown and the help given; but I consider one-half of the articles written are overdrawn. And surely you will bear with me when I tell you where. Of course, I am a new member of the Church of God,, and perhaps I am weak in many ways, but as my ability to understand is all I have, here goes.

One brother says our sister must admit that the dancing influence is entirely wrong on the young. Perhaps he is right. I have been shielded from going very far into these things by church training, for I was very extreme, even refusing to play any but sacred music when taking lessons. Yes, I was a staunch Methodist, and I am just as fearful of going to one extreme as the other now; but the brother is entirely wrong when he claimed that I knew it. for had I known for sure I would not write this. He added further that the ball room, with its sensual music and odors, its low-cut and extravagant gowns. These things I have never seen in a dance for I furnish the music; I noticed no odors. I know every girl there; I never saw a low-neck dress there. The brother in question did not describe the place where I play for the dance. This is the first public ball I ever played in, and I decided I could do for these reasons: It is a western dance hall, no bar in connection, regular country style dances.

Now the other side comes to me. Might not my example lead others to go further and harm them, even if it doesn't me? I looked also at hundreds of people I have known all my life who dance, and were never hurt by it. Yes, it is true that most of our ministers claim that dancing is sinful; it is also true that some claim that to be temperate in all things is the way.

Now two of the brethren brought Job 21:2-24 to prove dancing wrong. I can not understand this to mean that, for this reason: Job's friends in the chapter before tell him of all the bad luck that shall come to the wicked, but Job answered and told them they are lucky, not unlucky; and he goes on to give a list of why and how. "Mark me, and be astonished,' etc. Then he tells why: Their houses are safe from fear; God doesn't send the rod upon them, their children are happy, they dance; their cattle even do well, etc. Is it sinful for their cows to calve? Now anyone reading that chapter will readily see that the term "dance" is not used in that chapter to prove either the right or wrong of it, any more than to play on the timberalss or organs would be sinful.

Another sister says we are to be of one mind; that we can not all decide these things for ourselves. There I can not agree. I must decide these things on some reason, and for myself. I followed other leaders too long in my life. My Bible should give me light to follow. I pray I may not make a mistake, but with the evidence seen around me, with the brethren's help I may be able to find the light I seek on this subject. I can not follow others, because among the brethren I know they all draw the line at a different place. I mean on such subjects as these. For example, one brother said dancing at home or among our own people is all right; that playing cards is like other games, all right in its place; also shows and moving picture shows; while others put them on a footing with the dance. One sister says: "Would our Lord go to the moving picture shows for his people?" I would not like to make myself judge of anyone.

Next comes "A Sister's" funeral sermon. First, Bro. Huggins says A Sister is ashamed of the dance herself when she gets down to dealing with her own heart. Let me say if I were ashamed that I had played for a dance why did I write to the paper? Someone has said you did withhold your name. I was advised to do so, but my name will be signed at the close of this piece. He adds: "When the skies are cloudless and you are in health it is all right, but in sickness she would decide differently." Bro. Huggins is not acquainted with the facts enough to judge, for I am not in good health. I neither dance, nor enjoy it. I mingle with the worldly dancing crowds only in a business way, the same as others mingle with them in their work.

And next, every dance I play for I suffer acute pain after the first hour or two. For years I have suffered with stomach trouble, and have a pain in my breast and shoulder when I play that is almost unbearable. I have my husband undress me after playing, I am so nearly exhausted. Now I don't write this for pity; not at all. But when a brother accuses me of not knowing my own heart and wasting my time in pleasure I object; it hurts, for it is not true. No one could preach a funeral sermon like that in the community where I live and not be told he was mistaken. They would say we have invited her time and time again, and she refused to go to any party only when she went to work, and was paid for it. She always looked so tired that dozens would notice it and speak about it. And it was an understood fact that it was looked upon as a purely business proposition by them.

Now I am not ashamed to have it on my tombstone that I was a musician, taught music, played for dancing and everything that I considered respectable. Of course my example may do wrong. I pray not, but I never asked the question. Is there wrong in some dance places? The city dance halls with the bars and the low-necks—I could not enter their door. I could not go to even our home dance hall and buy a ticket or waste my time there; but I felt as if I was doing no wrong as a musician to play there, for the people that attend them are mostly the churchgoing people of the community —good people or bad I know not.

Next, Bro. Huggins' article on principles, including their accessories. I have seen no more foundation for reason against the dance in this than anything else given; for it is true, as stated. but there are extreme points to be decided in this too. For example, if my playing for a dance is an accessory to the principal, the brother who says we can dance in moderation is mistaken also; the the brother who approves of cards is wrong, for cards are surely one of the direct accessories to gambling, as it is a game most used in houses of sin; yet I know sisters and brothers who play at home. Yes, it is true the accessory is included in the principle, but there is a place to draw the line, and for the benefit of any young person on reading these lines let me say: Don't decide dancing is right from reading my writings, as I don't say so myself. I simply can not find the exact place to draw the line as yet.

GREETINGS FROM CLEVELAND'S YOUNG PEOPLE

God uses the best material available to accomplish his ends. To that young man Abram, when he was called to go out from his father's country, a promise was made that was repeated and handed down to Isaac and Jacob, namely, the blessedness of a nation and seed after them. Their history has been one of toil and travel, in lands not their own and among people hostile to their God of love. Only by faith and such faith were they able to see God's plan of salvation and the Lord's Day in the future. No written records had they, only themselves making the history of the beginners of God's chosen race.

Everywhere they went they erected altars to God. The travelers passing by that same way could see the material manifestation of faith and obedience, and, most of all, great monuments of thanksgiving.

In old age these progenitors were firm defenders and blessings of the promises of God. Although Abraham became so stricken that he had to be had to helped to be able to sit up at all; although Isaac was blinded; although Jacob, or Israel, walked lame through life, they attained to the goal, and through them we are adopted and received into the household of God.

When we read of God's nobility, such as these, and wish we could do likewise, and then let daily cares and duties draw us away from our God, let us stop and consider that to accomplish anything we must get more than a wishbone in our backs. Let us never forget that in God's ocean of mercy every drop is permitted to rise and glitter on the highest crest of every wave that rolls.

BAPTISM

Jennie A. Canaan was baptized at the Plymouth baptistry at 9:30 a. m. May 28, 1916, and was received into the church at the morning service. Sister Canaan is the daughter of Bro. Anderson, of Inwood, Ind., and has been taught the truth in her home life. May she find a fruitful field for the exercise of her powers in the church, and may the church give her that encouragement needed to the end that the work of this age be accomplished and the Savior find faith on the earth when he comes. May there come to her enough of the chastisements of the Father to perfect and fit her for a place in that kingdom where righteousness dwells. D. E. VAN VACTOR.

Solitude is the nurse of all that is good within us. The world stains what it touches, and the more we withdraw from it the better we are.

EDITORIAL

On June 6, 1916, Bro. Louis G. Bartlett fell asleep in Jesus at the advanced age of 88 years. His funeral was held on June 8th, after which he was committed to the dust to rest until his Lord comes who says: "Because I live, ye shall live also." The ruptures of death will then be healed and sad "goodbyes" will be one of the former "things" forever passed away.

We are sorry to say that at this writing Bro. Huggins is confined to his bed with the measles, but is doing nicely. We hope that he will be able to resume his duties in a week or two.

Bro. John Fiske, Jr., an able defender of the truth, writes: "The Restitution grows more and more able with each issue. Long may it live!"

June 4th we had the pleasure of having two visitors sit down with us at the Lord's table, namely, Bro. R. F. Smith, of Monroeville, O., and Bro. H. S. Lasher, of Detroit, Mich. Bro. Lasher is recently from Omaha, Neb., but his home is in Brooklyn, N. Y. For the present he is living in Detroit, and came over to see us and spend a Sunday with the brethren. He is a "brand from the burning" which Bro. Adams plucked out of the fire in his Y. M. C. A. work last winter in Omaha. There was a double enjoyment in Bro. Lasher's visit—the pleasure of meeting a new brother and also the joy of hearing from him first-hand about the work of our dear brother and faithful fellow-laborer, Bro. Adams. It seems that about the time our brother had impregnated some with the leaven of truth at the Y. M. C. A., like the Jews of old, the leaders of this "Christian organization" agreed among themselves that Christianity must not be preached in their building, therefore they put Bro. Adams out of the synagogue (John 9:22). Ere long the Lord whom the world of false religion rejected, scorned and killed in the day of his first coming will come again and "put down the mighty from their seats and exalt them of low degree. He will fill the hungry with good things, and the rich he will send empty away" (Luke 1:52, 53). Brethren, we can afford to wait patiently for our exaltation and vindication.

"TOTAL DEPRAVITY"

While "total depravity" is not a scriptural term, still it may and does contain a scriptural thought if properly understood. We believe in moral depravity, but not a depravity of the faculties. The disposition, the will and the heart are depraved, and they lead a man to make a wrong use of his faculties. This discrimination is important, for while man is depraved and brutalized in the extreme, if not "totally," still he is left with capabilities, his intelligence, his conscience, his active powers, his imperishable duties, all coeval with his existence, entering into the very definition of his being. No depths of moral depravity can annihilate man's rights and responsibilities. Restraints may and ought to be thrown around man. Punishments may justly be inflicted upon him. Particular privileges may be beyond his reach. He has rights, accountabilty and responsibility, notwithstanding.

The darkest picture inspiration has ever drawn of human depravity and degradation is found in Rom. 1st chapter. Call it "total" if you will, still the apostle leaves man here capable of moral discrimination and moral action. Filed with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, etc. Notice, now, that in the very face of these representations the apostle still insists upon man's capabilities, powers, perceptions and responsibilities as "holding the truth in unrighteousness." "Because that which may be known of God has been shown to them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse, because that when they knew God they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish hearts were darkened."

Complex this picture certainly is, but there is nothing contradictory in it. The truth fully recognizes the necessity of moral capacities, powers and perceptions in order to have moral accountability in man. Were it not true that the people whom Paul describes as elevated in the scale of intelligence, as he represents them to be, the other part of his picture could not have been according to truth. Had they known less of the Godhead they could not have sunk so low in the depths of moral pollution and depravity. The more they know of God the more depraved and degraded they were capabe of becoming. If they had been less intelligent they would have been less guilty; and if they had been without any moral perceptions and capabilities they would have had "excuse" for their state of iniquity. "If ye were blind," said the Savior, "ye should have had no sin; but now ye say, We see, therefore, your sin remains." Instead of it being true, as so often misrepresented, that moral depravity (which is only another name for sin) detracts from blameworthiness, it is the only thing of which guilt can be predicated. Some dream that deep-seated moral depravity destroys man's capacities, and so takes away his moral responsibilities and rights. Just the reverse of this is the truth: The deepest degrees of moral derpavity can not exist without corresponding capacities and large measures of knowledge. The capacities and intelligence of any man must furnish the measure either of his virtues or his vices. Capacities and intelligence can not be separated from moral responsibilities, nor such responsibilties from rights.

"FROM THE BEGINNING"

In 2 Thess. 2:13, 14, Paul says the saints to whom he was writing had been chosen to salvation "through the sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth," and that God had chosen them from "the beginning." What beginning is meant?—Inquirer.

Editor's Reply

In the Bible several beginnings are spoken of, and we must use care and not confound them. There is—

1. The beginning of creation (Gen. 1:1; Matt. 19:4).

2. The beginning of the gospel as preached by the apostles (Luke 24:47; Acts 11:15).

3. The beginning of the new creation, of which Christ is the first (Col. 1:18; Rev. 3:14).

4. And the beginning of the new life for believers, which is entered into at their conversion (2 Pet. 2:20; Jno. 15:27; 1 Jno. 2:7, 24; 2 Jno. 5). Concerning this beginning the apostle writes: "I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment which ye have had from the beginning. The old commandment is the Word which ye have heard from the beginning" (1 Jno. 2:7). That they should love one another was "the message" they had "heard from the beginning" (3:11). What beginnig is here referred to? Certainly not the beginning of eternity, for eternity had no beginning. Surely no reference is made to the beginning of the world, the beginning of time, or to any period prior to their birth, for this they "heard from the beginning." Nor can it mean the beginning of the gospel proclamation at Jerusalem, for it is not probable they heard the gospel till years subsequent to Pentecost. It was when they began a new life in Christ; when they put Christ on in baptism, and rose to walk in "newness of life" (Rom. 6:4); it was then and in this way they became "new creatures" (2 Cor. 5:17), began another life, and were made members of the new creation, of which Christ is the "first" (Rev. 1:17). From this beginning they had "heard" the gospel "message"—had the "old commandment"—and knew God. And to this "beginning" (2 Pet. 2:20) Paul refers in 2 Thess. 2:13. When Paul said persons were saved "through faith" (Eph. 2:8) he did not teach that people were saved before they had faith. The president, for instance, is elected through the votes of the people; but he is not elected till he receives their votes. So when Paul says people were chosen to salvation "through sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth" he certainly did not mean they were chosen in eternity or before time began, but at the time they believed the truth, and were sanctified by the spirit. As God elects and chooses people to salvation "through sanctification of the spirit and belief of the truth," it is impossible that the election can antedate the "belief of the truth" through which it is effected. When we believe the truth we are "begotten" (Jas. 1:18) by it; and when we obey the truth we are sanctified (Jno. 17:17) by it, and we become the "elect of God," "new creatures," with a new life. To this "beginning" the Apostle Paul obviously reffrs in writing to the brethren in Thessalonica.

CIVIL VERSUS DESPOTIC POWER

Dear Bro. Huggins: Will you please give an explanation of Rom. 13:1: "Let every soul be subject to the higher powers; for there is no power but of God. The powers that be are ordained of God."—Mrs. W. L. Robbins.

Editor's Reply

At the time Paul penned these words the civil power was in the hands of idolaters and polytheists, and they were of course hostile to Christianity. The Jews had been taught from time immemorial to consider themselves entitled to preeminence above all other nations of the earth. They looked down with scorn and hatred upon all foreign nations, and particularly upon the Romans. Rome's domination over them was insufferable. They fortified themselves in this opinion by an appeal to Deut. 17:15: "Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee whom the Lord thy God shall choose, from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee; thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, who is not thy brother." This injunction by Moses led the Israelites to think that willing subjection to the Romans was disobedience to God. Nothing but the dread of immediate and summary punishment restrained them from rising against the Romans in Palestine; and even in other countries where they were numerous they often made unseemly tumult whenever occasion and opportunity offered.

Such was the civil status of things when Paul wrote the book of Romans. Now when individual Jews passed out of the Jewish community into the Church of God they could not, or at least they did not, divest themselves at once of these feelings and views concerning the Romans and other nations. It is easy to see that in civil conditions like these there was great danger that private believers, instigated by their own particular racial views and hatred of idolatry, combined with the manifest duty of sometimes defying the civil power, were calculated to go too far in justifying a principle of insubordination to the civil power. Paul evidently felt deeply on the subject, for it was compassed about with many difficulties. Poise and balance depended upon some distinct discriminations in ethics. On the one hand, it was clear that in some cases life was to be sacrificed rather than to obey the civil power; the apostle himself was a most eminent pattern of high and holy independence in cases of this nature. On the other hand, private individuals, with their racial prejudices and hatred of heathenism, might greatly abuse the liberty of believers, and extend it to things to which the truth did not allow them to extend it.

Keeping in mind the political tension of the situation when Paul was writing, we can appreciate the wisdom of his words in Rom. 13:1, which may be translated as follows: "Let every soul be subject to the supreme magistracies. For there is no magistracy unless by divine permission; and the existing (magistrates) are of God's appointment." In these words the apostle designs to reconcile believers to the idea of civil obedience, on the ground that obeying the magistrate is in accordance to the commandment of God. All magistrates are by his permission; even when they are oppressive, the believer should regard and tolerate them (as he does other evils), as existing by Jehovah's permission, since the "powers that be are ordained of God." Paul wanted his brethren to bow submissively to the civil power, even in the hands of the hated Romans, in all cases except where obedience to them would be disobedience to God. He reasons that where the "powers" are despotic rebellion only leads to hazardous and bloody measures; it is better to suffer wrong than to excite tumult. Both Paul and Peter are clear on this (Titus 3:1; 1 Pet. 2:13, 17). But let not the advocates of despotic power urge subjection in cases where the gospel will not allow it, under the cover of the general expressions here used by the Apostle Paul (Acts 4:17-20).

Instead of Paul teaching the rights of despotic civil power in Rom. 13th chapter, and our unconditional subjection to such power, the seeds of democracy are sown by the apostle in this very scripture. The Declaration of Independence is simply an echo of this Pauline teaching. Bracton has said: "He is called a king for ruling righteously, and not because he reigns. Therefore he is a king when he governs with justice, but a tyrant when he oppresses the people committed to his charge." In almost the same words the Declaration of Independence abjures the authority of the British monarch: "A prince whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant is unfit to be the ruler of a free people." These words of Jefferson are but a paraphrase of Bracton's, and Bracton's are but his own construction and inference from Paul's language in Rom. 13. And yet in this enlightened twentieth century we occasionally hear Rom. 13 cited as containing the divine charter of despotic power. The "higer powers" to which "every soul" must be subject are assumed by such theorists to be any array of brute force that takes the name of civil government. No matter how notoriously criminal in its origin, unrighteous in its structure, and flagitious in its administraton. The "power," though a terror to good works, and the patron and the doer of "evil," is held to be the "ordinance of God," to which every soul must be "subject," on pain of everasting damnation! All the terms of Paul's description of "the ordinance of God" are reversed, yet it remains the "ordinance of God," and as such must be reverenced and obeyed!

COMMUNICATIONS

From Sister Quincy L. Carpenter

Dear Bro. Huggins:

Mother and I are sending you two dollars to help on the Linotype Fund. It is only a little bit, but the little bits will mount up to big bits after a while, and in that way the linotype can be paid for soon.

From Sister Ollie Bradley

Dear Restitution:

I enclose $1.50 to renew my subscription to The Restitution. I can not think of being deprived of its weekly visits. I see my label is marked for May, 1916. We like your stand on the dance question. We are commanded to shun the appearance of evil, and dancing surely has that appearance. I hope to be able to help on the Linotype Fund soon. Your sister in Christ.

From Susan A. Howard

Dear Restitution:

I saw in The Restitution of May 9th a letter from Bro. Alex D. Donaldson, in which he speaks of an editorial on dancing to "A Sister." Now, dear brothers, read your Bibles and pray to understand it, for I do not see but one place in the New Testament that says anything about dancing and that is in the 15th chapter of Luke. All through the New Testament it tells us to be earnest, sober and diligent, also to watch and pray. I do not think there can be much watching for the Lord in a dance hall; people there are too busy watching the music and the steps. I have attended dances myself, and I am quite ashamed of it now, for there is no good to be found in them. Do you think, dear brother, that after we become a child of God we can not do wrong and be condemned? I find I have to keep watching and praying in order to keep on the straight and narrow way. The Bible tells us to dress soberly, and I do not think that anyone with a family of children needs dancing as a recreation; if so, let them visit the poor, the widow and the fatherless. If I understand the scriptures the apostles did not do much else but preach the gospel. In Acts 6:4 it seems that they prayed and preached the word. Let us have love for everyone, and let us pray for them.

To "A Sister" I would say: Just go to God with it and pray for light on the will of God. He will give you light and understanding if his will is for or against dancing. I had a lady here this spring to take care of me when I was sick, and I asked her if I sent her The Restitution would she read it.

By the answers I received I thought she did not care to. In our talks she told me she could not go to dances and be a Christian. She did not believe anyone could be a Christian and go to the dance.

Love to all the brethren and sisters.

A CALL TO DUTY

We Must "Occupy" Till the Master Comes

Dear Restitution:

Thou hast visited perhaps more of the homes of true believers and followers of Jesus than any other publication except the Bible; thou hast been true to name; thou hast never lowered the standard of truth; thou hast stood by the truth to your own hurt; thy pages have never been open to the discussion of false doctrines.

To thee we take off our hats and bow our heads to one who is old and revered, a friend and companion of high worth. Your pages have by the watchful care of your directors been kept unsullied from error and have never been superincumbent on man's subscriptions, but in the trust of God. And now has your mission in the world ended, or has your darkest days ended, and your light that has been shed so long under trying circumstances to become more profuse? Dear old friend, you are still in the hands of the living God, and he can put it into the hearts of all true believers to come to the rescue, and not only that, but make enlargements; and if it is not done it will be an evidence that your mission is ended, or else your friends are lax and God can not use them. Dear brethren, we have a duty to perform right up to the day the Master comes, and we must sow whether we ever reap or not; man plants and then dies, and never gathers. Just so will many plans for the promulgation of truth be frustated by the coming of the Lord.

Now I am going to ask my readers a question: How much have you sacrificed for the spread of the gospel? (Preachers are not included in the question.) You have all given something for the spread of truth, but how much have you given that you thought you could not spare, but gave at a sacrifice? It is for you to answer. Suppose everyone should give now to the point, or even nearly to the point, of sacrifice—how long would it be till till the lonotype machine would be installed?

There is another reason why the treasury of the Lord is so empty, and that is, when a call comes for an emergency the man will perhaps send a dollar and that goes for all the family, no difference how many belong to the family. Now, I am going to suggest that every member send in what they can spare, no difference how little. Sacrifice to do it! And those who can, be more liberal. If everyone will do this the paper will be coming to us from its own office in a very short time. It is not the only good the weekly visits of The Restitution do us who believe, but many are led to the truth by its teaching.

Right here where I am writing from I saw a man's name on the list of subscribers, and wrote him; the result was a meeting was arranged, and he and all his family at home except one are in the body of Christ, besides others, and more to follow. Let us be alive to the needs of the hour. Let us be found at our post when Jesus comes. Can we say, "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do?"

Dear brethren, are you praying? Will the desires of our dear old mother in Israel ever be granted? I believe, Sister Wince, thou hast found favor with God. So read and meditate upon Job 6:8: "God will hear the upright." We all believe that to you is Job 29:14 applicable. May the Lord grant us our petition, and long live The Restitution and its faithful retinue!

ALMUS ADAMS.

IS SCRIPTURE PROPHECY BEING FULFILLED?

To the Editor of The Record:

In these strenuous times it is very interesting to search out and see if scripture prophecy has any bearing on current events, and if so what will be the ultimate outcome of the war now waging in Europe and Asia.

As an introduction read Rev. 16:12-17; Daniel 11:44, 45; Isaiah 60:9.

The river Euphrates no doubt is a symbol of the Turkish Empire. The evaporation of its waters signifies the decline and fall of Turkey. For a number of years and until about a century ago Turkey was the most extensive and powerful nation occupying territory which formerly constituted the Roman empire. Then commenced the pouring out of the sixth vial, and Turkey has been waning in power and losing territory ever since. Within the past decade this driying process has been very much accelerated, and it now looks as if the present war will completely wipe out Turkish authority, and her territory be divided among the various warring powers.

If the present war is the one spoken of inRev. 16:14, and connecting that with other scripture prophecy, the details may be somewhat as follows:

"Tidings out of the East and out of the North troubled him" (Daniel 11:40 would indicate "him" to be Turkey). Indian and Persia lie to the east. Russia is north. The Indo-English invasion toward Bagdad was a source of trouble. The Russian army through northern Persia driving west, and the Russian army approaching southward through Caucasia, gave great trouble and alarm and caused the Turks to use great fury in destroying. It is said fifty thousand Armenians in and around Ezerum were butchered, being defenseless. Despite some successes, the Turks have been pushed back south and southwest and westward. Russia's aim is Constantinople. When that city is further menaced by Russian success and progress along the border of the Black Sea the sultan will move his archives and capital, for it is written: "He shall plant the tabernacle of his palace between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain" (Dan. 11:45); that is, make Jerusalem his capital.

England, having control of the sea, will attack Turkey in her new capital, and, being victorious, Turkey will collapse and her provinces be divided among the several victors, for "yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him." Germany used Turkey as a catspaw to draw the allied forces from central Europe, but when in dire need of help Germany will abandon her to her fate. During the continuance of the war, or after peace has been made, the Jews, scattered among the nations, being undesirable citizens, to get away from persecution, will desire to return to their ancient land. England, having control of Palestine, will gladly welcome them, and the other nations will be just as glad to get rid of them. The prophet Isaiah (60:8, 9) testifies: "Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as doves to their windows? Surely the isles shall wait for them, and the ships of Tarshis (England) first to bring thy sons from afar, their silver and their gold with them."

When the Jews have been thus gathered, not only the poor and downtrodden, but also many of the wealthy and influential, and have settled in the land and prospered to the extent that they will be rich in silver and gold, and goods and cattle (Ezek. 38:12, 13).

In the meantime the conflicting interests of England and Russiai will have caused them to become estranged. Russia will declare war and proceed to invade Palestine, and will succeed to the extent of capturing and sacking the city of Jerusalem (Ezek. 38:1-17; Zech. 14:1, 2). Then will occur the great battle of Armageddon (Rev. 16.16, 17; Ezek. 38:18-39; 5; Zech. 14:3, 4, 5, 12-15). Five-sixths of that great host having been destroyed, the remainder will be driven north and recoup to continue the strife, but in vain, for the little stone kingdom will grow until it fills the whole earth, by subduing nation after nation to the righteous rule of Christ and the saints.

At some period of time between the enactment of the things recorded in Rev. 16:14 and the great Armageddon war of verse 17 will occur that stupendous event mentioned in verse 15: "Behold, I come as a thief," and also the fulfillment of the prophecy of I Thess. 4:14-17, the resurrection of the dead in Christ, and with the risen ones the righteous living will be transported to meet the Lord and appear before the judgment seat of Christ, and receive in body according to deserts, whether good or bad (2 Cor. 5:10). To the approved ones it will be said: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom" (Matt. 25:34). They shall be made kings and priests, and reign on the earth (Rev. 5:10). Then will "men be blessed in him, and all nations call him blessed, and the earth be filled with his glory. Amen." (Psa. 37).—S. T. Blessing, in Fort Worth Record.

MAY MEETING REPORT

The eleventh annual May meeting of the Church of God at Fonthill, Ont., held on Friday and Saturday evenings, and all day Sunday, May 26th, 27th and 28th, was well attended and greatly enjoyed by all. Bro. L. E. Conner spoke each evening and also on Sunday afternoon with his usual forcefulness of delivery, and was ably seconded by Bro. Austin at the Sunday morning service. The social meeting, held prior to the evening service, was a welcome opportunity for many friends to speak words of encouragement and exhortation. Among the out-of-town visitors were Dr. Mason, of [illegible], who read the lesson at the morning service, and Mr. Hogarth, of Norwich. Friends from Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Ransomville and Sanburn, N. Y., also attended. Some of the old familiar faces were missed at the gathering, but all are in hopes of meeting them on the evergreen shore at the coming of the Master.

The committee is to be complimented upon its work, which was excellent in every way. Friends and workers all agree the meetings were a great success and help.

Thanking you for your attention, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

ARTHUR GILBY, Sec'y.

OBITUARY

John H. Spindler was born September 4, 1901, died May 24, 1916, aged 14 years, 9 months and 20 days. A little less than a year ago the writer was holding meetings in this community, when "Johnnie," as all called him, expressed a desire to be baptized along with others; so on July 13, 1915, he put on Christ, and already his work is finished and he sleeps in Jesus. He had the name of being one of the best attendants at Bible readings, always paying strict attention to the lesson. What more could the sorrowing parents and sisters and brothers ask than that everyone had a good word for him. May the Lord comfort all that mourn, and let us not sorrow as others who have no hope. What a grand consolation to know if we are faithful we shall meet again soon under greater and better conditions!

Before leaving the house the writer gave a short talk from Prov. 20:11, then at the Meek Church we gave an extended talk to a large congregation from Job 14:4, showing the people that the question propounded by Job was not whether man really died or lived (in death), but if he died would he live again. We then showed that Jesus came and answered the question in the affirmative—that he died and rose again. He thus proved if a man died and was worthy he would live again. So we deposited the young brother in the Meek Cemetery to await the sound of the trumpet, when he will come forth to die no more. Farewell, dear brother, till that glorious day.

ALMUS ADAMS.

"And this is the will of him that sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day." Here the losing of nothing, and the raising up at the last day, are predicated of those the Father gives him; of course the rest are not raised up at the last day. If any one can prove that they, i. e. their bodies, will be raised after the last day, let them do it.—Geo. Storrs.

Events transpiring in the East show beyond doubt that the "times of the Gentiles" are about to expire.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852
A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF
The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17) and belief in the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:28), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31). CONSOLATION

"Now is our salvation nearer Than when we at first believed."
Now is Jesus to us dearer
Than when we his grace received.

He has promised to be with us,
Walk beside us to the end
If we ask him, wisdom give us
And the Comforter to send.

Wondrous scenes are just before us,
And men's hearts grow faint with fear,
And with fearful looking forward
As God's judgment day draws near.

Earthquake's shock and ocean's billows
Have swept thousands to their death,
Thousands have found earth-made pillows,
Withered by the cannon's breath.

Men cry peace, but can not find it.
Human efforts all are vain;
"Peace on earth, good will attendant,"
Will not come till Christ shall reign.

Earth restored to Eden's splendor,
All the scars of sin removed,
Then the Savior, loving, tender,
Will abide with his beloved.

RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD

A Reply to R. S. W.

"Howbeit that is not first—which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual" (1Cor. 15:46).

This great subject of neverfailing interest to the devout beleiver in Christianity, is of recent years much more to the front. Human knowledge is constantly being added to and extended. Science of yesterday is not the science of today, and while that which is fact remains, that which has been theory only has had to pass away. The same remark is equally applicable to the science of today. A critical observer, cannot fail to see that even the things commonly supposed to be beyond question, are much more cautiously believed than formerly, and much that we now hold to be true will require to be rewritten. How different the case with the Divine Revelation! For thousands of years it has stood unchanged and unchangable, awaiting in calm majesty the vindication of its statements; a striking illustration of the saying of Christ, "Whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken, but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder." We do well to fall on the impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture, and have some of our human ideas broken, rather than fallen upon by it, and be ground to powder.

I have before me an interesting and able article touching the resurrection of the dead, dealing especially with the phrase, "How are the dead raised, and with what body do they come?" It is pleasing to find others independently arriving at similar conclusions to our own, though not necessarily by the same rank. When this is so, we intuitively feel our position is strengthened and its truthfulness vindicated, beside which a bond of fellow-feeling is thereby exercised.

I heartily concur with R. S. W. in his repudiation of Swedenborgianism, and his strictures of the immortal soul theory as advocated by orthodoxy (so-called) on the ground that these systems found their teaching both by adding to, and taking from the word of God, and that they distort scripture by a misappropriation of terms. We need to be careful in the study of scripture, to be assured that our deductions are based on "the things which are revealed," and to be satisfied to go no further.

in some respects, it seems to me, our worthy friend has expressed ideas very approximate to orthodoxy. Take for instance the statement (page 100): "Similarly, a human body is not (caps. mine) a human person, but according to the Scriptures the latter may appear successively in different bodies." Reference is then made to 1 Cor. 15:52-4; 2 Cor. 5:1-4. I am, to say the least, surprised at such an assertion appearing above the initials of the editor of the class of magazines to which "The Student" belongs, and can only think he has used it for want of a better mode of expression. Such an assertion is not in strict conformity with either Scripture or reason, and the very phrase is subversive of itself. How is the human species known except by its body or bodily form? Are not all species distinguishable by their bodies and their nomenclature identified by their bodily form? A human being surely only belongs to the human species because of his human bodily form! This fact is true with regard to both animal and vegetable, otherwise confusion would reign. And what do the Scriptures say? "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." The personal pronoun "thou" must also surely without controversy represent the "person," otherwise the sentence "for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" would be meaningless, beside the absurdity of addressing that which is not the person.

The remark that the body is largely water and not dust, is only partially correct. A man may die without loss of blood, but you could draw no water from his corpse, which in due course as a literal fact does turn to dust. It is the uniform testimony of scripture that the body is the person, and our friend would have great difficulty in proving that personality as personality is ever in scripture recognized apart from bodily organism. If the following scriptures clearly demonstrate that personality attaches to the body, that should settle the question, both from the standpoint of those who believe that scripture rightly interpreted does not admit of contradiction, and from the scientific standpoint, which denies the possibility of single individuality being capable of existing as more than one object at any given time: Psa. 104:29; 146:4; Ecc. 12:7; Acts 2:29. These are but samples of scores which might be quoted proving personality to be associated with the body in life and death.

The second half of the remark is equally misleading, and read in conjunction with the first part coincides almost entirely with the (so-called) orthodox belief that the person is not the body, but resides in it. From statements made elsewhere, the auther affirms the "Spirit" to be the personality, so we may legitimately draw the conclusion that it is the "Spirit" which he says "according to the scriptures may appear successively in different bodies," and for proof of which he quotes 1 Cor. 15: 52-4; 2 Cor. 5:1-4. There is no mention of "Spirit" in either of these passages, nor would it be consistent were it so in view of other passages of scripture regarding the spirit. Is it correct to say it may appear successively in different bodies, for only two bodies are mentioned, a natural and a spiritual, and the subjects of resurrection are according to Paul said to be one or the other, giving not the slightest hint of any other further change than the one promised to both dead and living; whereas the view expressed by our friend seems to suggest a theory similar to that of transmigration of souls.

I am not acquainted with either Greek or Hebrew, and am therefore obliged to carefully discriminate against those who are, by unbiased and faithful comparison with acknowledged reliable translations of the word of God. I most heartily concur with the editorial comments in issue of October, 1911, No. 12, page 129, regarding the use of ruach and Neshamah in Job 34:14, for the living man has certainly both breath and spirit. Scripture has undoubtedly two main separate and distinct uses of the term "spirit" in connection with man. In proof of this it is only necessary to take one or two sample passages. For instance, Ecc. 12:7 and Jas. 2:26 unquestionably have reference to the breath (see margin), and in passing I can not help remarking that I consider our friend is unhappy in his choice of this latter passage and others also in support of his view of personality. Job 32:8 and 1 Cor. 2:11 have evident reference to another use of the term "spirit." It seems to me, instead of going to the New Testament for an explanation of the term "spirit" as used in Job, it would be more reasonable to compare with an Old Testament usage of the same term, and that Prov. 20:27 admirably suits the case. Even the passages in Job 32:8 and 34:14, 15, if carefully read with the context, do not bear out the contention of R. S. W.

I can not agree with the writer's attempt (p. 100) to make living man consist only of body and spirit. From the earliest records of creation man is spoken of as having both soul and spirit. Each dependent on the other to sustain the living man. He is certainly in error in stating "separated they make man in death." They do not—the body does.

The editor again quotes Jas. 2:26 and says it is by means of this spirit that man's identity is preserved throughout the death period. He then cites Paul's argument of the wheat seed. Now I am in full agreement with the writer that Paul's illustration is more of fact than is generally admitted, and I also agree with him that seed is the basis thought. Where I differ is that our writer argues for this potential force in the "spirit," whereas I am convinced (I believe on scriptural grounds) that he is in error. I maintain the soul is the source of preservation, and offer in proof the following remarks:

R. S. W. quotes several passages, such as Jas. 2:26; 1 Cor. 2:2; the case of Stephen, etc., etc. None of these passages suit his theory, for Jas. 2:26 reads "break" (see margin). 1 Cor. 2:11 says the Spirit is "in the man." Read also the context, and you will find "Spirit of God," "Spirit of man," and "Spirit of the world" mentioned. Now "things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another;" therefore if the "Spirit of man" represents an identity or personality (for the author seems to use both terms synomymously), then must also the "Spirit of God" and the "Spirit of the world" be so. And if the "Spirit of man" is capable of appearing successively in different bodies, so the "spirit of the world" must be likewise. With regard to Stephen, if the author's contention is correct, then Stephen was "received" by Christ in heaven, whereas we are told "they carried Stephen to his burial." Moreover, all scripture testifies that resurrection takes place from sheol or hades—that they shall awake from the dust of the earth, or that the sea shall give up its dead. Undoubtedly in 1 Cor. 2:11 the "spirit of the world" is the mind of the world. So also the "Spirit of God," the "Spirit of Christ," and the "Spirit of man."

David said: "Thou wilt redeem my soul from the power of the grave" (whence come all the dead); and Daniel said: "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake," and numerous other passages coincide, but none speak of the "Spirit" in this way.

Paul's illustration of wheat seed is extremely apt, and his usage of the term "bare grain" seems to me to be parallel to "found naked" in 2 Cor. 5. "God giveth it a body, and to every seed a body of its own," is a counterpart of similar language in the last passage quoted, where he speaks of being "clothed and unclothed." Nature abounds in illustrations—the body of the acorn is the oak; the body of the peach stone is the peach tree; and the body of the egg is the hen or rooster; and the personality so to speak of each is their body—the acorn is not the oak, and the egg is not the rooster, nor is that which is preserved for human resurrection the human being named man; though in each seed lies dormant (awaiting necessary conditions) the power to develop its own body.

I am sorry to seem to take so much exception to statements made by R. S. W., but I am sure his chief desire is for mutual benefit, and he will not object to kindly criticism if truth is benefited thereby. He says: "the Spirit of man is made to correspond with a single seed of wheat." I would ask where? The Record says the wheat seed is sown as bare (or naked) grain; and with reference to burial and resurrection, it says, "It is sown a natural (or as R. S. W. contends " a soul-body—it is raised a spiritual body." Here there is no intimation whatever that "the spirit" is the central fact in preservation of continuity, but according to our friend's translation, quoted above, the soul is strongly suggested as bearing this capacity until it is raised a spiritual body. And in this connection it is necessary and important to remember Paul's remark: "We shall all sleep, but we shall all (both dead and living) be changed in a moment." "It is sown a soul-ical body, it is raised (and changed) a spiritual body." And how confirmatory the scripture quoted at the head of this paper is of the position we take, viz., 1 Cor. 15:46.

This view seems to me to logically account for the resurrection of the ungodly, and indeed the nature of that event strengthens the view advocated. If, as our good friend says, the "spirit" were the determining factor, they would also of consequence be raised spiritual bodies; but the soul being the means of continuity, and having no promise of change, as have the just, they are not like the angels and are naturally subject to the second death. This view also lends added force to the words of our Savior in Matt. 10:28, and agrees, too, with other Biblical statements.

R. S. W. is undoubtedly right in saying that character is not the determining factor, for character is abstract and can not "sleep in the dust of the earth." We are often nicknamed "soul-sleepers," but those who give the name in opprobrium little guess how near the truth they really are. We have the Creator's record as to what man is formed of; but we have not that record regarding the spirit of man, and therefore one "opinion" is probably equal to another.

The remarks concerning memory are repeatedly made by writers, but careful examination proves them untenable. Memory is preserved in much the same way as scars are preserved. The change of tissue is gradual, that the new material takes the impression of the old: and it is a well known fact that bodily scars will oftentimes outlive memory. Few if any people can recollect many incidents of very early life, and a great deal of even later life is forgotten. Memory, too, is proved by surgery to be a physical action of the brain. This in no way nullifies the writer's statement that the whole life of the parent plant is stored up in the seed for continuation.

I know in making remarks on any article it is much easier to pull down than construct, and I recognize that such needs to be done in a humble and friendly spirit, and trust my efforts will be accepted as such. I have in some measure attempted to carry out the principle of edification as well as that of pulling down.

Yours fraternally, R. H. JUDD.

WHY I BELIEVE

A few weeks ago I wrote to Bro. S. H. Thomas that I had changed my mind as to who the "sheep" in Matt. 25:33, 34, were, giving him the reasons for the change. In answer Bro. Thomas asks these questions: "If that judgment scene takes place at the coming of the Lord; if the nations are gathered and the wicked punished and the righteous rewarded at that time, what becomes of our faith in the thousand-year reign of our Lord and his saints over the mortal nations of the earth? Who are the sheep, and when did they live in the history of the world? And who are the goats? And last, but not least, who are the third company so affectionately referred to as "these, my brethren?" Then he adds: "Won't you please answer these questions, and also give me your present views concerning the sheep? If not too great a task, would like to have you answer these questions through The Restitution."

When I received this letter I wrote in reply, giving my scriptures in the belief that the sheep were the "little flock" who receive the kingdom. I also told Bro. Thomas that I was not prepared to answer his questions in full, as I had not "settled" them fully myself. I also hesitated about sending this to The Restitution, as I dislike to see any contention in its pages on non-essentials; but inasmuch as a great deal has been written on this chapter, and I consider my interpretation of it given through the paper two years ago very faulty and illogical, I would like to tell those who read that article why I now think it foolish and unscriptural. I realize, too, that we should not be "hasty" in writing even on those things in which certain faith is not necessary to salvation.

First, then, there is no need to dwell in the term, "All nations." Every enlightened student of the word knows that these words are used almost always in the Bible in a limited sense. Just a few words on this. See Matt. 28:19. No one will contend for one moment that "all nations" were made disciples (margin). Jesus says the way is so straight and narrow that few find it. So we conclude logically that the "all nations" who were made Christians by the teaching of the apostles, and after their death by those who hear and understand the gospel, are the "all nations" gathered before the Son of Man at his appearing in glory seated upon his throne.

Then the sheep and the goats are those who have heard the gospel and become responsible to judgment. That this interpretation is true and unassailable is evidenced by the fact stated that the "sheep" are invited to take possession of a promised inheritance called "the kingdom." Who are they? See Luke 12:32: "Fear not, little flock (sheep); for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." To whom is Jesus speaking? See the 22nd verse: "And he said unto his disciples." From this, Bro. Thomas, I unhesitatingly answer your question, "Who are the sheep?" They are the disciples of Jesus, those who from righteous Abel down to the end of the Gentile times, who have heard, obeyed and kept the faith. All of these, "from the foundation of the world."

Next question, "Who are the goats?" Let Matt. 25:41 to end of the chapter, answer, 'Those who have heard and understood the invitation to reign with Christ, but have failed to "quicken" their feith by works following. Or, as James expresses it, their faith, being without works, is as dead as a human body without breath, therefore can not bring them life in the kingdom. This in passing: A man or woman, to be saved, to become an heir with Christ in the kingdom, must first hear and obey the gospel in baptism; but if he stops here no amount of theoretical faith, or, as Bro. Joblin expresses it, "just the assent of the mind to the truth will never take them into the kingdom." It matters not how learnedly we discuss these questions, if we lack the acts of love spoken of in the 35th and 36th verses of this 25th chapter of Matthew, we will never go into the kingdom, either as ruler with Christ or as a probationer in the age to come. Jesus forever settles this question in his answer to those who have failed to do those works of faith; although being professed followers of him. See verses 41-48.

No matter how we may deceive ourselves, Jesus' words will never fail. We will reap as we sow.

The next question Bro. Thomas asks is: "Who are the third company?" Now, dear brother, I beg your pardon, but I have read and reread this chapter many times, and I can not find even a hint of any "third" company. Look at the chapter again; we are told of no one but the "all nations" being gathered before him, and we are distinctly informed that they are separated or divided into just two classes. Search as we may, we can only find the sheep and the goats. True, Jesus says in the 40th and 45th verses that what is done unto the least of his brethren is done unto him; but this satement does not show any but the two classes—the true brethren who have shown their love and faith by their works, and those who, professing to be followers of Christ by their works deny him.

The next question is: "In what do the brethren differ from the sheep?" I think the scriptures quoted show conclusively that sheep and brethren are synonymous terms, both referring to those who inherit the kingdom as joint heirs with Jesus. Perhaps the thing that has troubled us and has brought up all these different opinions has been to harmonize this 25th chapter of Matt. with 1 Cor. 15:51, 52, and 1 Thess. 4:16, 17. For years I have studied this 25th chapter of Matthew, and always in connection with 1 Cor. 15:51, 52, and 1 Thess. 4:16, 17. I recall to mind my expression in a former article on these scriptures. There are no goats at that meeting in the air. I repeat that today. No one reading these scriptures can say differently, and in this lay all my trouble. To harmonize the scene in Matt. 35:31, if the sheep were the brethren who were faithful and heirs of the kingdom, and the goats the unfaithful who had no living faith. Bro. Thomas, I am so glad it all seems so clear and harmonious to me now.

Here is one scripture I want to refer to. It is found in 2 Tim. 4:1: "The Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom." This is the scripture that opened to my understanding those words of Jesus and of Paul, showing perfect harmony in their teaching. Mark well the expression, "His appearing and kingdom." That he appears first before he takes the kingdom of this world as his own, or before he "sits upon the throne of his glory,' 'is self-evident. How long a time elapses between the "appearing and kingdom" God has not revealed to us. We are not considering this interval of time now, but the events connected with his appearing and that which takes place when "he sits upon the throne of his glory." What is the first act revealed as to his appearing? It is found in 1 Thess. 4:16, 17, also in 1 Cor. 15:51, 52. First, the awakening of those asleep. Paul calls them "the dead in Christ," and assures us they shall come forth immortal, incorruptible. Then he tells us the faithful living shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and he tells us in Philippians 3:21 that we are changed by having our bodies made like unto Christ's glorious body. Then all, both those who were asleep and those living, being all changed from mortal to immortal beings, are caught up to meet the Lord in the air. And we are told that those caught up to the Lord shall be forever with him. They follow the Lamb whithersoever he goes. Only the sheep are at this meeting at his appearing.

But what is the next thing spoken of in the text? The kingdom. We find this represented in Matt. 25:31. The Lord has become king, for he is shown seated upon his throne. Who are with him? On the right hand we see a company whom the spirit calls "sheep." Bear in mind, "the right hand" expresses power and honor. This is the "little flock" who are ready and waiting for his appearing. They were caught away to meet him in the air. We find them on "the right hand" of glory because, having suffered with Jesus in his humiliation, he granted to them to sit with him on his throne. If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him. When they were caught away two were grinding at the mill; one was taken, the other left. Two were in one bed; one was taken, the other left. Two were in the field; one was taken, the other left.

But now we see on the left of Jesus another company—those who were left, who were not taken at his appearing with his saints. The time has come when the words of Jesus recorded in Luke 13:28 are being fulfilled. Those who were left are awakened to "see" the saints in the kingdom. This is not the time of his appearing to gather and immortalize his saints, but the time when they are exalted to the right hand of power. Daniel expresses it in these words: "The time came that the saints possessed the kingdom" (Dan. 7:22). In that time of trouble such as never was, when Michael shall stand up and deliver everyone whose name is written in the book, he says that some shall be awakened to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. If we only had this one passage of scripture to guide us we could not tell if both were awakened with one call or not, but Paul tells us the righteous alone are called first. From Matt. 25:31 we know that the awakening of the unfaithful dead and the calling of the living ones who have not "worked out" their salvation takes place afterward, that they may see the righteous in the kingdom (not in the air), and they themselves brought out (Matt. 7:21; 22:23). We might call this the executive judgment. Thus is fulfilled the promise of Jesus, "He that overcometh shall sit down with me on my throne" (Rev. 3:21). And so we are not surprised when he turns to those on his right hand and invites them to enter the kingdom, saying, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." And those on the left called goats—O, the terribleness of those words: "I know you not whence ye are. Depart from me, ye cursed." Thus do we all stand before the judgment seat of Christ and receive our reward for the deeds done in the body. That is the only logical teaching of this much wrested chapter of Matthew, and the only harmonious comparing scripture with scripture, seems clear and unassailable to me.

Now to meet a few of the forced interpretations of this chapter. First, there is only one class in the history of the world for the last six thousand years who are to "inherit the kingdom," only one class who are to reign with Christ a thousand years, and they are the "sheep" of his pasture (John 10:27-29; Matt. 10:16; Ps. 23; 95:7; Prov. 100:8). In every scripture I have examined where the words "sheep" or "lamb" are used figuratively it represents saints, brethren, heirs of the kingdom, children of God. Lamb stands for Christ and also his followers (John 1:36; 21:15).

Second. At the end of the thousand years there is no kingdom to give to any other class of people because Jesus has given up the kingdom to the Father. It was suggested to me two years ago that it might be the nation of Israel who are called the "sheep" in this chapter. This can not be. See Matt. 21:43. The word of God is not yea and nay. He changes not. Israel after the flesh lost the inheritance as rulers with God. That inheritance is given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof, Christ and his brethren; and he tells us in Matt. 25:35, 36, what the fruits of righteousness are.

Let none deceive himself as to the perfect fruit God calls for. Let us not come up to that judgment scene bearing withered leaves, but bring abundantly of the fruits of the spirit. Now, dear brother, I answer your first question last: "What becomes of our faith in the thousand year reign of Christ and the saints?" Have we made void our glorious faith in this reign when he has taken to himself his great power and is seated upon the throne of his glory? God forbid. Yea (I think), we have established it. To Bro. Tomlinson I owe much of the light I have found on these scriptures. I pray God daily that he may live until the appearing of our Lord and Savior, and that we may all be found faithful, that we may have a part in that glorious meeting in the air, and may be of that company who stand on the right hand of power. These words of Bro. Huggins I transcribe: "Thank the Lord for making rough places smooth, and crooked things straight."

THAT LINOTYPE MACHINE

By S. Roxana Wince

Are you tired of hearing about it brethren? Tired of seeing my name? Then why not hurry and buy it? It is your business, for the paper is yours. In it, you all have "equal claim," just as Lowell says, all races have "in the gain or loss of one race." Responsibility as to its life rests upon each of us. We cannot shirk this responsibility. There are very few among us who cannot give something. Dimes and quarters make dollars. These the children can give. Those of small means can give a little more than the children. Those whom God has blessed with abundant means can send large gifts. I shall not have to write personal letters to each one of these, asking for donations, for they love The Restitution too well to let it die. Somehow I have confidence in these brethren. They are not going to disappoint us, Brother Huggins.

And they will not keep us waiting either, for the cause of truth cannot wait. Its needs are to be considered before everything else. We can do without new carpets, couches, curtains and window shades, but we must have The Restitution. Only to think what it would mean to have no paper of our very own! And we cannot have the paper, unless we work to save! It is no use mincing matters: it is a question of life or of death.

"Lay not up for your selves treasures upon earth." Do you know what will become of such treasures? Go to the book and see. Gold put in the bank of heaven can not corrupt, nor witness against us. And just as sure as you do not give to the Lord the tithe that belongs to him you will lose it, and much more besides, God's eyes are on us, and the coming of Jesus is every day drawing nearer. What we do must be done quickly.

I cannot, I dare not withhold. A letter came to me only a day or two ago, from Omaha, Nebraska, telling me of wide and needy fields, where our literature ought to go—Bibles, Testaments, The Restitution, books and tracts. Hundreds of thousands of Spanish people in California untouched by any church. And they so eager for Christian literature, that seventy-five per cent would buy if they had the money. No other foreign nationality is so responsive as they to religious influences. I am sending my father's Spanish Testament, and money to buy more testaments.

But O there are so many untended fields even among our native-born people, whole regions, where there are no churches, no Sunday schools, no good books and papers to tell the gospel story. It makes my heart bleed! O we must have that linotype so The Restitution can live and go into these dark corners to preach for us, and save men and women for the coming kingdom. Jesus gave his life for us; what have we done for him?

EDITORIAL

"Always abounding in the work of the Lord" is Paul's description of a Christian. And to encourage us in the task the Apostle adds the assurance: "For as much as ye know your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Even if no one else gains anything from our efforts, we ourselves shall gain --we shall be stronger, better and happier for doing our best.

Many a Christian hinders his prayer by indulging in that species of unbelief which surmises that what he asks is too great a thing for God to bestow on one so unworthy as he is. He forgets that the greatest, aye, the greatest gift, has already been conferred in God's own Son, and the foundation therein laid for the argument, "How shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" God having begun his bounty in such a style of magnificence, consistency requires him now to go on, and do the greatest possible thing for the recipients of his Son.

If you are defamed, keep silence. Let time vindicate you. Silence is much better than explanation.

A great deal depends on having a petition properly presented. It is all-important to get it into the right hands. A petition frequently falls through inattention to this. If the proper person had been engaged to present and urge it, it would have been granted. This holds true of suits to the throne of the heavenly grace. We must ask in the name of Christ. We must put our petitions into his hands, and engage the great Advocate to present and urge them. Him the Father always hears. Even the prayers of the saints need an incense to be offered along with them to render them acceptable. That incense is Christ's intercession.

To present a petition is one thing; to prosecute a suit is another. Most prayers answer to the former; but successful prayer corresponds to the latter. The children of this world are, in this respect, wise in their generation. When they have a petition to carry ,they go with it to the seat of government, and having conveyed it by the proper channel to the power which is to decide upon it, they anxiously await the decision; in the meantime securing all the influence they can, and doing everything possible to insure a favorable result. So should the children of light do. But frequently they just lodge their petition in the court of heaven, and there they let it lie. They do not press their suit. They do not employ other means of furthering it, beyond the simple presenting of it. They have no power with God, and therefore do not prevail.

HELP US SAVE $150.00

Another Chance to Help the Truth

If we pay the entire cost of the linograph which it is proposed that we buy, at the time we purchase it, the company will give us $150.00 discount. If we buy it and pay only in part we shall lose this money, and to it must be added six per cent. interest. If a brother or sister would loan us the money to pay cash for the machine at six per cent. interest, he would be getting a legal rate of interest for his money, have a good business deal, and save us $150.00. If he would give us the loan at 4 per cent. interest, then our saving in interest would be considerable too. Either way, he would be well secured for his money and would be paid any interest he cared to ask. Another door opening into a large room of usefulness, another golden opportunity to serve the Lord and befriend his brethren and sisters. If any one can and will make use of this rich and rare opportunity to further the gospel cause, let him notify us at once.

AN EXPOSE OF POPULAR CHRISTIANITY

A layman writing to the "Reformed Church Review," a Protestant monthly, pointedly calls attention of the ministry to the reasons underlying the failure of the church. The writer's protest is that while the modern church is trying to "Christianize the social and civil life" of the world, the world is "rapidly secularizing" the church. The writer believes that under the euphonious expression of "social service" the church is being committed to new methods of reform that divert it from the exercise of its proper functions. That he understands the conditions is evident from the following extract from his article:

"The sacred edifice heretofore dedicated to the worship of Almighty God has now, with its parish house ,its club and other auxilaries, become the center of secular factions. We now go to church to hear sermons on the minimum wage, adequate housing of the poor, the regulation of moving pictures and the dance halls, how to vote, and the latest vice investigation report. From this center agents and detectives of law and order societies make report of nightly investigations, and it is said even ministers of the gospel keep silent watch during the hours of night and assist in rounding up witnesses from disreputable houses. They appear as prosecutors and witnesses before grand and petit juries in the quarter sessions court. Billiard and pool tables are being installed, dancing classes organized and all sorts of amusements offered to entice the youth within its sacred precincts. A child returning home from Sunday school recently was asked by its mother the subject of the lesson. It was how to keep the streets clean. Another Sunday, kindness to dumb animals furnished the subject of the lesson, and this was in a graded Sunday school up-to-date. A good woman who had suffered greatly with a recent sorrow brought herself to church longing for some comforting words. She heard a sermon on the 'Charity Organization Society and the Visitiag Nurse.' "

THE MODERN CHURCH ONLY A CIVIC CLUB

The idea of liberality in matters of religion is growing. The Church can not be more liberal than her founder. The idea of a liberal church springs from false conception of the very purpose for which Christ established a Church. The Church is a divine institution and cannot deviate from its mission any more than it can outgrow its divine character. Its powers and duties, its authority and definite field of labor, have been clearly marked out for it, and no minister, council, synod, king or pope can swerve it one hair breadth.

Philanthropic and humanitarian movements are of vital importance and deserve thoughtful and conscientious consideration, but they can never properly take the place of the service due to Almighty God. They are a part of the mission of the Church only accidentally when they touch upon the spiritual side of man's character. The rights of man, the social uplift, are unworthy of honest effort, but in proclaiming the rights of man we must not forget the supreme rights of God.

The Church is not a human institution intended only to teach a system of ethics. If the Church is to confine itself solely to those things that make for social service it cannot be distinguished from the lodge room or civic club. The criticism cannot apply to the Church of God. Secure in the belief that the mission of Christ's Church is essentially a spiritual one, the Church of God does not concern herself about these things which pertain only to man's temporal wants and destinies. It insists on that old-fashioned religion, the religion that is contained in the revelation of God. It insists that the eternal truths which Christ taught are just as true and just as important today as when He preached them on the mountain side or on the sea of Galilee.

We have not grown so wise that we can improve upon the revelation of God, so liberal and broad minded that we can change the creed handed down to us by the Divine Founder of Christianity. It is monumental and blasphemous impertinence for any man to say that the faith of Christ delivered to the apostles has outgrown its usefulness and is not adapted to modern times.

The contributor to the "Reformed Church Review" succinctly sums up the most amazing feature of the development of Protestianism in these words:

"Ministers of the gospel are willing to preach on every subject under the sun except the gospel, and when they begrudgingly hand it down they almost tell us it is not divine, but a man-made thing. They have relegated to the brush heap most of the sacred beliefs, such as the miracles, original sin, the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the efficacy of baptism and the holy communion. Perhaps this is the reason so many ministers look down on empty pews and complain bitterly that their members do not come to hear the sermons prepared with so much labor."

COMMUNICATIONS

From Sister Ethel Delozier

Dear Bro. Haggins:

I am impressed to write you on the subject of the administrator of baptism. Woll God accept a false teacher to baptize his people? Can a false teacher baptize a candidate into Christ? If his work is acceptable to God, why are we warned against false teachers?

We read in Rom. 14:23: "For whatsoever is not of faith is sin." It seems to me so many of our people are not baptized into Christ, and are under sectarian baptism. I am sure the subject is worth careful consideration. I want to hear from others better posted on the scriptures than I am.

In the blessed hope.

(The questions proposed by Sister Delozier are questions of interest and importance, and we would give them due attention ourself only we are hindered by an attack of measles. We therefore hand them to our readers without editorial comments, with the request that some of our contributors give them the attention they deserve.—Editor.)

FALLEN ASLEEP

Eliza Moyer

Eliza Rockenfield was born January 25. 1848, and died June 3, 1916. She was married February 25, 1872, to James Moyer. Of five children two survive. For twenty years she had been a member of the Pleasant View Church. Death came suddenly while at the dinner table with friends on Saturday. Funeral services were held from the M. E. Church at Pence, Indiana, conducted by the writer, assisted by Elder Kenyon.

FLORENCE MAY NEWMEYER

Florence May Herron Newmeyer was born in Cleveland, Ohio, May 16, 1894, and died June 11, 1916, age 22 years and 26 days.

Sister Newmeyer was baptized into Christ June 27, 1915. She leaves to mourn her death and absence a father, mother, sister and three brothers; several distant relatives, and a large circle of friends, and all of her brothers and sisters in the truth.

She was united to Brother Earl Newmeyer in the sacred bonds of matrimony September 17, 1913. Her amiable, sweet and cheery disposition influenced for good all who were associated with her; during her illness which terminated in death, her patience, fortitude and the spirit of hopefulness manifested at all times, even to the last, inspired her attendants with love and admiration.

To us who are left to mourn her absence, we cherish sweet memories of her which time cannot efface. May her life, her love, her affection for those dear to her by the ties of home and kindred, and especially her love for the truths of God's kingdom and the name of Jesus Christ, which she so enthusiastically and faithfully espoused and obeyed, continue to inspire us to put forth a greater effort to make our calling and election sure.

Her funeral was held in the Church of God May the 14th; and after beautiful hymns of praise and resignation had been sweetly rendered by our choir, and words of comfort had been spoken elegantly by Brother George B. Alldridge, she was tenderly laid away to rest till the descending Lord shall cry, as he did at the tomb of Lazarus, "Come forth!" Then "former things" shall be swallowed up in the glare and glory of the kingdom of God. Let us all hasten on to that tearless morning.

Cynthia Thompson

Cynthia Jane Smith Thompson was born March 30, 1863, in Jordan Township, Warren County, Ind. She was married to Wells H. Thompson on September 25, 1884, to which union were born three children Carl, Earle and Edith. These with the husband and four grand-children and two uncles Mr. Geo. W. Smith, of Greentown, and Mr. Marion Smith, of New Richmond, are left to mourn her death.

Sh united with the Pleasant View Church in 1882, and has remained faithful to its teachings and walked in the light of the Word of God until the end of the earthly life. After several years of suffering and pain she fell asleep in Jesus as the day ended on June 6, 1916, at the age of 53 years, 2 months, 6 days.

A kind loving and faithful wife and mother who will be sadly missed, not alone by her family, but by a large circle of friends and relatives.

Though we have parted to meet here no more, we know we shall meet again, on yonder bright shore, in that home eternal from sorrows set free. Dear one, we hope to live ever with thee then. Funeral services were conducted from the Presbyterian Church at West Lebanon, Ind., June 9th, at 2:00 P. M.

IMPORTANCE OF OBEDIENCE TO GOD

Obedience is submission to authority. It is important to live in obedience; to be under a superior, and not to be at our own disposing. It is much safer to obey than to govern. Especially is this so in relationship with God. In the act of obedience two persons are involved: the inferior and the superior to whom the inferior submits. God is the superior and we the inferior. Many live under obedience because of fear rather than for love. These are discontented. We cannot have freedom of mind unless we willingly and heartily put ourselves under obedience for the love of God. It is true that everyone willingly does that which agrees with his own liking and inclines most toward those who are of his own mind. Let us, then, learn to love God and subject ourselves to his will in obedience so that our inclination will be toward him with love and deference rather than because of fear of punishment.

That which brought death into the human family was disobedience; the doers of which were punished (Gen. 3:17-19). We will find records all through the scriptures that God enacted punishment upon disobedient doers. I will cite a few instances of disobedience to God's law and the vengeance God took on such. When God spake unto Moses of the building of the tabernacle and the manner of sacrificial offerings he commanded that no strange incense be offered, which command was disobeyed by Nadab and Abihu, Aaron's sons, who offered strange fire before the Lord. "And there went out fire from the Lord and devoured them; and they died before the Lord" (Lev. 10:2). God told Moses that at the completion of the ark the sons of Kohath should come to bear it away but that they should not touch any holy thing lest they die (Num. 4:15). We find in 1 Ch. 13:9, 10 and 2 Sam. 6:6, 7, that when the oxen stumbled Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God. This action caused the Lord's anger to be kindled against Uzzah, and God smote him there for his error; and there he died by the ark of God. The familiar story of King Saul might be cited here; of his disobedience in not destroying all that belonged to the Amalekites, which God had commanded hi mto do. When Samuel reproved him he stated that his men had saved the best of the oxen and sheep to sacrifice unto the Lord. Samuel said unto him, "Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king" (1 Sam. 15:22, 23). Ananias and Sapphira were both punished because of the sin in their hearts and their untruth to God (Acts 5:1-11). From the above instances of disobedience to God's law and the punishment received we see that God is intent upon the respect and obedience of his word.

In the above we find that God enacted immediate punishment. Does God always execute judgment so speedily? "Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil. Though a sinner do evil an hundred times and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him" (Eccl. 8:11, 12). All sinners are not to be speedily punished. Remember that there is a day of destruction coming unto which the wicked are reserved, and they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath (Job 21:30). Peter says, "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished" (2 Pet. 2:9).

If the punishment of the wicked is to be reserved to the judgment the question may arise, "Why has God thus dealt with certain individuals?" To answer this question read 1 Cor. 10:11, 12: "Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples; and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. Wherefore, let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." This judgment will come, in which every one will be judged according to his work. Read Rev. 20:12, 13.

If we hear the law and know the law we must obey it or we sin. Of those who turn away their ears from hearing the law, God says, "Even their prayer shall be abomination" (Prov. 28:9). Whether or not we love God, and the degree of our love for him is manifest in the extent to which we keep his law and obey him. John says: "Whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him" (1 John 2:5); and, "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments" (1 John 5:3). In order to keep close to God through obedience to his will we must deny ourselves of many things. We must separate ourselves from the ungodly; keep away from the multitude, for broad is the way that leadeth to destruction and many there be which go in thereat. God has said, "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil" (Ex. 23:2). Let us, therefore, obey God whether or not others do, for each one is responsible for himself, and in the end will give an account of himself, not his neighbor. Through obedience and subjection to His will, through close relationship with him and love for his law, God will care for us. We are admonished to trust in the Lord and do good, and then he says we shall be fed; to delight ourselves in him and he shall give us the desires of our hearts; to commit our way unto him, to rest in him, fret not of him who prospereth, for he, the Lord, will care for us. Remember how he fed his children with manna in the wilderness, how he sent the ravens unto Elijah with food, and how he cares for the lillies of the field. Beloved, God will care for us if we incline our hearts unto him through obedience in love.

The question may be asked, "Are we bound to obey the laws of the land if they should be contrary to God?" Let us find out what God's elect has done under like circumstances. When the officers cast Peter into prison because he was preaching the truth, an angel released him and he continued to preach regardless of the law of the high priest and officials. When the high priest reminded him that he had been forbidden to so speak, Peter and the other apostles answered and said, "We ought to obey God rather than men" (Acts 5:29). Nebachadnezzer, King of Babylon, issued a decree that at the sound of the trumpet everyone should bend his knee to the golden image which he had erected. Daniel's three companions refused to obey the word of the king and were thrown into the fiery furnace. What was the result? God spared their lives. Darius, the Median King, issued a decree that for thirty days no one should ask a petition of any god or man save him, the king. Whoever disobeyed this command was to be cast into the den of lions." Now, when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime" (Dan. 6:10). Daniel obeyed God (read 1 Kings 8:44, 48) rather than man. What was the result? God spared him from the mouths of the lions.

Through obedience to God's will we may be reproached, but let us bear the reproach for the sake of the truth (Luke 6:22, 23; Heb. 11:24-26). God entreats us to obey as he did the children of Israel. "O that there were such an heart in them that they would fear me and keep all my commandments always, that it might be well with them and their children forever!" (Deut. 5:29). "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments, then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea" (Isa. 48:18). God has promised a reward to those who obey him and do his commandments. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city" (Rev. 22:14). Beloved, what more could be given as a reward for obedience, or what more could be wished for? Let us begin at once to obey God in all things, since we are brought to realize the importance of such, for it is the will of the Father Let us begin today to "exhort" one another daily while it is called today; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin. Today, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts" (Heb. 3:13, 15).

Let as, brothers and sisters, be able to say as David said, "I made haste, and delayed not, to keep thy commandments" (Ps. 119:60). The following quotation may be rightly applied here: Happy are the families where the government of the parents is the reign of affection, and the obedience of the children the submission of love." God, our Father, reigns over us with affection; let us obey him with the submission of love, and we shall be happy.

VIOLA G. MEERMANS.

THE END OF THE WORLD

"One generation passeth away and another generation cometh, but the earth abideth forever" (Eccles. 1:4). Your article "End of the World Bugbear Not Entirely Dead," is good. The newspapers could do much toward finishing it if they would. Pity the article could not have followed more closely Evangelist Stough's "End of the World" sermon. No man on earth, of his own knowledge, knows that the world will or will not come to an end, and the only possible source of information on the subject is the Bible, and every educated minister knows that the Biblical phrase "End of the world" has no such signifiance as that applied to it by Evangelists of the Stough type.

The whole question rests upon a correct translation of the Greek word "aion," meaning age. Professor M. B. Riddle, D.D., LL.D., Western Theological seminary, gives the correct interpretation of the phrase as follows: "End of the world—Few phrases in the New Testament are more frequently misunderstood than this one. The margin of the Revised Version, the consummation of the age, gives the true sense, pointing to the completion of the present Christian dispensation at the Second Coming (parousia) of our Lord. The word rendered world is, in most cases, a time-word. Nor does 'end' mean 'destruction,' but rather completion. Hence the view that the phrase expresses or implies the destruction of the earth is altogether unwarranted by the sense of the terms used." The scholarship of the world agrees with Prof. Riddle as above quoted.

The Bible does teach, however, that this age will end with a time of great trouble and distress of nations "such as never was since there was a nation" (Dan. 12:1), and our Lord adds "nor ever shall be after" (Mat. 24:21). Many Bible students believe that the world is fast approaching such a time and that it will be the intense darkness which precedes the dawn of a brighter day. On this subject the Rev. R. A. Torry, D.D., the great evangelist, in a letter to the Philadelphia North American, declares: "I have no question that we are going to see the greatest revolutions, religious, social and political that the world ever saw. Some day we are going to have an awful crash, followed by the most glorious day in the world's history, ushered in by the coming of our Lord Jesus himself." Why will the ministers continue to deceive the people on this subject? It would seem that the only object is to work upon the fears of the credulous and chase them up the sawdust trail and the more trailers the bigger the collections. May the time soon come when "the earth (society) shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" (Hab 2:14).

Yours truly,
ALLEN L. CRANSTON.

MORTALITY OF MAN

This is one of the most important truths to be taught to an unbeliever, for it is to those who realize that they are but dust and liable to perish that God has suited his plan of promised blessings and eternal life at last. As long as the religious world think they must live forever, they can see no benefit or blessing in the gospel of the coming kingdom; or a promise of eternal life to the overcomer, but Paul has said that it is they "who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor and immortality, shall receive eternal life, and that "Christ has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel" (Tim. 1:10). This shows that immortality is something set before us to hope for; it is a gift from God and cannot be possessed now, for, what is our life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away (Jas. 4:14). "For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom 6:23). This shows that as a result of being born in sin, the end of our present life is death, which means to perish, for the psalmist says: "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, and in that very day his thoughts perish" (Psa. 146:4). It also shows that we are offered immortal life as a gift, and that this life is only obtained through Jesus Christ, who, we read, "Was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification." And Paul explains further in 1st Cor. 15: 17-22: "And if Christ be not raised your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. But now is Christ risen from the dead, and became the fruits of them that slept. For, since by man came death by man came also resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." It is because Christ lives that we shall live also, because he has conquered death that he shall be able to give us life when he comes again. How can anyone tell us that they inherit this life now, when Jesus is coming again to glorify his saints, to give them his own divine nature and to fulfill all that God has promised to do for his people? It is then that the faithful will receive everlasting life, we can but walk by faith now in this glorious hope of being made like Jesus when he comes, for Paul says (Col. 3:3, 4): "For ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." And it is not until then that we can attain to immortal life.

While we are teaching others this great truth, let us cherish that blessed hope more and more, and show them what a sure foundation we have for it in his word, and let us take courage from John's words "Beloved now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him for we shall see him as he is" (John, 1st Epistle, 3:2). Amen.

SOWING AND REAPING

E. W. Knapp

They that sow in tears shall reap in joy (Ps. 126:5).

They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way wherein they shall not stumble (Jer. 31:9).

He that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity (Prov. 22:8). They have sown the wind and they shall reap the whirlwind.

Sow to yourself in righteousness, reap in mercy (Hosea 8:7; 10:12).

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE—ITS FOUNDER

Prevalence of Heresies Historical and Scriptural

We must expect new heresies and St. Paul lets us know that "seducers shall grow worse and worse, erring and driving into error." This article is concerned with such a seducing heresy. Religious seductions are no historic rarity. Men seem curiously liable to them. There is not an age that is not put a wondering at the strange sight of sober-minded people suddenly found religiously intoxicated, driven into error by some deceiving or deluded seer. England in the past century marveled at the following that an illiterate servant, Joanna Southcott, succeeded in influencing by her ridiculous prophecies. Dowie, with his crediated Elijah II claims, is not yet forgotten. And men to-day are wondering at Christian Science. Its ardently zealous votaries are so serious about it, so ecstatic over it; it is so persistently advertised, such wondrous results are claimed, such unexpected conversions are made, that one naturally seeks to know more of the facts in this pheonomenon of "science."

Mrs. Eddy the Big Fact in "Science"

The big, the necessary fact in "science" is the personality of the woman who claims to have discovered it. And unlike many such a prophetess, her life is not scarsely documented. There is a wealth, even of detail, known of her long, strange life. Her childhood neighbors close associates of her later life for all the various localities she lived in, court records, her own writings—all have been made to testify concerning her. An exhaustive, searching record of her life is to be found in an unique series of articles that ran in McClure's Magazine all through the year 1907. Her own "Retrospection and Introspection" emanated-sketch of herself, and an "orthodox" biography published by the Scientists leaves practically nothing unsaid of the discoveress of "Science."

Mrs. Eddy was Self-willed, Petulant and Ignorant

Mary A. Morse Baker came from an ordinary farming family of New England. She was born in 1821. There was none of the extraordinary refinement and aristocratic connections that the "orthodox" lives implies. And they would make out that from her earliest years she was a prodigy of wisdom and an intense student. She tells that her brother, Albert, of whom there is question, again in later years when she was acting as a spiritualistic medium, was her teacher during his vacations. And she declares that "she studied moral science, natural science, natural philosophy and mastered Latin, Greek and Hebrew." Against this bold assertion is the confirmed testimony of her childhood neighbors that on account of sickness she seldom was in school and self-willed and petulant she showed no application while in attendance. Those who have been familiar with her private correspondence surely deprecate her schooling, and a Unitarian minister, who never was a Scientist, but who nevertheless radically revised her "inspired" Science and Health, one of whose sermons was once a chapter in it; he being in a position to know says: "She was not well read nor in any way learned." But she does not hesitate to have the Almighty solve the difficulty: "After my discovery of Christian Science most of the knowledge I had gleaned from schoolbooks vanished like a dream."

Mrs. Eddy a Religious Paranoiac, But "Is Nobody's Fool"

She appears from her earliest years to have been decidedly hysterical. Her doctor diagnosed her case as "hysteria mingled with bad temper." And "fits" or "tantrums" as they were variously called by the neighbors were frequent. And this hysteria marked her whole life. In her own approved life one reads of "spasmodic seizures followed by nervous collapse," and of an instance where "she was found rigid with foam on her lips." Advanced in life she ever exacted the most trying service from all those about her, having for instance a mania for being rocked by the hour, and a special cradle was built for the woman! She seriously tells that when eight years old she heard heavenly voices—surely another damaging symptom of the religious paranoiac! Again in her latest years she was beside herself with the absurd, truly witchcraft notion that she was being persecuted, and in fact brought civil suits against mental murderers. And her wild claims to being an inspired prophetess out-heroded any religious pretender; no one can take her place, the second appearing of Jesus is unquestionably in Science, she has graciously received final revelation that no human pen nor tongue taught her, etc. There is throughout the neatest case of religious paranoia, not a symptom seems to be lacking. And yet she was clever, she was shrewd, she must have had certain great gifts—an uncommon personality, an ecstatic confidence in herself. With her little self-reading she attempted literary work, she tried lecturing, and if her later writings are at all her own, she could impressively attempt pedantry. As a close associate of hers put it: "Mrs. Eddy is nobody's fool." And it has been said by a specialist that the most interesting figure of Christian Science is to contemplate how near people can come to insanity and yet retain their faculty to make and handle money and even accumulate fortunes.

Mrs. Eddy was Often Guilty of Highhanded Excommunications

Mrs. Eddy was by no means the calm, serene, long-suffering soul her panegyrists would make of her. There are too many instances of temper, too many instances of domineering treatment of those who were trying to befriend her, instances of the use of vilest epithets for those who opposed her. She would brook no opposition, nor any rivals, and the repeated defections and rejections and highhanded excommunications of those who were closest to her in her movement are ample proof that she was irascible and fierce and bitter. She grew malicious to ward a Richard Kennedy, who had been her prize practioner; a D. H. Spofford, who had been her chief adviser, she would have enjoined from witcherafty; a Mrs. Woodbury she would liked to have torn in pieces, a woman opponent would readily be made out to be the scarlet woman of the Apocalypse. Mrs. Eddy is pictured forth as a long suffering martyr—mother deprived of her beloved child. The unnatural fact is that she would not have the child near her—the same absence of true tenderheartedness that inspires a teaching that will suffer a child in anguish to die without an attempt at relief!

Mrs. Eddy was a Much-Married Woman

The marriages of Mrs. Eddy make an interesting chapter in her life. She first married G. W. Glover, whom she spoke of as a colonel, but the obscure bricklayer never had any such rank whatsoever. He died shortly after their marriage, leaving her penniless. Her second husband, a Dr. Patterson, was an itinerant doctor, a good natured soul, who was wont to find her helpless whenever he was about to attend her. She was divorced from him in 1873. "My husband," she writes, "had eloped with a married woman from one of the wealthy families of that city." And yet that community knows nothing of it, and there is sworn testimony that nothing was heard against Dr. Patterson's character either then or since. Retired and living like a hermit, he died in 1896. But in 1877 Mrs. Eddy had married her third husband, Asa Gilbert Eddy; though she was fifty-six years old at the time, the license read forty. This man died in 1882. A private grewsome post-mortem (an operation forbidden in Science) made by a practicing physician showed his former diagnosis was correct; it was a valular trouble of the heart. And yet Mrs. Eddy refused to admit it was due to ought else but mesmeric influence, "arsenical poison mentally administered!" An attorney, who came to be familiar with Mrs. Eddy's career, F. W. Peabody, writes of a possible fourth marriage in his book of merciless condemnation, "The Religion-Medical Masquerade:" "But many there are who believe there was a fourth marriage and that the widow Eddy in course of time became and is to-day the wife of Calvin A. Frye. I do not state this fourth marriage as a fact, but offer it as the only possible and creditable explanation of the facts." These repeated marriages with divorce are to be noted as an interesting commentary on Mrs. Eddy's ascetical teaching concerning marriage, which she considers to be only a concession, a suffer-it-to-be-so-now-state, and perhaps would even mean it to be a state of "legalized lust."

Dr. Quimby Embraced, Then Spurned

After years of sickness and dull mediocre struggle Mrs. Eddy finally became a patient of a much advertised medical philosopher, Dr. Quimby, a man who plays the most important part in Christian Science controversy. It was of him she wrote in enthusiastic praise in the newspapers, it was of him and his healing system that she publicly lectured, in his honor she wrote poetry, declaring that Quimby "healed with the truth that Christ taught" and "seeking though a trembler where his feet had trod." And for years after 1866 she taught and was possessed with the vocation of making known his system of healing with substantially all that is now Christian Science; those with whom she lived agree that it was the burden of her daily conversation and that she attributed it all to Dr. Quimby. But after 1875 the inexplicable ungrateful contradiction begins to be made. She wrote that "in the year 1866 I discovered the Christ Science or Divine Laws—God had been graciously preparing me during many a year for the reception of this final revelation." And from that on Dr. Quimby is the object of most virulent condemnation. She brazenly renounces all indebtedness to him. She insists that "he had failed signally in healing her case," that he was a "magnetic doctor," a "spiritualist," that she was responsible for all his thought on the subject, that all his manuscripts were her composition, and confronted by her own written contradiction of all this, becomes guilty of the piteous evasion that she might have written those acknowledgments and praises under his mesmeric influence!

Mrs. Eddy the Wonder-Worker, a Great Fraud

Then there is her glorious claim of being the wonder-worker. Not that puzzling results may not be obtained at times, especially in functional diseases as opposed to organic lesions. Dowie, every mind healer, gets results that are at times somewhat startling. But such results come in any good physician's practice, for the influence that mind, that a spiritual soul can exert over matter, over our bodily organism cannot but be considerable and its limits are undetermined, hence the uncertain, the surprise results. This power of mental suggestion to help bodily health, especially where the subject is wrought up with religious fervor and confidence is quite sufficient to explain any unexaggerated actual results obtained, though it is to be observed that this obvious sensible use of human will power, the Scientist must declaim against as "malicious animal magnetism." Applying "Divine Principle" is something quite superior! When Mrs. Eddy begins to assert her claims as a healer she looses all sight of personal limitation, she toys with omnipotent power. "Working out," she writes, "the rules of Science in practice, the author has restored health in cases of both acute and chronic disease in their severest form. Secretions have been changed, the structure has been renewed, shortened limbs have been elongated, ankylosed joints have been made supple and carious bones have been restored to healthy condition." More ridiculously worded claims that she has written can be cited, but these are words from the more reserved and "inspired" Science and Health. It is an instance of her gratuitous claim to do the wonders that Christ did, a claim so persistently repeated and with such suggestive force that the unwary begin to believe it is true; a gratuitous claim giving no names, no dates, no witnesses, no opportunity for prudent investigation. Though there is one "miracle" of Mrs. Eddy's that can be investigated, the great "sign" apparently that should prevent all faith in her being vain, the occasion of her own cure when the Almighty graciously gave to the world through the "Final Revalation" of Science. In February, 1866, she had fallen on the ice and was serverely injured, "skilled physicians declared there was no hope for her and pronounced the verdict that she had three days to live. Finding no help on earth she lifted her heart to God," she called for her Bible and reading it, "the life divine restored her—and she rose healed. This was falling apple that led me to the discovery how to be well myself and how to make other so." Such the dramatic Christian Science story of the great "miracle." But that "skilled physician," a Dr. Cushing, gives an affidavit statement declaring that he had neved said that there was no hope or that she was in critical condition or that she had three or any limited number of days to live. He found her only nervous and semi-hysterical and she made no mention of a miraculous cure on the third day, but took treatment on s ubsequent days and even five months later. Then, too, there is a letter of Mrs. Eddy's written two weeks after the accident to a close friend of Dr. Quimby piteously a sking for relief. Such is the reliability of her claims, such in this most important, all critical instance is the foundation of truth. And when the claim is so empty on the lips of the "inspired" founder, why not vain the claims of her weaker followers?

Mrs. Eddy was a Money-Monger

All the chapters of this phenomenal woman's life cannot be crowded into a short sketch. There are many another gospel-opposite in her life that is not referred to her and yet her greed for money cannot be overlooked, it is too characteristic, as for instance when she copyrighted her Revelation, and fiercely fought its slightest infringement in civil suits; when she charged "strictly in advance" for her missionary teaching, $300 for a few lessons, and when raising this exorbitant tuition she could write in mock serious air: "This startling sum for tuition lasting barely tree weeks greatly troubled me. I shrank from asking it, but finally led by a strange providence to accept this fee." Should facts like these provoke exclamatory denunciation or a pitying smile?

These then are a few side lights on the strange life of Mrs. Eddy. Nothing has been said of her teachings, of her pantheistic Hindoo notion of God, of her Unitarian rationalistical ghostic view of the Savior, of her never to be reconciled, unintelligible teaching on the nature of man, of her utter disregard of the literal word and meaning of holy scripture. The Christian teaching on prayer, on sin, on the divine punishment of sin, Christian patience, Christ's sacraments, all in Science must sacrilegiously give way for the "higher, clearer, and more permanent" revelation of this unlettered, hysterical, much-married and divorced, lying or deluded woman, who would irreligiously consent to be honored by her idolizing followers as the holy, prophetic glorious woman of the Apocalypse! Without at all considering teaching so heritical, so repugnant to Christian belief, this life alone of the founder and discoverer of Science is efficient antidote against possible contraction of the un-Christian contagion of Science.—Selected from "The Universe" with considerable revision and rearrangement by the Editor of The Restitution.

THE DESTINY OF THE EARTH

It was quite common for Bible writers to use figurative language in describing political and ecclesiastical systems; and they are often, as we shall see, represented by the words "heaven and earth." Isaiah, speaking of Idumea (chap. 34) says: "Come near, ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people; let the earth hear, and all that is therein, the world and the things that come forth of it. For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and his fury upon all the armies; he utterly destroyed them, he hath delivered them to the slaughter. Their slain shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcases, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood. And all the host of heaven shall be desolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll; and her host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and the falling fig from the fig tree. For my sword shall be bathed in heaven, behold it shall come down on Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea."

This text speaks of an earth that can "hear." The literal earth cannot hear; then it must here be used figuratively. Notice also the figurative use of "mountains," "heaven," and "sword." We know that the Lord does not use a literal sword himself and bathe it with blood in the literal heaven where he dwells Then all are here used figuratively to represent things in the country of Idumea, or Edom as it is often called. It is the heaven and earth of Edom that is here spoken of; and they have long since been destroyed

Jeremiah also uses the word "earth" figuratively (chap. 22:29), "O earth, earth, earth, hear ye the word of the Lord." Again Isaiah says, "Hear O heavens and give ear, O earth: for the Lord hath spoken" (chap. 1:2). It was the people of the earth that were addressed in each of these messages of the word of God, and not the literal heavens and earth.

Speaking of ancient Babylon, Isaiah says: "For the stars of heaven and the constellations thereof shall not give their light: the sun shall be darkened in his going forth and the moon shall not cause her light to shine" (chap. 13:10). "Therefore I will shake the heavens and the earth shall be moved out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of hosts, and in the day of his fierce anger" (ver. 13). "Behold I will stir up the Medes against them, which shall not regard their silver; and as for gold they shall not delight in it. Their bows also shall dash the young men to pieces; and they s hall have no pity on the fruit of the womb; their eye shall not spare children" (ver. 17, 18). The result of this is: "And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldee's excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah" (ver. 19). This was the heaven and earth of Babylon, and not the literal earth on which we reside; for it is still in its old place, and is as we have seen, not to be "removed for ever." The Prophet continues: "Thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon and say, How hath the oppressor ceased! the golden city ceased!" (chap. 14:4). "How are thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! How art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! For thou hast said in thy heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God: I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation in the sides of the north: I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most high. Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell (sheol) to the sides of the pit" (vers. 12-15).

Some have surmised that Lucifer is the personal arch fiend designated the devil and satan, in other parts of the word; but if such is the case, he was cast down to sheol, the place of the dead, instead of the earth where life exists. But he is called "the king of Babylon," as we have seen, and "a man" in verse sixteen. Then men can scripturally be said to have fallen from heaven, let us take notice here: for this can only be the heaven in which the king of Babylon dwelt. About all the passages that speak of the destruction of the earth, speak also of the passing away of the heaven, and when the literal heaven have fled and gone, where we appear? Will we land in hades? The reader can see that if we literalize the earth in those passages, we must also literalize the heaven also and if the literal earth is destroyed, the literal heaven will also be; and that would have the saints without a home in which to enjoy their eternal life.

Paul speaking of the heaven and earth which Jesus created says: "And thou Lord in the beginning (the beginning mentioned Jno. 1:1: Mk. 1:1: Jno. 1:1; 1 Jno. 2:11, with the added words left out), hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thy hands: they shall perish; but thou remainest: and they shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed, but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail" (Heb. 1:10-12).

The heavens and earth mentioned here are said to perish, and be like an old garment folded up and cast aside. We never make a worn out garment into a new one, but cast it aside, and change it for a new one; so if the literal earth and heaven are here referred to, we will not have it made over into a new one, but cast aside as worthless like a worn out garment to perish. The heaven and earth here must be the Christian system which will be exchanged for the kingdom of God in the millennial age.

A WORD TO INFIDELS

The word of God is a precious jewel. If it be hid, it is hid to him who is lost. The other day an infidel said to me, "If the Bible is true, why did God give us a Bible that no one can understand?" I claimed he did not, that the reason good honest church people did not understand God's plan to mankind was this: they listen to the preachers and leaders, and accept some man's point of view. I could not make the infidel see it that way, for he claimed that each and every one of these churches had scripture for their belief, and therefore it was only a difference of opinion —one having as much right as the other to his opinion.

On further investigation I find that there are hundreds who are stumbling at the same point. They see nothing but contradiction in the Bible, and they stand looking at the confusion, and either cannot or will not seek as for hidden jewels after these things themselves.

Who is to blame? The unbeliever says, God; but these thoughts have come to me: has any other book on earth been treated just like God's word? For example, this infidel I talked with could quote verse after verse in the Bible. After a couple of hours talk, I discovered that he had never himself read a line in the Bible in his life.

I next talked with another man the same week on the same point, and he puzzled me, for he seems to see so many of the things that God's people see and that are hid to the world. He attends all gatherings where the word is taught, asks questions, and has all respect for these subjects; yet he stops there. I wonder why? One reason was this: "well," hesaid, "what puzzles me while it looks alright to hear your side of it, which is all Bible yet there are others just as smart as you and who have just as much ground for their belief." And sad to say, he too stopped there. He did not say, "I will sift this thing to the bottom for myself." This thought came to me, where our Saviors repeatedly says, "Many are called, few are chosen."

Let me add my own little think here. I believe that this last named man has had a chance a God-given chance or a call. He has been lead far enough to see some of the things that Jesus speaks of when he says: "Blessed are the eyes which see the things that ye see. For I tell you that many prophets and kings have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them, and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them" (Luke 10:23-24). I believe the gift of eternal is like other pearls of great price—hard to find—not laying on top of the earth but hid. How many times does our Lord use the terms "seek," "strive," "search," etc. He also says: "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God." In 1 Cor. 2:7-8: "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory, which none of the princes of this world knew, for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." Oh my friends, don't stand looking at the rubbish and stones which cover the precious jewels expecting them to uncover themselves, and pile at your feet before you will believe they are even there! You have been given a chance; you have been called over to the spot where they are hid; you have seen enough of the vein of gold showing here and there to know the truth is there. Now what will you do: stop and let some other man take thy crown? or will you say, "No; God helping me, I will do my best; I will leave no stone unturned; I will obey as far as I know, and if I cannot find all now, I will do my best, and God will show more and more; he will keep his word; he will give me great treasurers."

The truth of the kingdom reminds me of a wonderful puzzle. For example: suppose we have a thousand pieces of card-board, all cut in different shapes, sizes and of different colors. Some children put them on the table before them, and they examine one and then another, and don't get any where. At last one says: "My mother says these pieces make dogs, so I will make a dog." The other one says; "No, my folks all say they make cows, so I will make a cow." They go to work: one gets three or four pieces that make part of a cow's body only; the pieces are not exactly the same color. The other one gets several pieces that might be a dog. They fit in partly only; the legs are not the same length; the rest of the pieces neither one know what to do with. Another boy watching the game says, "Oh pshaw! that bunch of stuff is no good; it is false because the puzzle is supposed to only make one kind of an animal; therefore I will wash my hands of the whole business." Another one says, "Let me try and see what it makes." He sits down, takes all the pieces. He doesn't have dogs or cows in his mind; he doesn't start in by throwing out all that doesn't agree with cow or dog: he starts at the beginning of the pile; he places to his left a piece that is plain and square; next he finds another piece that exactly corresponds in color and size with the first; he keeps going over the bunch again and again, and often the one which would not fit at first, just fits now. At last, by placing the pieces that way the boys looking on say: "Oh look! there is an outline of a horse." "So it is," another says; "see its legs are perfect—two of them—and there is part of the front ones, and enough of its body to show the size and outline perfectly." "Yes," but exclaimed the first boy, "that's alright, but these pieces right here made part of a cow, and as my mother knows better than you, I shall not look at your puzzle again!" The others lose interest and leave, but the boy at the table works patiently. At last he has enough to see the head and whole outline of the horse; but he does not have it finished yet: here and there are one or two little pieces he hasn't placed yet. "There," says the infidel, "you are just like the rest—found pieces there that contradict the horse—idea!"

But the boy who placed them together saw enough to know what the pieces will make when completed, even if he, not being the one that made the puzzle, did not know it all yet. The plan is there, the outline is there; and we who search can see it better every day. We don't have to throw away over half of the pieces. I heard two men talking last Sunday, one man who knew the truth, the other a Methodist. Our brother, after quoting twenty-five or thirty passages of plain "thus saith the Lords" on the state of man in death, showing him to be dead, he then asked the other man, "What do you do with all those (pieces of) scriptures?" He simply left them there, and immediately brought up one or two which seemed, on the face of them, to contradict the many, refusing to look at the sure word with its hundreds of examples and plain statements! Oh let us not deceive ourselves by thinking we can build on what others have learned. We must use the word, the plain" thus saith the Lord;" and if we must draw our own conclusions, let them be over the unknown points, not over the sure ones.

THE JEWISH SANHEDRIM

Sterling P. Groves

"Sanhedrim" is a Greek word meaning "assembly." It is the name by which that Jewish body is known which in its origin was the municipal council of Jerusalem, but extended no small influence over the Jews at large, even beyond Judea, in Damascus.

This great council of the Jews had the jurisdiction of all religious matters. It was called the "great Sanhedrim," "the Sanhedrim of seventy-one members," and "the great court of the Jews." The High Priest as head of the state was also head of this court, though without the power of life or death.

These seventy-one members were "scribes" or trained legal doctors of the Pharisees, counsellors or advisors-in-law, and other notables called "elders." Joseph of Arimathea was one of these seventy-one members, and the only one that "had not consented to the counsel and deed of them" (the other members). For in Luke 23:50, 51 we read: "And, behold there was a man named Joseph, a counseller; and he was a good man, and a just. The same had not consented to the counsel and deed of them; he was of Arimathea, a city of the Jews; who also waited for the Kingdom of God."

No wrong-doing ever springs up at once full-fledged. It is usually the gradual growth of certain habits which in their earlier stages were not regarded as of much importance, were not checked as actual sins, and which have thus crept insidiously into character and life, to develop at last into something which is fully recognised and censured as iniquity.

Obedience is the condition of "eternal salvation" (Heb. 5:8, 9). Baptism is called obedience (Rom. 6:17). Since obedience is necessary to eternal salvation, and since baptism is necessary to obedience, it follows that baptism is essential to final salvation.

"ALL CHILDREN OF GOD"

In speaking of the divine Fatherhood in the "Review," Washington Gladden, D.D., says: "If what Jesus tells us is true, that we are, every one of us, children of the Father in heaven; if this is the fact which we are to believe concerning ourselves; if it is not merely a figure of speech to enkindle our imagination, but the literal truth; if it is not a remote possibility to which saints attain but the actual condition into which every man is born, and from which no man can any more escape than he can escape from the fact that he is the son of his earthly parents—if all this is true, what a tremendous truth it is!"

"If all this is true," Mr. Gladden has certainly unearthed a tremendous truth. But has he correctly represented our Savior's teachings on this matter? We think not. Hear these words in Jno. 1.12: "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God (the right to become children of God (R. V.), even to them that believe on his name." If we are all actually sons of God; if this is not a "remote possibility to which saints attain," but the actual and present "condition into which every main is born," and from which not one of us can "escape" if we tried (!), in what different sense are we to "become" sons of God? If we are born sons of God as he says, then we are children of God without the possibility of "escape"—are sons "every one of us" inherently. From this standpoint John made a foolish exclamation when he said the Father had graciously "bestowed upon us" this manner of love, "that we should be called the sons of God" (1 Jno. 4:2).

"MANY CALLED; FEW CHOSEN"

The Gospel for All; Only Few Accept It

There are many ideas, conceptions and theories in the world which make void the law of God. Numerous expressions have recently forced themselves upon our attention which have a decided tendency to relegate the word of Jehovah to desuetude. Coming from those who claim to be enlightened in the gospel, they are not to be ignored as originating in the habitude of the ignorant. On the contrary, they appear in studied compositions, in discourses that are discantive, and in arguments that are deliberative, bespeaking that those who use them have accepted the dangerous upshot to which they lead.

We refer to such forms of expressions as these: "The gospel is only for the little flock;" "It was not meant for the world;" "In the next age it will be for the world as it is now for the little flock;" etc., etc. By reading Lk. 12:32, the only scripture text referred to, and that one is misapplied—the reader will notice that our Lord says to the "little flock," "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Not, as some wrest it, that the preaching of the gospel was limited to the little flock, but to them the kingdom is to be given. To preach the kingdom only to the little flock is one idea; to "give them the kingdom" is another idea. The message of the kingdom was preached to all; that only a "little flock" should get the kingdom promised in the message in no way circumscribes the universality of the message in its delivery.

Let us enquire at the oracles of God (Rom. 3:2): Was the gospel preached only to a few? Or was it preached to all and accepted by but few? Are the "few" and the little flock" of the scripture the ones preached to, or the ones saved by the preaching? The gospel was sent to "all the world" —not a little flock! (Matt. 28:18-20; Mk. 16:15-16; Lk. 24:46-47). "Ye shall be my witnesses," says Jesus to his apostles, "both in Jerusalem and in Judea"—and unto a "little flock?" Just to a few? No: "Unto the uttermost part of the earth" (Acts 1.8). The commandment to repent is intended for "all men," even for the ignorant Athenians (Acts 17:30). To the Gentiles Paul was sent to open their eyes (Acts 26:18). If modern perverters of the gospel had been with Paul they could have enlightened him wonderfully from their standpoint. They would have said: "Paul, you have the cart before the horse; Jesus did not intend the gospel for anybody but the 'little flock.' Shame on you for introducing it to the ignorant and idolatrous Athenians!" To this calumny Paul would doubtless answer that he was divinely commissioned to go to the Gentiles and "open their eyes" (Acts 26:18). But to this our erratic critics could complacently reply: "Hold on, Paul, you are wrong a bout that; you must not open their eyes; they are to be opened in the next age; go now to the 'little flock' and preach, and to them only. The gospel is not for the world now; it is only for the few." We think Paul has the best of the argument, and we take our stand with him. We have read in the Book that "many are called, but few are chosen" (Matt. 20:16); only in the books of men destitute of the truth do we find this statement reversed. Dear brethren and sisters, do not be "moved away from the hope of the gospel, which was preached to every creature under heaven (Col. 1:23). This says "every creature under heaven;" let the sacriligious say to "only a few." God's word says the called are many, the chosen but few (Mt. 20:16); let the presumptuous say, "the called are few—only the little flock." "Let God be true, but every man a liar" (Rom. 3:4).

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

I am not capable of writing an interesting letter, but so many of the older ones are dropping out it seems that the younger ones should take up the work. We will not have the old soldiers with us always to help us along with the Sunday Schools and writing encouraging letters to The Restitution. There is plenty of work for us all, so let us get busy, young folks, and see if we can write a few words for The Restitution. If nothing more, we can send an encouraging word to our busy editor. Perhaps it will help him along. If we could preach the gospel like Bro. Huggins, we would not hesitate a moment, but if we can tell it and don't it seems like we have buried our talent. We must put it forth as much as possible; we must not be ashamed of the gospel, for Christ says: "Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this sinful and adulterous generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels" (Mark 8:38). This is a plain statement, surely. Then let us not be ashamed, but do the best we can. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." May we be among the glorified when he comes to make up his jewels.

Your sister in hope,

QUINCY L. CARPENTER.

Dear Brethren:

I am dropping you a few lines to tell you how good "the dear old Restitution" keeps. I enjoy it very much, and want to thank all the dear ones who contribute to it.

I have been thinking lately of the widow's mite, and how I, and no doubt many like me, are ashamed of our mite. That set me thinking of just what a penny will do. Let me illustrate. I do not think many believers are possessors of much money, but all of us can give a few pennies. Take one penny a day for a year, and we have $3.65—not much to win souls for Christ, but if we isolated ones would unite together, and there are hundreds of us, and send an offering to the Isolate Committee, to be used in sending preachers to teach others, it would be hundreds of dollars instead of cents. Or say we put even a penny a week away in one year we would have 52 cents, and if we all united we could send it to Bro. Huggins to improve our little paper, and all of us would get the benefit.

I shall do it, and I wish all brethren and sisters who wish to join me in this work would drop me a postal. Remember the time to labor is now. Won't all you isolated ones join me in this work and see if we can not do our share. Please write at once—you might forget it. Start today saving your pennies, and see if a year from now we can not by uniting send a substantial gift to those dear ones who are handicapped in the work of spreading the truth by lack of funds.

Love to you all from the believers of Troy.

SISTER ADA ASHUTE.

THE RESTITUTION LINOGRAPH MACHINE

By S. Roxana Wince

We are to pray, to work, and we are also to give, to secure that linograph machine, and all this in faith that God will grant the earnest desire of our hearts. One-tenth of all our income belongs to the dear heavenly Father, besides the free will offerngs that each loving child delights to lay at his feet. Not a penny of the tithe money dare we appropriate to our own use—not even in the dire extremities of sickness and death. It is sacrilige, it is robbery.

Ten cents out of every dollar are to be carefully, sacredly set aside for the Lord's work and for the worthy poor.

I have practiced the tithing plan ever since my marriage to Mr. Wince, and have found it the only practical, feasible plan whereby to have something nearly always on hand to give when the Lord sends in a call—if not always, then the free-will offerings must supply the deficiency.

God blesses those who thus remember him. Mr. Wince used to say that his crops nearly always turned out far beyond his expectations. He never feared to give. "The liberal soul is made fat." Bring all your tithes into his store house and prove him therewith. The blessing will be poured out, such a blessing perchance as you have never dreamed of.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE ANNOUNCEMENT, ORGANIZATION AND REPORT

The officers of the Southern California organization of the Church of God are as follows:

President—Earl Taber, 1936 Montrose Ave., Los Angeles.

Vice-President—C. E. Hatch, Santa Ana, Calif.

Secretary and Treasurer—J. E. Anderson, Pomona, Calif.

Corresponding Secretary—Esther Richardson, 356 Loma Drive, Los Angeles.

At a business meeting of organization on May 7, all present expressed themselves heartily in favor of employing an evangelist and purchasing a tent. By this means places can be visited and work carried on that could not otherwise be accomplished.

Several pledges have already been received on the tent fund. Those that want to participate in this work, let us know it now.

Yours in the name of Christ Jesus.

E. RICHARDSON.

WHAT SHALL I DO TO BECOME A MEMBER OF THE CHURCH?

Dear Restitution:

As I look over your paper I find many different pieces about the scriptures. I find that the Bible tells us how to enter the kingdom (John 3:3, 5, 16). We must be baptized that we might be saved. Some believe in baptism, but are not baptized, therefore they cannot be saved (John 3:22, 23).

I am always glad when I see "the Dear Old Restitution." We must study and search the scriptures to find out what we must do to enter the kingdom (John 5:39). God says "The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live" (John 14:1, 2, 3; Acts 1:3, 5). We must try and do right, for the time of the end is near. The Bible says, "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, for they are they which testify of me." You must be on your guard, for you know not what hour your Lord doth come (Cor. 15:55, 56, 57, 58).

Mr. Anderson is a true and faithful worker in the Brush Creek church. I am not a member of the Church of God, but hope that I shall be soon. (Cor. 10:2, 16, 17; 7:38, 39, 40). The Bible tells us to be baptized that we may be saved. If not baptized we are not fulfilling the scriptures. God says the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power (Cor. 1:9, 14, 17). The scriptures saith, "Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed." "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" (Rom. 10:1, 4, 7; 46-3). Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through or Lord Jesus Christ (Rom. 1:5). I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world. We are workers of the Brush Creek church. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

A COMMUNICATION

From Brother John Parker

Dear Brother: I see that money is needed for a type setting machine. I am enclosing ten dollars to be applied for that purpose.

I think it is a good idea to keep your readers posted as to the financial needs of The Restitution. I believe that there is money enough in the church not only to finance the paper but relieve the wants of all our poor brethren, so kindly keep us posted as to what is wanted.

Your Brother in the race for life.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE DEAD

We believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he was raised from the dead. We also believe that if we are good and obedient we shall inherit eternal life. Else why does the Bible say so much on this subject? I Corinthians 15:50-55 says: "Now this I say brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. . . . Behold I shew you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall be all changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O, death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory?" There are many other passages like the one I have given; anyone can find them easily.

ETHEL M. HOWARD, 11 years old.

MARRIED

Mr. George F. Wiseley and Miss Rosa E. Roose were married at their home near Argos, Ind., on June 14, 1916, at 8 o'clock p. m., in the presence of near relatives and a few invited guests. After the ceremony there was served a fine supper in honor of the bride and bridgroom from a table spread with the bounties of life and tastefully lighted with burning tapers.

The contracting parties are excellent young people of this community. The bridegroom is the son of George Wiseley, a well-to-do and prominent farmer. He has been industriously engaged in fitting up a home for the newly establish household, and has thus displayed the sterling qualities of manhood that count for substantial citizenship.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Asa O. Roose, well and favorably known residents. She is a member of the Argos Church of God, and is actively engaged in the Sunday School, church and Berean work. She brings to the new home those qualities of womanhood that insure success.

May peace and prosperity attend them throughout their journey of life. May the blessings of heaven rest upon them and the good will of many friends comfort them.

MOTHERS, ATTENTION!

I would like to say a few words to the parents of little children, but more especially to the mothers, for they have the greater influence, since they have the constant care and training of the child until he starts to school, when the influence of the world begins.

We are apt to think little folks from two or three years up to ten or twelve can not understand much of the principles of the truths taught in that wonderful book, the Bible; but I find with my own babies that they can. As the oldest, a boy, first began for "a story, mama," I began to tell him in simple words the stories of the creation, the flood, of Joseph, of Moses, the coming of little baby Jesus and the wonderful things he taught as he grew up, of his death on the cross, etc., all through bringing out the truths wherein we differ from the world. Of course it began a little at a time, and now at five years, by my asking a few questions as we go along, he can tell those stories himself. Even little four-year-old Dorothy is lovingly looking for the return of Jesus to make her grandma and grandpa Mehrens alive, so they can never die any more. Each night they say a little prayer. It is hard to find a suitable one for little boys to say, but I will give the one mine say:

"Jesus, tender Shepherd, hear me,
Bless thy little lamb tonight;
Through the darkness be thou with me,
Keep me safe till morning light."

The baby, not yet two years old, tries to say it too, but since she can not talk she only makes a few sounds in the tones they use and then puts up her little lips for the kiss that always follows.

I only tell these things that they might help some mother to teach her little tots the truth before he world gets its hold on their little minds. We are apt to neglect these things; we say: "Wait until they are older," but we may sometimes wait too long, and the popular beliefs of the world get rooted into their minds, or the pleasures of the world get the upper hand of their lives, and they have no early teachings of the truth to remember.

Then too, we never know how long we may be with them to guide them in their life, and the sooner we begin the teaching of the truth to them the sooner it will become rooted and the more lasting the influence.

No doubt I am presuming to write an article of this kind, and perhaps the space in the paper should be left to more able writers; but we seem to neglect too much the teaching of the children We leave it all to the Sunday School teachers, if we are near enough to attend a Sunday School; if not, we may just let them drift along and get what ideas of life they can pick up. Let us guide the little lives in the straight and narrow way, and not let the world claim them from us in later years.

Yours in the blessed hope of the soon coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ,

BIRDIE I. KROGH.

ARGOS BIBLE CONFERENCE

The Church of God at Argos, Ind., will hold a Bible Conference August 9-13, 1916. A very interesting program is being prepared, and it is the desire of the brethren that as many as can will try and attend. The Bible Conference will be followed by a series of evangelistic meetings.

THE TRUE MIRROR FOR THE WORLD AND FOR THE CHURCH

"But we all, with open face, beholding as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the spirit of the Lord" (2 Cor. 3:18).

May the Lord open the reader's heart to see the depth in the above text. How, like Paul, my heart yearns for brethren and sisters who still camp under the terrors of Sinai, and look to the old ministration of death, written and engraven on stones, for their mirror or sin detector, instead of to the life, teachings, and spirit of Christ, as unfolded in the gospels, Epistles and Revelation, as the true sin convictor for the world, and the true standard of righteousness for new covenant children.

No decalogue is required to convince the world of sin, for the Holy Spirit shall convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment, when we hold up the life and spirit of Christ, as unfolded in the beatitudes, the Christian graces or the fruit of the spirit (Matt. 5; 2 Pet. 1; Gal. John 16:8). And no decalogue is needed as a law for the Christian, because "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" is his guide into all truth, his comfortor, his teacher, his source of power, his zeal as a child of God, his bond of union with Christ and with God, his wisdom, his righteousness, his santifier, his redemption, his life, and his perfect law and perfect mirror for sin and for righteousness.

Thus gospel ministers should not be ministers of the letter of any law, but of the spirit. Not ministers of the old covenant of fear, force and bondage, but of the new covenant of liberty, through a service of love to God and to man as the first fruit of the Holy and unselfish spirit of Christ within the soul.

Not that love is the new law, so much as a fruit of the Holy Spirit which is the law of Christians, out of which these fruits grow, such as, love, joy, peace, long suffering, goodness, meekness, faith, temperance, which life us above all dead-stone and dead-letter laws.

Not that we should just read the letter. Blessed are the humble, the meek, the merciful, the hungerers for righteousness, the pure in heart, the peacemakers, the persecuted for righteousness' sake, the lights of the world, the truthful, the golden rule observers, the lovers of God, the lovers of humanity, the lovers of enemies, the nonresiters of evil, the perfect, the prayerful, the almsgivers, those who hear these sayings, and do them, few of which are enjoined in the decalogue, but that by receiving the Holy Spirit, the Comfortor, we will possess this meekness, purity of heart, mercy, love and perfect character, which is impossible from any outward law like the decalogue, but possible to all who receive the spirit of Christ within. Only thus can we know the true peace and the true sabbath of faith, and only then can we say, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." "Not being without law to God, but under law to Christ." "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." "But their minds were blinded; for unto this day remaineth the same vail untaken away in the reading of the Old Covenant, which is done away in Christ. But even to this day when Moses is read, the vail is upon their heart. But when the heart shall turn to the Lord, the vail shall be taken away. Now the Lord is that spirit (or law within), and where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. "This new covenant law, the spirit of Christ within, is the law of the free woman and free son of the new covenant, in contrast to the old covenant law of bondage, represented by Hagar and her bond son Ismael.

Reader, if you will read prayerfully and without prejudice and without twisting, these scriptures, you will see the true rest and peace, and the glorious liberty of the children of God (2 Cor. 3; Gal. 4; Rom. 14; Col. 2; Heb. 4). Because the darkness and shadows of the old covenant and shadows of the old covenant are past, and the true light now shineth. "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." Oh come tothis true light and to this perfect living spirit law!

The whole letter of the old law, the ministration of death written and engraven on stones, its glory, and the vail that hides the greater glory of Christ, and the whole old covenant—like Hagar and her bondson, are "cast out," "done away," and "abolished;" and the Holy Spirit reflected from the life and teachings of Christ are the perfect mirror for both the world and for the church.

"THEY WILL BE STILL PRAISING THEE"

Psalm 119, 2nd and 3d verses

"Blessed are they that keep his testimonies and that seek him with the whole heart. They also do no iniquity. They walk in his ways." Give him whole-hearted service. People who do this (and they are those only who know his will) are certainly ever blessed of him even now. People who do this don't go by fits and starts. But like David they will have constant companionship, and like him, be able to say truly, "My heart and my flesh crieth out after the living God." And all such never miss any appointments they have made with the Lord willingly, because his service is their delight. And like Jesus said to the Jews, they have meat that the neglectful unwise virgins know not of, and no good thing is denied them, and they are neither barren nor unfruitful in either service or knowledge of him What is the desire of all such but to walk in his ways, close to him. His word hidden or stored in our hearts enables us to keep the narrow way and saves us from many slips. This is my experience, for just as I would do something I should not do, many times his blessed words come to the rescue; he that lacketh these words and the deeds they imply, Peter says, "is blind and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten then that he was once purged from his old sins." Spiritual blindness is the worst ailment that can befall any who were once enlightened, for they do not enjoy the blessings it is their privilege to do now, and are in imminent danger of losing their reward. Theirs is practically a dead hope, whose latter end is worse than the first. Blessed is the man or woman whose hope the Lord is. Why? Because this is a living hope built upon that rock which is Christ, and guided by the examples and precepts he has set before us, and stands for unity, and love and endurance. And it is life eternal to know Jesus our Lord (John 17:3). A getting to know God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent, is the only way to grow in his favor and be strengthened by his might in the inner man so as to be drawn to and have the heart's affections set on him. May this be each of our portions, as it is our privilege so to do, is my prayer.

BROTHER MOORE.

BUILDING PERMANENTLY

I think we may learn a valuable lesson from 1 Cor. 3:12-15. Paul here is telling the brethren how he has given them the foundation on which to build, and he gives them the option of using gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay or stubble, to continue the work with. It is very necessary for us to recognize at once that "Faith without works is dead" (James 2:17), and so apart from the assembling of ourselves together and loving the brethren and exhorting one another, it is necessary that we should reveal his precious promises to those who are willing to hear and learn. If we exert ourselves and teach the truth to those in darkness, we are using gold, silver, and precious stones in our building according to the amount of energy and sincerity we put into our works; but if we just rest in the belief that we have done all that is required of us by putting on his name, and then calmly wait for the consumation of his promises, then we are only building with wood, hay and stubble, and as the 13th verse says, "our works shall be tried by fire." We at once recognize that if they are of the nature of wood, hay or stubble they will soon be consumed and leave us void of good works. So let us not be weary of well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not (Gal. 6:9). Let us try to help others by spreading the knowledge of the gospel of the kingdom, which Jesus impressed upon his disciples to do when he left them. Let us keep in mind what the Master said, 'Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven")Matt. 5:16). So let us be diligent in spreading the truth: and if we pray fervently to this end, we may hope to receive his blessing, for James 5:16 says the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 26); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58), the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17) and belief in the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13: 3), and obedience by baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31). VOLUME 68 AKRON, O., JULY 11, 1916 NUMBER 32

The Name

Tom: "Have you ever thought much of the one name, John?"

John: "No, I can't say that I have. Why?"

Tom: "In Acts 4:10-12 we find these words: Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, who God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand here before you whole. This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

John: "But, I don't understand just what Peter means, for I have been taught that there were three names by which we are saved."

Tom: "Ah, that is the trouble; the creeds have taught many things which are not taught in the Word of God."

John: "But in Matthew 28:19 Jesus commands us to be baptized in three names, does he not?"

Tom: "It is so understood by some people, but if you will look closely you will see that the name is singular: 'Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name (one name) of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.' You see only one name is mentioned."

John: "But it says 'in the name of Father, and of Holy Ghost.' "

Tom: " 'Father' is not a name, but a title. And in John 5:43 we find these words: 'I am come in my Father's Name, and ye received me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive.' You will see by this verse that Jesus himself came in the one name, and that is the reason they would not receive him."

John: "True, but how do you explain the phrase, 'Unto the Holy Ghost'?"

Tom: "In John 14:26 we find the key: 'But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name (one name), he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.' Here you see the Holy Ghost was sent in the one name, not three."

John: "I must confess that the Bible seems to set forth only one name, but there is one thing I don't fully understand."

Tom: "What is that?"

Joohn: "If Matthew 28:19 does not support triune immersion, where do we find any authority in God's Word for three dips?"

Tom: "We can not find any authority in the Bible for triune immersion."

John: "This is a serious matter, for as you know, I was baptized three times; once in the Father, once in the Son, and once in the Holy Ghost. And in Eph. 4:5 we find that there is one baptism. Now, I thought the three dips made the one baptism."

Tom: "Does three days make one day? As to your three dips making one baptism, if that is true, then your body was never baptized as it was immersed only once. So you are in the position of having your head baptized and your body only one-third baptized."

John: "I never thought of that, but it seems that if dipping the head three times makes one baptism, then the whole body should be dipped three times."

Tom: "There is another thing that I would like to have you consider in connection with this subject, and that is, when you were dipped into the Father, were you in God and out of Christ until you were dipped the second time—into Christ?"

John: "Yes, I suppose there was a second or two that I was in the Father before I got into the Son."

Tom: "Very well. Now, let's turn to John 15:6: 'Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: No man cometh to the Father but by me.' Now, John, in view of this statement, how did you get into the Father before you got into the Way, Jesus?"

John: "I must confess that I don't know, and since you mentioned John 14:6 I remember that Paul says in Heb. 10:19, 20: 'Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh.' And in John 10:9, Jesus says, 'I am the door.' Now, is it possible that I have made a mistake and ignored Christ, the way, the door, and tried to come into God first? However, I have been told that triune immersion was the one mode of baptism known in Apostolic days; is that true, Tom?"

Tom: "No. Baptism is defined by Paul as a burial (Rom. 6:4; Col. 2:12). Now, in burial we do not cover the head three times, neither do we bury with the face down. In Rom. 6:5 baptism is spoken of as a planting in the likeness of Christ's death."

[illegible]

John: "True, but in John 19:30 it says he bowed his head and gave up the Ghost. Now, as we are baptized in the likeness of his death, it seems to me that we should go down in water and bow our heads forward."

Tom: "Baptism represents the death and burial of Christ, also his resurrection. John 19:30 refers to his dying, but death and burial come after the act of dying is finished. As we go down into the water we bury the old man of sin, and as we come up out of the water the new man is born of water to walk in newness of life" (John 3:5; Rom. 6:1-8).

John: "Well, it is possible that if we go down forward and are born backward that we shall come up backward in the resurrection? It does seem to me that some people after baptism do go backward and not forward. Well, Tom, I must be going now, but I want to thank you very much for this lesson, and I would like to come again next Wednesday evening and continue the subject. I am anxious to learn the truth; for I want to be free from sin and death."

Tom: "John, I am glad to hear you say that, and I promise you that I will do all I can to help you."

John: "Thank you, Tom, and good-bye."

Tom: "Good-bye, John, and may God bless you."

WHAT IS NECESSARY TO BECOME A FOLLOWER OF JESUS?

There are various answers to this important question, but what saith the scriptures in regard to it? We have one answer in John 1:12, "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."

The importance of believing on the name of Jesus is apparent from Acts 4:12: "There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." The name Jesus was given for something more than mere distinction. His mother was authorized, before his birth, to "Call his name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:33). The name Jesus here signifies that he would be the Son of the Highest, that he should have the throne of David, and reign over the house of Jacob forever and of his kingdom there should be no end. An intelligent belief in the name of Jesus includes a knowledge of all these things.

There is historical evidence to bear out this fact in Acts 8:12: "When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women." When Paul told the Philippian jailor to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ to be saved, he did not mean to merely give mental assent to the fact that there was such an one who could save him. Oh no! That alone would never save him or any one else, but they "spake unto him the word of the Lord." The term "Christ" is added to the name Jesus here, which means "anointed one," or appointed to the office of king, priest or prophet. Robert Young, who is considered good authority by all Biblical students, says of the term Christ, "The official appellation of the long promised and expected Savior, denoting his kingly authority."

Such was the doctrine taught by the followers of Jesus, and to enroll under his standard, we must believe these teachings. A belief on the name of Jesus worthy of the name of faith, must include a knowledge of what the prophets wrote concerning him. That was the foundation upon which the Ephesian church was built. It is the only sure foundation for the quicksand of human philosophy, but the rock remains. If you desire to build for time and eternity you must build upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone.

Oh! how the prophets are neglected in these days! How sad to see men formulating rules which they consider to be sufficient for salvation purposes, and the prophets have no voice in them. Paul gives no quarters to such teaching, and for fear some of the Ephesians should forget the true foundation and thus fall away, he exhorts them to remember their former condition and contrasts it with their present one: "At that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God" (Eph. 2:12). I wish you to notice the things of which they were ignorant: "The commonwealth of Israel and the covenants of promise;" also the consequence of this ignorance, hopeless and godless. Now I ask you, are these things insisted upon by those who say belief in the Lord Jesus Christ is sufficient? You know they are not. There is good reason, for they are not understood. It may sound strange to some to assert that if a man has no knowledge of the commonwealth of Israel, he is without Christ, without hope and without God. But when it has been pointed out that Jesus has been anointed of God to sit upon David's throne and reign over the house of Jacob forever, then a very important connection is seen to exist between the commonwealth of Israel and salvation.

Having shown what is necessary to believe, the next step is repentance or conversion. We are at variance with those around us concerning the word "repentance." We often hear that it is sorrow for sin, but the apostle informs us that godly sorrow worketh repentance. There is a vast difference between those expressions. The change of mind produced by godly sorrow leadeth to repentance.

When Peter preached that God had made Jesus both Lord and Christ, those who heard him were pricked in their hearts. Their minds were changed. The word spoken produced godly sorrow, and they cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Then Peter said, "repent," change your mind and conduct toward him whom ye have crucified, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus, for the remission of sins (Acts 2:38). In this case, Peter was speaking to Jews who knew what God had revealed through the prophets concerning the kingdom of God. But what would he say to Gentiles who were ignorant of the plans and purposes of God? Happily a case of that nature has been recorded. There was a man in Caesarea called Cornelius, a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people and prayed to God always. A man of that character is held in admiration and is usually considered to be in a saved state. But was he? Listen to what occurred to him. An angel appeared unto him, and when he had looked upon him, he was afraid and said, "What is it, Lord? and he said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God. Now send men to Joppa for one whose surname is Peter. He shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do." When they met, Peter spoke words unto him, words whereby he and all his house should be saved. They were the words which God sent unto the children of Israel as spoken by the prophets. While Peter spake these words the Holy Spirit came upon them, and he commanded them to be baptized into the name of Jesus.

This brings us to the third division of our subject, viz: baptism often styled the "obedience of faith." They that gladly received the word were baptized; immersed in water.

Those who did so showed by their works that they repented and were anxious to obtain what was promised by becoming obedient to it. The change is thus expressed by Paul in the third of Galatians: "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Therefore in submission to baptism we put on the name of the Lord Jesus Christ: we become connected with him, and acquire rights and privileges which, by God's permission, will bring forth fruits in the appointed time, for the promise reads, "If ye are Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise."

Again we have another promise in relation of the effect of baptism: "As many of you as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death, therefore being buried with him by baptism unto death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection."

We have briefly outlined the way of salvation as apostolically delivered, and we, in Christ's stead, entreat men to be reconciled to God. If you believe these things and are willing to change your conduct and attitude by coming out from among those who defile the name of Jesus by teaching for doctrine the commandments of men; if you can gladly bear the reproach of the name of Jesus in this sinful and perverse generation—for it is a reproach and always will be, until he comes to take away the rebuke of his people—if you can take up with the sect that is everywhere spoken against, and suffer reproach for the name of Christ, you are eligible to become a candidate for the Kingdom of God. Salvation is a precious boon; it is exaltation from weakness to power; it is a changing of these mortal bodies to immortality; it is transmutation of these frail bodies of animal tissue to an incorruptable spirit body; it is being made like unto our blessed Lord and beloved Christ. Oh, let us accept the conditions, live Godly so as to be accepted of Jesus when he comes to set up his kingdom. W. S. TOMLINSON.

Part two, concluding the article on "The True Nature of Baptism," especially for the consideration of quasi-Brother Campbell, is crowded out this week but will appear so soon as space permits.

I MUST PRAY DIFFERENTLY

Some time ago I felt strongly the necessity of praying more. Now I feel that I must not only pray more, but differently; and that my praying will not answer any good purpose, unless I also pray differently. I find that quality is to be considered in praying as well as quantity; and, indeed, the former more than the latter. We learn from Isaiah, chapter 1, that it is possible to make many prayers, or to multiply prayer, as it is in the margin, and yet not be heard. The scribes and Pharisees made long prayers, but their much praying availed them nothing; while the single short petition of the publican was effectual to change his entire prospects for eternity. It was because it was prayer of the right kind. It is a great error to suppose that we shall be heard for our much speaking. Let me, however, say, that while length is not by itself any recommendation of prayer, yet we have the highest and best authority for continuing a long time in prayer. We know who it was that, "rising up a great while before day," departed into solitary place, and there prayed: and of whom it is recorded in another place, that he "continued all night in prayer to God." Certainly they should spend a great deal of time in prayer, who are instructed to "pray without ceasing." It is in the social and public worship of God that long prayers are out of place.

But to return from this digression. I must pray differently; and I will tell you one thing which has led me to thinks so. I find that I do not pray effecually. It may be the experience of others, as well as of myself. I do not obtain what I ask; and that though I ask for the right sort of things. If I asked for temporal good, and did not receive it, I should know how to account for it. I should conclude that I was denied in mercy; and that my prayer, though not answered in kind, was answered in better kind. But I pray for spiritual blessing—for what is inherently and under all circumstances good, and do not obtain it. How is this? There is no fault in the hearer of prayer—no unfaithfulness in God. The fault must be in the offerer. I do not pray right. And since there is no use in asking without obtaining, the conclusion is that I must pray differently.

I find, moreover, that I do not pray as they did in old time whose prayers were so signally answered. When I compare my prayers with those of the patriarchs, especially with that of Jacob—and with the prayers of the prophets, those for instance, of Elijah and Daniel; when I compare my manner of making suit to the Savior, with the appeals made to him by the blind men, and by the woman of Canaan; and above all, when I lay my prayers alongside of his, who "offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and ters," I perceive such a dissimilarity, that I thence conclude I must pray differently.

I find also that I do not urge my suits to God as I do those which I have sometimes occasion to make to men. I am wiser as a child of this world, than I am as one of the children of light. When I want to carry a point with a human power, I find that I take more pains and am more intent upon it, and use greater vigilance and effort, than when I want to gain something of God. It is clear, then, that I must alter and reform my prayers. I must pray differently.

But in what respects; how differently?

1. I must not speak to God at a distance. I must draw near to him. Nor that alone. I must stir myself up to take hold of him (Isaiah 64:7). Yea, I must take hold of his strength, that I may make peace with him (Isaiah 27:5). I have been satisfied with approaching God. I must, as it were, apprehend him.

2. I must not only take hold of God in prayer but I must hold fast to him, and not let him go except he bless me. So Jacob did. There were two important ingredients in his prayer—faith and perseverance. By the one he took hold of God; by the other he held fast to him till the blessing was obtained.

3. I must be more affected by the subjects about which I pray. I must join tears to my prayers. Prayers and tears used to go together much more than they do now. Hosea says that Jacob "went and made supplication." Hannah went while she prayed. So did Nehemiah, and David and Hezekiah; and God, in granting the request of the last mentioned, uses this language: "I have head thy prayer, I have seen thy tears." But a greater than all these is here. Jesus offered up prayers "with strong crying and tears." Some think it unmanly to weep. I do not know how that may be; but I know it is not un-Christian. It is thought by some, that men must have been more addicted to tears then than they are now; but is is my opinion that they felt more, and that is the reason they wept more. Now I must feel so as to weep; not by constraint, but in spite of myself. I must be so affected, that God shall see my tears as well as hear my voice: and in order to being so affected, I must meditate. It was while David mused that the fire burned; and then he spoke with his tongue in the language of prayer. And we know that which melted his heart effected his eye: for in the same psalm, the thirty-ninth, he says, "Hold not thy peace at my tears."

4. There are other accompaniments of prayer which I must not omit. Nehemiah not only wept and prayed, but also mourned, and fasted, and made confession. Why should not I do the same?

5. I must plead as well as pray. My prayers must be more of the nature of arguments—and I must make greater use than I have ever done of certain pleas There is one derived from the character of God "For thy name's same, pardon mine iniquity. Have mercy on me according to thy loving kindness." Another is derived from the promises of God. "Hath he said, and shall he not do it: or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?" Another is drawn from the past doings of God. "I will remember the years of the right hand of the Most High. I will remember the works of the Lord. Surely I will remember thy wonders of old." I must also plead Christ more in my prayers. The argument is drawn out to our hands by Paul: "He that spared not his own Son: * * * how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?"

6. But again, I must cry unto the Lord. Crying expresses more than praying. It expresses earnest, fervent prayer. This is what they all used to do. They cried to God. The psalmist says: "I cried with my whole heart." I must cry with my whole heart—yea, mightily, as even the Ninevites did, or else those heathen will rise up in the judgment and condemn me.

7. I must seek the Lord in prayer, feeling as did Job when he said: "O, that I knew where I might find him, that I might come even to his seat!" And this I must do, as Judah is once said to have done, with my "whole desire" Yea, I must search for him with all my heart. I must even p our out my heart before him, as the psalmist, on one occasion, exhorts. I must "keep not silence, and give him no rest," as Isaiah directs; "night and day praying exceedingly," as Paul says he did.—W. N

OUR LINOTYPE AND THE BARREN FIG TREE

By S. Roxana Wince

You have read about the barren fig tree, that was made a symbol by our Savior of the unfruitful Jewish nation? There were many such trees in the fig orchards of Palestine when Mr. William Thompson visited that land in 1857. He spent twenty-five years there. The fig tree must be carefully tended all the while, or it will not bear, or if it does, and the fruit grows to full size, it will fall off and shrivel up before ripening. Every stone must be hauled away, the ground must be frequently manured, and be dug over and over again.

There is an early variety of fig, that ripens as early as May, one hundred and fifty miles north of Jerusalem, and this kind would ripen much before that time "in the warm, sheltered ravines of Olivet." The fruit is green colored. It was doubtless this kind of a fig tree that Jesus went to, and found nothing on but leaves. There ought to have been fruit, for the figs come before and with the leaves.

The show of leaves would be a promise of fruit, even if "the time of figs had not yet come." —meaning the ordinary season for gathering the delicious products of the fig orchards; that time would come later, and would last until nearly October.

But what has the Barren Fig Tree, to do with our prospective linotype machine? very much. We are fig trees in God's great orchard. We must have plenty of rich food for enriching the ground of our minds or we shall bear no figs. We must be just as jealously cared for, as the fig trees of the Orient. The Restitution is God's spade whereby some of this digging must be done. We shall die spiritually, and literally if the soil of our hearts is not constantly stirred.

And of what use is a dead Christian? He may not seem to be dead; he may have plenty of the rich, glossy leaves of profession, but if he bear no fruit, he is but a cumberer of the ground. And how can we bear fruit—i. e., bring others into the fold, if we do not give our money, so the gospel message can go to them? This is the test of our love. If we do not give, we do not love. What if Jesus comes and finds no fruit on us? Will we not be accursed?

There are some of you, my dear brethren, who could, without any help from others, buy a linotype, and donate it to the paper, with all its fixtures. You will certainly help us. I cannot doubt your love, nor that that love will compel you to help. If you do not give, just that much, and more will be taken from you. We dare not rob God. It is too costly a business. We do it at our peril. Remember his own words—"Lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." We cannot restrain his hand. I speak plainly, because, I dare not do otherwise.

Remarks

During the month of May we held some very interesting meetings in Omaha and Avery, also Kennard. After we had baptized some of our class at the Y. M. C. A., they closed the door against us by the request of some of the ministers. Instead of meeting with us and showing us we were wrong, they sneaked down and asked the secretary to close us out. A brave set were they! Flee when they see the wolf coming!! Instead of standing by their flocks and keeping the wolves away or fighting them back, they build a high fence around them so the wolves cannot get to them. How much easier, that is, if some one else will build the fence! They won't lift the burden with one of their little gers.

We are now at Phoenix having a very interesting meeting—a splendid turn out and good interest. Up to date three have taken a stand for the truth. We will give a full report of results in our next report. We go from here to Hemmyford.

HUMAN TRADITION VERSUS THE TRUTH

How prevalent among professing Christians are unsciptural ideas, giving rise in turn to unscriptural phraseology! It is common for men to speak of Christ's spiritual reign, and of his mediatorial kingdom. Some affirm that his kingdom is set up in the heart—others, that the church is his kingdom, and believers the subjects over whom he reigns. Some have the idea that he commenced his reign when he commenced his ministry—others, that his kingdom was set up on the day of Pentecost; while again, others teach that he has two kingdoms; one spiritual in which he is now exercising dominion as a king—the other literal, in which he will exercise his regal power as a veritable king, when he comes in his glory. This jargon savors of Babel, and shows that there is no unity of sentiment amongst them; and that when they have the teachings of the word of God, they are like a ship on the ocean, without rudder and compass, tossed on the waves, and driven about by every wind that blows.

The ideas of a spiritual king—a spiritual reign and a mediatorial kingdom are pure humanisms. Concerning them the whole volume of inspiration is silent as the grace. Nor do I know of a single passage of scripture which is calculated to give rise to such ideas. They are evidently some of the wares of mystical Babylon, and akin to the lie of the old serpent, and of the same category as the doctrine of the immortality of the soul.

The scriptures teach that the kingdom of God shall be established on the earth, and that it shall go on increasing until it fills the earth; or, in the graphic language of the prophet Daniel, until it has "broken in pieces and consumed all other kingdoms." In view of this, the word of inspiration speaks wisely to the powers that be, saying: "Be wise, therefore, O ye kings, be instructed ye judges (rulers) of the earth; kiss the son lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way" (Psa. 2).

But anti-Christ, both Papal and Protestant, steps in between God's word and the parties addressed, and in effect says: "Be not afraid, O ye kings; be not alarmed, ye rulers of the nations, as though your thrones shall be overthrown and your kingdoms given to another; for God's kingdom being only spiritual, will not interfere with your thrones, nor take away your dominions." Hence there is no expectation on the part of the powers that be that the kingdom which the God of heaven is about to establish on the earth, will interfere with and overturn all their thrones and kingdoms; but in their carnal security they are plotting and planning as though their thrones were to stand forever. Thus the direct tendency of this pernicious doctrine is, to mislead princes and people and make the truth of God of no effect.—Unknown.

WHO ARE THE RIGHTEOUS

spoken of in Matt. 25th chapter: Are they the nations or the saints? Such is a query put to the editor by a perplexed writer. The question is exhaustively treated in "The Bible: Its Principles and Texts," page 174. Our writer has read this exposition, yet he says he is not convinced that the saints figure in the scene of Matt. 25, because "the righteous" there spoken ot are addressed as if they were a different class from the saints—"my brethren." Briefly, then, for his benefit, and the benefit of others that are more or less confused on this scripture, we will explain the question again.

The query is easily settled by considering what is said to them in the words, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (ver. 34). Now who are to "inherit" the Kingdom? Let him who will say "The Jews;" James, an inspired and infallible Bible writer, gives a different version of the matter. Hear him: "Hath not God chosen"—the Jews, James? "The poor of this world," he says, "rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised"—to the Jews, James? "Them that love him?" (Jas. 2:5). The kingdom is to be given to "the little flock" (Luke 12:32). Read the first chapter of Peter's second epistle and you will find the conditions of an entrance into the kingdom fully explained. None can "inherit the kingdom," be they Jew or Gentile, unless they are "rich in faith," "love him" and "do these things." Therefore, those invited in Matt. 25:34 to "inherit the kingdom" must be the saints.

"But," says the objector, "how come they to be described as 'all nations?'" Because, brother, up to the time when Christ was speaking only one nation had been visited with the message of the kingdom; afterwards, this message was extended to "all nations" (Mark 16:15; Col. 1:6; Acts 1:8). Therefore those who "inherit the kingdom" will be from "all nations," redeemed "out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation" (Rev. 5:9).

"But if 'the righteous' are the saints," it is further objected, "why are they addressed as if the saints were another class, called 'my brethren?' (ver. 40)." The answer is, that the good deeds done to Christ by those glorified with him. could not well be expressed without speaking as if they themselves were another class. Let those who glory in seeing "distinctions" where there are none, and who are determined to make a "point" in favor of the Jews, even if they have to deny the saints the kingdom of God to save the "point," let them, we say, notice the following illustrations of our position: One of the qualifications of a widow to be supported is, that she has "washed the saints' feet" (1 Tim. 5:10). Celebrities, with telescopic vision, pretending to see "distinctions" where your brethren are blind: Was this widow who washed the saints' feet, a saint? John loved Gaius "in the truth." He surely then, was a saint, yet John writes to him, "Beloved, whatever thou dost to the brethren" (3 John 5). Was gaius, then, not one of "the brethren?" Similiar instances could be multiplied indefinitely. These two will suffice to show that the righteous, though commended for what they did to "one of the least" of Christ's brethren, were themselves of those brethren.

GOD'S LAW OUR DELIGHT AND MEDITATION

If the man is "blessed" (v. 1) who walks not in the counsel of the ungodly it follows as a fair inference that he is cursed who does follow ungodly counsel. Ungodliness is the source of all sin. Overt sins are often denounced with asperity while lustration is tolerated and indulged. An apt illustration of what we mean—see the divorce evil. Often divorce is held up to detestation, while the sins which create divorce are "winked at" (Acts 27:30). To represent divorce as a great evil is a mistake; the sins committed before the divorce was wanted or sought is the "great transgression" (Psa. 19:13). Divorce is only a public expression of sins committed previously. These sins are primary; and if it were not for them divorce litigation would never happen. To make a great outcry against divorce is folly. To remove a tree by breaking off its twigs and branches is a failure. To effectually remove it you must uproot it. So an irreligious, ungodly way of thinking expresses itself altimately in conduct, action, life. A man can not think wrong and live right.

The Bible has "thou shalts" as well as "thou shalt nots." After telling us in this Psalm what the "blessed" man does not do, David immediately goes on to tell us what he does do. Righteousness isn't passive; it is right doing. "He that doeth righteousness is righteous" (1 John 3:7). Hence for a man to be righteous he must not only obey the "thou shalts," but the "thou shalt nots" as well. He must not walk in the counsel of the ungodly, or stand in the way of sinners, or sit in the seat of the scornful. He must not do these things; but he should "delight in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night" (Psa. 1:2).

Taking up in seriatim order salient thoughts in this passage, we proceed to make a few remarks upon

1. "The law of the Lord."

The word "law," from torah, means "law, direction" (Young's Concordance). A law is a code of rules to govern human action. The law tells us with authority what to do, and what not to do; it gives "direction" to our action. By the law of the Lord, then, we understand David means all of God's word is then written, but particularly the Pentateuch (Psa. 119:1, 55, 87). The Bible is emphatically the "law of the Lord." "God is a spirit" (John 4:24). As the "Lord" is a "spirit," "the law of the Lord" is "the law of the spirit" (Rom. 8:2). The spirit, you see, has formulated a "law," and those who are "after the spirit" (v. 4) mind "the things of the spirit" (v. 5). They have received the spirit of adoption (v. 15), and have become "spiritually minded" (v. 6), and are "led by the spirit of God" (v. 14), that is, by the "law" which the spirit has revealed. To talk about being full of the spirit, led of the spirit, etc., without obeying the "law" which the spirit has formulated, is to try to reach an end without means to obtain it.

2. "His delight is in the law of the Lord," "the spirit" (2 Cor. 3:18). The word "delight" (chephets) means "pleasure, desire." The delight or pleasure a saint has for the law of God should be as strong as God's desire is toward the excellent of the earth "in whom is all my delight," says he (Psa. 16:3). If the man of God's fevor delights thus in the revelation of his spirit it is because there is a right relation of his will and affections to the "law of the Lord." A man can not delight in a law he knows nothing about. He may know the law, still he will not delight in it unless he loves it. God's people must not merely read the Bible as a perfunctory duty; they must catch the spirit of David and say: "Make me to go in the path of they commandments; for therein do I delight" (Ps. 119:35). "I will delight myself in they commandments, which I have loved" (v. 47). In this tevt the reader will notice that delight in the commandments resulted from love of them. "Unless thy law had been my delight I should have perished in mine affliction" (v. 82). Modern so-called Christians, puissant in profession, tell us that they "do not know much about the Bible and hardly ever read it;" that "it can not be understood anyway," etc. They have no understanding, delight or love for God's holy word. Sometimes they exult in the Holy Ghost, claim they have "got" it, but as for the law which the spirit has revealed for them to believe and live by, of this they know nothing and care less. "What fools these mortals be."

3. "In his law doth he meditate day and night." To meditate means to think, ruminate. We become like our thoughts (Prov. 23:7). If we ever become spiritually minded and Godlike we must remember him upon our bed, and meditate on him "in the night watches" (Psa. 63:6). We can, by musing on the works of God's hands, brighten this lurid, evil world (Psa. 143:5) and get an uplift to our souls. We must, if we are punctilious Christians, love God's law, and meditate upon it (Psa. 119:97). David had more understanding than all his teachers, for this reason: "Thy testimonies are my meditation" (v. 99). By considering what God says he gives us "understanding in all things" (2 Tim. 2:7). This is the way, dear reader, and the only way to get divine instruction.

4. "Day and night." See Jos. 1:8. To meditate in God's law "day and night" means to do it continually. The scriptures are to be searched (John 5:3) and read (Isa. 34:16) daily (Acts 17:11). They are to be thought about and talked of during the day, as we sit in our homes, or walk by the way; and when we lie down at night we must still think of God and his holy word (Deut. 6:7; Psa. 119:55). We do not think it too much trouble to eat our meals three times a day. But how often we try to live a week or a month without eating divine pabulum! The manna was gathered daily, the Sabbath excepted (Ex. 16:26). It was typical of Christ, the true bread, and the words of spirit which he uttered (John 6:51, 63). God's word must be found and eaten daily, like the manna, if we expect that joy and rejoicing of heart promised (Jer. 15:16). If the word dwells in us richly (Col. 3:16), how facile and happy we are; and with what heavenly delight do we meditate in the holy word! We can not see a vineyard without thinking of the good lesson Christ gave us in

John 15. We can not look at a hen and her brood without Matt. 23:37 rushing into the mind. Everything, from morning till night, speaks to us in thunder tones the truths of God's word, if we only have it in our hearts (Psa. 119:115). But apostate Christendom renders nugatory the entire word of God. God's law they do not understand, obey, delight in, meditate upon, love or care for. They claim the holy ghost converts, leads, sanctifies and saves them without the word; it is, therefore, to them a dead letter, an obsolete book.

"Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

COMMUNICATIONS

From Brother R. A. Frazier

Let me emphasize what E. W. Knapp says under "Heroism" in the Restitution of June 6th. Having had nearly three decades of experience as a teacher in the public schools, I am convinced that most of the demeanors committed and bad habits contracted were prompted by older or more mature pupils; and the "coward" and "dare" arguments were most in use. Many grown men can now thank their teacher who nipped the "dare" business in the bud, and saved them from the evils of the tobacco habit.

If at the close of Sunday School and before beginning his sermon you heard a minister of the gospel say that he had been requested to preach against the use of tobacco, but had refused as Jesus had never preached against it, also proceeded to quote Mat. 15:11; Acts 10:14, 15, (seemingly in justification of its use), what would you say? What think you, brethren?

Query: Why did Jesus never speak of tobacco?

From Brother D. C. Robison

Bro. Huggins: The Church of God in Salem, Ohio, was made to rejoice over the addition of one more worthy person to their number. On Saturday evening, June 17th, we met at the home of Brother and Sister Coy and assisted Mrs. Catherin Godward to put on the name of the Lord Jesus in baptism. Sister Godward is Sister Coy's mother. She is 74 years of age and the mother of twelve children. She has worshipped a number of years with the Presbyterian people. She had never heard of the precious truths of the gospel until Sister Coy began to learn the truth. As she learned, she began to teach it to others. Hers is a pure missionary spirit. Her husband, son Ralph and mother have been added through her efforts in the teaching of the gospel. Others are being interested through her efforts. Sister Godward rejoices over the opportunity given her to learn the gospel of Christ which Paul says "Is the power of God unto salvation unto everyone that believes." She is a lover of good literature, and will find in the Bible much wholesome food. May the Lord bless and keep her unto the end, is the prayer of the little band that worships here. Your brother in Christian love.

HOW WORLDLY POWER OPPOSES GOD

A few days ago there appeared an editorial in one of our Cleveland papers entitled "The Birth of a Giant," which apparently signifies another unit toward the fulfillment of prophecy in reference to the "last days when perilous times shall come" (2 Tim. 3:1).

This wonderful creation of man's financial genius is called the "American International Corporation," and is designed to do business in the heavens above, the earth below and the waters under the earth—literally so." These are the editor's own words, and if we refer to Ezek. 20:4 we find these words represent graven images or idols which we are forbidden to make unto ourselves, and so these financiers are pure and simple idolators.

It is another colossal instance of the mad rush for wealth and power, to the utter oblivion of God and salvation. This A. I. C. is to be dominated by men of gigantic financial resources, and is to operate all over the earth, which means that if it is successful it will concentrate the wealth of the world in a few hands and give them unlimited power. It is suggested that this will help to bring about a world unity. When we hear of such plans as these it makes us realize more and more the wealth of wisdom in the word of God, for surely God has made foolish the wisdom of the world (1 Cor. 1:20).

The rich man of today is so satiated with the luxuries of this life that he has to strive for the only thing left that he can obtain, and that is power, which is coveted to the utter exclusion of everything else. How wonderfully true are the words of the Psalmist: "Behold, there are the ungodly who prosper in the world; they increase in riches" (read Ps. 73:3-12). What a terrible state of mind to be in, and yet riches and power are the desire of most ambitious worldly people; if they could only realize that the word of God says: "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid" (Isa. 29:14). But, no! they plunge on blindfolded, for everyone that doeth evil hateth the light (John 3:20), and quite oblivious to this fact, these very men who are powerful in the world today are working out God's plans, and all their pride, genius and energy are leading them on to destruction. Remember what the prophet said: "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches" (Jer. 9:23). They treat God with scorn and follow their own selfish desires, but what a terrible time will be theirs at the final consummation when Jesus returns! Listen: "And the kings of the earth, and the great men and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and the rocks of the mountains, and said to the mountains and rocks: "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand" (Rev. 6:15-17)? What a terrible reward for a life spent in vain endeavor! Surely it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God (Heb. 10:31).

We see, then, that even the daily newspaper can teach us a lesson, to beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth (Luke 12:15). How much, therefore, should we give thanks to God that we are now not of this world, but have been privileged to take on his name "in whom we have redemption through his blood ,the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace" (Eph. 1:7). This glorious blessing sustains us when we look upon the quagmire of sin and strife that surrounds us. Let us all press toward the mark of the prize of the hight calling of God in Christ Jesus (Phil 3:14), and live in the blessed hope of being associated with him when he shall rule the earth in righteousness.

FRIENDS OF JESUS

Bessie Nicholls

In John 15:15 we read: "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." These are the words of Jesus. Who does he refer to here as his friends? Why, those who have believed and obeyed the word of God. We then are friends of Jesus if we do whatsoever he commands us. Who is a friend? A friend is a person whom we love and whom we place a great deal of confidence in. A person whom we can trust. We see from this, then, that Jesus loves us for he calls us his friends in this 14th verse of the 15th chapter of John. How do we know that he loves us? The answer is found in the 13th verse of this same chapter: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Jesus we know laid down his life for all who are willing to believe and obey the gospel. We have complied with this injunction, therefore Jesus calls us his friends. "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you; continue ye in my love" (John 15:9). It pays to have Jesus as a friend because he is a true friend; one who is willing to serve us at all times if we put our trust in him. He is not a friend today and an enemy to-morrow, but one whom we can rely upon each and every day. Is it not an honor and a great privilege to be the friend of such a friend? Do we not feel at times as though we were not worthy of such an honor?

As friends of Jesus, how is our conduct toward him? Do we love the things of this world more than we do Jesus? And do we try to please the people of this world more than we try to please him? If so, we are not worthy of his friendship, or to be called his friends. Let us not forget that we are his servants, and it is our duty to be on the alert at all times, ready to serve him when an opportunity presents itself. Each one of us no doubt has near and dear friends whom we are willing to do anything for or to give them anything we may have if we thought it would please them. And likewise they may do the same for us. But what does this kind of friendship amount to? It amounts to very little in the end, for it is worldly friendship, and will vanish away in time. Is it not better therefore to abide in the friendship of Jesus, for if we are loyal to him and serve him in all things, and trust him, he has given us the hope of eternal life. Jesus has been a good friend to me, and I know he has been to all of you. I earnestly hope that our conduct toward him will be such that whatever we may do it may be pleasing in his sight, so that we may continue to be worthy of this high calling of being called the friends of Jesus.

GOD'S LITTLE WHILE

"For yet a very little while, he that cometh shall come and shall not tarry" (Heb. 10:37, Am. R. V.).

"For yet a little while, how short! how short! the Coming One will be here, and will not delay" (Rotherham's Translation).

These words and context appear to be a somewhat free and blended quotation by the inspired author of this epistle, from two Old Testament prophets. See Hag. 2:6, 7; and Hab. 2:3, 4. Originally uttered more than twenty-five centuries ago, for the comfort and warning of God's ancient people, they are again used by this New Testament prophet to encourage those enduring the persecutions of that day; particularly those in danger of relapsing into Judaism (Heb. 10:26-29). They also apply especially to these days of Christ's imminent return. They remind us of Moses' prayerful words to Jehovah—"A thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past and as a watch in the night" (Psa. 90:4). Also of Peter's caution to all Christians of this gospel age—"Beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise as some men count slackness, but is long suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Pet. 2:8, 9).

God's "little while" must necessarily seem long to us, just as to a child one year seems almost a lifetime. Man was created for a life commensurate with the Adamic age, presumably 7,000 years. With the tree of life in his possession he would have lived to its end with powers and faculties unimpaired, then to enter upon the eternal and incorruptible life, such as holy angels now enjoy. To such a life and hope even the entire period of earth's probation would be but "a very little while," because, compared with eternity every limited period is brief.

But we are now, beyond reasonable question, almost upon the very end of our age of sin, repentance and faith. If twenty-five centuries are really but a little while for the vast and beneficent purposes of God to mature, how very little the few brief years yet remaining, in which to watch and wait and work. Beloved fellow servant, be faithful and diligent. Blood-bought but unsaved one, turn to Christ to-day.—Editorial in "Our Hope."

WAY-BILL OF LIFE

"Good Master, what good things shall I do that I may have eternal life" (Matt. 19:16)?

We often hear one say, "I want to be prepared to die." But this is not what we want: we want to be prepared to live. We come into this life mortal beings, subject to death. Already we are prepared to die. Sooner or later the great enemy death will take us away; but while this life lasts we want to prepare to live that more abundant life that will be given to us beyond the tomb. God has given us a way-bill, which, if we follow, will lead us to life eternal.

This way-bill is the gospel of Christ. This gospel has facts that we must believe, and commands that we must obey. The facts of this gospel are Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; his death and resurrection; and when we have some knowledge of these we must obey the commands. First, we must have faith. Without faith it is impossible to please God (Heb. 11:6). We must repent of our sins (Acts 3:19). We must confess Christ (Rom. 10:9). We must be baptized (Mark 16:16).

Now when we have believed the gospel and obeyed the commands, we have a legel right to the blessings of the gospel. These blessings will come in due time. Christ the life-giver will come and unlock the prison doors of death and give us life eternal in incorruptible bodies. O is this not grand? Eternal life in incorruptible bodies! The ages of eternity will have no power over these bodies. No, they will never more grow old and feeble, no more grow weak. Our eyes shall no more grow dim. No death will be there. No more death-bed scenes, no more funeral processions; tears will be wiped from all faces; the inhabitants will no more say, "I am sick." Is this all? No; we will have a home in the earth made new. "Home, sweet home." What a dear word is "home!" The rich will not oppress the poor. No land will be for rent; no land agents will be there. No land for sale then! No crowned heads there, ruling over corrupt kingdoms. No, thank oGd. Christ will be king over all the earth, in that day.

Reader, will you not prepare to live in that Eden Home? Oh I want to live triumphant over death. Life then will be as childhood, and death unknown. JOHN WEEKS.

HAVING HIS OWN WAY

There is, perhaps, no way in which a man may be more dead sure of utter ruin, than to have his own way. Many have tried it. They have determined that they would have their own way; they have had it; and the results have been most disastrous. Many a man to-day is in trouble because he would have his own way. He has alienated his friends, wasted his property, destroyed his chances for usefulness in the world, involved himself in troubles, and now finds at the last that he did not want what he thought he wanted; that things have not turned out as he was sure they would turn out; that his own way was the worst way he could have had; and has brought ruin and sorrow instead of blessing and prosperity. "All we, like sheep, have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way." This is our fault, our folly, our sin, and our calamity.

It is not good for us to follow our own ways. If we choose our own ways God will choose our delusions, and the time will come when we will lament our wilfulness, and regret our folly. Men need guidance; God is willing to guide them. "The meek will he guide in judgment, and the meek will he teach his way." Let us be meek, and take his yoke upon us, and learn of him who is meek and lowly of heart, and we shall find rest to our souls.—H. L. H.

MISNAMING

There is no surer way to obliterate the distinctions between right and wrong, than to apply good names to evil things and evil names to good things. It has been a favorite trick with Satan to nickname and misname everything good, while at the same time evil things are praised and most respectfully dealt with. Vice takes the name of "pleasure;" licentiousness is "gallantry;" gambling obligations are "debts of honor;" crimes and embezzlements are "irregularities;" immoralities are "indiscretions;" swindles are "shrewd operations." And so we also have no end of scandals, villainies, and iniquities which are smoothed over and covered up by polite designations.

We have Trust Companies that cannot be trusted; We have Directors that do not direct; Trustees who are untrustworthy; Saving's Banks where you lose what you deposit; Safes which are unsafe; Governments which do not govern, and a thousand and one things which belie their names, and are unworthy of the confidence of good men.

God has said, "Woe, unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness;" that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter" (Isa. 5:20). And the day will finally come when reality will take the place of sham, and we shall see that it is no light matter to call good evil and evil good, and thus bear the woe and curse of an Almighty God.—Sel.

PREACH THE WORD

To preach is to proclaim, and the thing which the servants of God should proclaim is the word of the Lord. Not merely a weak dilution of scripture, or a series of essays garnished with a few scripture quotations here and there, but the plain, simple, unadulterated word of God, heralded forth by men who believe and who dare proclaim it as it is written; who have no pet theories which exclude the large mass of scripture, and misquote or misapply the rest. The thing which people need today is the word of God, that unchanging voice which speaks from on high, that word which shall stand when the very heavens shall pass away, and no place shall be found for them.

There is nothing that will take the place of the living word of God; nothing that goes with such majestic power to the hearts and the souls of men; nothing which works with such mighty regenerations; nothing which so quickens the soul; nothing which is so potent for good, as that word of truth by which men are born again of the incorruptible seed, the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever. The men who will preach the word will never need to steal his sermons; the man who preaches the word will never be without something to preach: he has a message, and the authority of God is behind it, and as he is faithful to the Lord, so God's word will not return to him void.

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20), and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17) and belief in the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:28), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1:5; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31). SALVATION

Salvation, O Salvation,
Send out the loving call;
Make known the gracious offer—
Eternal life to all.

Salvation, free salvation!
God's call to fallen man;
Let every nation hear it,
And every tribe and clan.

Ye who have heard and heeded,
Do not in comfort lie;
But seek the weak and fallen
Who without help may die.

The lost are on the mountains,
They're in the forests dim;
They people distant islands
Beyond the ocean's rim.

They wander in the frostland,
Without a thought of Him
Who paints their heavens with glory
And casts the shadows dim.

They roam the sandy desert,
And sit in Arab's tent;
They dwell by shining rivers,
And highland lakelets pent.

They live there close beside you,
You meet them every day;
Then keep not back the message,
But tell them while you may.

The Savior calls to lost ones—
"Come ye to me and live;
To such as truly seek me
Eternal life I give.

"Though sins be red as scarlet,
I make them white as snow;
And on the meek and lowly
My loving care bestow."

Then seek the Savior early,
Seek while he may be found;
His love is all-embracing,
His strength shall girt you 'round.

THE TRUE NATURE OF BAPTISM

Triune Immersion Considered Ecclesiastically and Scripturally

The Origin of Trine-Immersion

What was the origin of trine-immersion? A definite answer cannot be given to this question. Robinson says (p. 168) the practice was universal among "Christians of the Catholic kind," that is, concurrently with the use of single immersion, as evidenced in the extracts already quoted; but he adds it was "of uncertain origin." Certain clues, however, point to tradition as its source. Robinson informs us (page 63) that "the Greeks divided their institutes into two classes, (1) the Scriptural and (2) the traditional. The division was merely speculative, for they thought both equally binding." Basil gives an instance in baptism (Op. De Sancto Spiritu, cap 28). He says: "The Scripture says, 'Go ye teach and baptize,' and tradition adds, 'baptize by trine-immersion;' and if any minister or presbyter shall administer baptism, not by three dippings, but one, let him be punished with deprivation."

This proves that trine-immersion was founded on "tradition." Also, that baptism by one dipping was a thing well known in Basil's day, for he says baptism by one dipping exposed the baptiser to the pain of deprivation. Here we have trine-immersion the persecutor: single immersion the persecuted; an important fact in the argument

Mr. Robinson says that Mons. Daille, a writer of several centuries ago, proves by unquestionable authority that "trine-immersion was first mentioned at the close of the second or beginning of the third century;" also that, according to the same writer, "Basil, Jerome, Gregory Nysson, and others, pretended at first it was an apostolic tradition" (page 514).

It is now profitable to see that the practice was associated with the doctrine of the Trinity, which, though formulated for the first time by Athanasius at the close of the third century, had been in formative agitation for a long time before. The following extracts will prove this association: "James Sadolet, who was first secretary to Leo. X., and afterwards created a cardinal by Paul III, in the year 1536, says: 'Our trine-immersion in water at baptism, and our trine-emersion, denote that we are buried with Christ in the faith of the true Trinity, and that we rise again with Christ in the same belief'" (Robinson, page 444).

Speaking of a picture on an octagon font in Orford Chapel, Robinson says: "The two Catholic reasons for trine-immersion are represented here: the one by an angel, an escutcheon in his hand, with a triangle to represent the Trinity; the other a woman sitting and holding a dead corpse in her arms, to signify either the dead body of Christ, or a dying and being buried with him in baptism by trine-immersion, which represented the three days burial of Jesus. . . . The Catholics speak of baptistries abroad which used to flow with water at Easter without the aid of art, and to become dry of themselves after the priest had done baptizing. They gave this out for a miracle in proof of the doctrine of the Trinity into which they were baptized" (Page 131).

"Vedast and Remigius first instructed Clovis in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity, which he af- terwards professed to believe, by being thrice dipped at his baptism" (Robinson, page 113).

"In A.D. 381, Gregory pronounced the funeral oration of Basil, and alluded to baptism as a Trinitarian thing" (Page 253).

Now, there must have been invention somewhere. Either some discarded trine-immersion for single, or some added to single immersion and made it triune. Even apart from the voice of the New Testament, it would not be difficult to surmise correctly on which side the innovation took place. The trine-immersionists were men in power, and who did not bind themselves to the authority of Scripture, but claimed an equal authority for tradition, and the right of stating and interpreting that tradition; who therefore had the amplest opportunity of adopting and establishing any vagary that might suit their fancy or their convenience. This was hierarchy of the Catholic Church. There were those, however, who did not accept their traditions, and with whom they held no communion. Thus Robinson says: "The hierarchy was formed long before Constantine established it. . . . There were real Christian Churches in the city (of Rome) with whom they held no communion and whom they persecuted as far as they could. Constantine only brought the great faction into public; they suppressed the rest" (Page 346).

Robinson, speaking of the final application of baptism to infants, says: "But this is only to be understood of Catholic hierarchies; for it does not appear that those Christians, whom the domineering parties called 'heretics,' made any such alterations in baptism" (Page 155).

With these facts in view, the reader will be able to estimate rightly the value of the assertions of trine-immersionists in their efforts to re-establish the traditions of the apostasy. They are the assertions either of ignorance or knavery. So far from single immersion being "unknown on earth before 1522," it has been practised in the world since the days of the apostles. Trine-immersion got the upper hand, because on the side of the innovater was power, and assumption of spiritual legislative authority; but single immersion continued to be practised by those who were accounted heretics by the domineering factions; and who were not only excommunicated, but prevailed against by them. Ecclesiastically speaking, therefore, we have to choose between an ambitious hierarchy, claiming spiritual authority, with the power and learning of the world on their side; and a cast-out community of so-called "heretics," who adhered to the Scriptures and "rejected the trine-immersion of the established church," as stated above.

It is evident that the question must be decided by an appeal to the Scriptures alone. Confusion reigns in the region of ecclesiastical history. The faith and practice of any class of men after apostolic times, is no foundation to build upon. We may or may not be right in following such a lead. There is no safe discussion on the subject outside the writings of the apostles themselves.

If the so-called "apostolic traditions of antiquity" is to be received, it will commit us in the matter of baptism, not only to trine-immersion, but to a vast number of other additions to the divine ordinance. The ecclesiastical practicers, who are quoted as our example in the matter of trine-immersion, not only dipped three times, but consecrated the water used in the baptism. They baptized only twice in the year—Easter and Whitsuntide—wax candles were burnt during the performance; the person baptized was first exorcised by a professional exorcist, with solemn and menacing formula, of a demon supposed to reside in every unbaptized person; the subject was then rubbed with ointment; salt was put in his mouth; he was signed with the cross; after immersion milk and honey were given him to taste; then he was again rubbed with ointment; finally a crown was put on his head, and he was dressed in a white robe, which he had to wear seven days. In addition to these there were incantations, and various other ceremonies. All these things were alleged to be founded on apostolic tradition, and they can be traced back (most of them) to the second century. Why should three dips be insisted on and not wax candles and consecrated water, and salting, and all the other mummeries invented by the evil men and seducers, who, true to Paul's prediction, waxed worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived?

The practicers and upholders of trine-immersion were men of learning in the worldly sense, and popular with the world; and claiming powers as successors of the apostles to settle all questions of faith and discipline. This establishes a threefold presumption against the scripturalness of their doctrine; for (1) human learning (which Paul styles "philosophy and vain deceit") incapacitates men for retaining or receiving the truth of Christ in its purity and simplicity; (2) popularity is evidence of their being carnal minded; and (3) their claim to possess spiritual legislative power makes it morally certain that any changes that took place in the institutions of Christ would originate, without scruple, in their hands, as the "mystery of iniquity" already working in the days of Paul, which was to develop, and did finally develop, the power exalting itself above every authority, and arrogating to itself the right to "change times and laws," viz., the Roman Papacy. The practicers of single immersion, "the heretics," whom the trine-immersionists strove to suppress, and of whom we have but scanty and incredible accounts in the writings of their enemies, were poor men who made no such pretensions, and who having nothing to gain by it, were little likely to "change the ordinances."

The Testimony of the Scriptures

The question cannot be settled by the ecclesiastical argument. Ecclesiastical history bears testimony to the existence and practice of single immersion from the beginning, and it bears testimony to the early practice of trine-immersion. Consequently it proves neither; so we are sent back upon the Scriptures for an answer to the question: "Which is right?"

We get this answer in a variety of ways. The direction of Christ to his disciples to baptize "in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit" (which occurs only once) must be consistent with the practice of the apostles, whom the Spirit of Truth guided in the execution of the commission. If it meant three separate dips, in or into three separate names, we ought to find the meaning carefully illustrated in their administration of baptism. We certainly should never find their confining baptism or the idea connected with it to one of the three names. But how stands the fact? There is not a single case of baptism where the three names are mentioned, let alone three dips. Where the relation or meaning of baptism is at all defined, it is always confined to Christ.

Examples

"Be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 2:38).

"Peter commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord" (Acts 10:48).

"They were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus" (Acts 15:5).

"So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death" (Rom. 6:3).

"As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ" (Gal. 3:27).

Indirectly, the same point is illustrated by Paul's question to the Corinthians, when seeking to exalt Christ: "Were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" (1 Cor. 1:13).

How is it to be explained that while Christ directed the apostles to baptize "in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit," the apostles confined the ceremony to the name of Christ? We get the explanation in the fact dwelt upon earlier in this article—that Christ is the name of the Father by the Spirit in a Son; to be baptized into whom, is to be baptized in, into, or for the three names of which he is the individual illustration or expression. You cannot separate Jesus from the Father and the Spirit. He and they are all one; and in one; and make up, in one person, the glorious name given for salvation. It does not require three baptisms to induct a poor Gentile into this name. Three dips would be out of harmony with the thing signified altogether, and it would imply that a man could be baptized into Christ without being baptized into the Father and the Spirit; and that Christ was separate from and independent of the Father and the Spirit. One baptism, and that a baptism into Christ, is sufficient to introduce us to the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit; and, therefore, the apostles always speak of baptism as a baptism into Christ, which is only at variance with the theory of trine-immersionists, and altogether at variance and inconsistent with the Trinitarian jargon of ancient ecclesiastical authorities on the ceremony and meaning of baptism.

The uniform description, by the New Testament, of baptism, as baptism into Christ, is proof that the New Testament baptism is one immersion, and not three or any other number. This is shown conclusively by the apostolic explanations of its meaning and effect. It is explained as a symbolic participation in the death of Christ, and an induction into his one body. The following are very definite on this point:

1. "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore, we are buried with him by baptism into death" (Rom. 6:3-4).

2. "Ye are . . . buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye have risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead" (Col. 2:12).

3. "Baptized into one body" (Cor. 12:13).

4. "As many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ" (Gal. 3:27).

Trine-immersion destroys these explanations. It teaches three deaths and three resurrections, whereas Christ only died and rose once; or it teaches that not only Christ but the Father and the Spirit died, which are impossibilities, and contrary to the testimony. It propounds the unscriptural tradition that the three dips signify the three days during which Christ was dead, thus degrading the saving institution of the Gospel from an act of the highest doctrinal significance, to a mere memento of an unimportant historical detail. Logically it destroys the unity of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit as subsisting in Christ. It teaches the possibility of being baptized into the Father without being baptized into the Son. It does this, not only by implication, but in express words, for its upholders say "None of the Jews were baptized into the name of the Father," "they being already in the church of God, claiming him as their father" (The Innovation Discovered," page 4). Again, "The (trine) formula" "was never used in baptizing Jews" (Ibid).

Here is its completest refutation. Jesus said to the Jews: "No man cometh into the Father but by me." Thine-immersion makes him teach, "Ye (Jews) are already come to the Father whether ye receive me or no." Thus it separates Christ from the Father. John wrote, "Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father" (1 John 2:23). Trine-immersion contradicts this in saying that the Jews (who denied the Son) already had the Father, and that it would have been "ridiculous to think of baptizing a Jew in the name of the Father" ("The Innovation Discovered," page 4).

Paul says, "The head of every man is Christ and the head of Christ is God" (1 Cor. 11:3); and again, "Ye are Christ's and Christ is God's" (1 Cor. 3:23). Furthermore that Christ "is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him" (Heb. 7:25). Trine-immersion disarranges this teaching in making Christ only one of three names into which we have to be separately baptized. According to trine-immersion, it is not sufficient to be baptized into the Son; we do not, by this doctrine, obtain access to the Father and the Spirit by the Son, but must be baptized also into the Father direct and the Spirit direct. Thus Christ is displaced from his position as the connecting link—the "door" of entrance—the "new and living way." And thus, there are three names under heaven whereby we must be saved, in opposition to the apostolic declaration, that "there is none other name (than the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth) under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12).

Trine-immersion also destroys Christ's headship and Christ's mediatorship, for by its teaching it says, the head of every man is not Christ in particular but the three names into each of which he is baptized; and we come not to the Father by Christ, but we come to the Father direct and the Son direct, both in the same separate, independent approach in being baptized into each separately.

In fact, it is a destruction of Scriptural doctrine of baptism. It is Trinitarianism, instead of the apostolic doctrine of God manifest in the Son by the Holy Spirit, as the way of our approach to the Eternal Creator of heaven and earth.

The meaning of baptize, as distinct from bapto, is evident. Bapto is to dip merely, as in bathing, without producing or seeking to produce any change, while baptize is to dip with a view to produce a change as in dyeing. Dyeing may, in some cases, require repeated immersions, but this is an accident of the process and not the essence of the process. The essence of the process is the changing of the colour; and where one submersion is sufficient (as it is in most cases) it is none the less a baptism, in the dyer's sense, than where the article has to be dipped twenty times. With this in view we are at no loss to comprehend the employment of the term of baptize, in describing immersion into Christ. This immersion is not a merely formal or unessential dipping. It is an immersion to produce a change in the person immersed. The change is described in the New Testament as "a washing away of sin" (Acts 22:16). A sinner's transgressions are all forgiven in the act of baptism (Acts 2:38; Rom. 6:4-11). It is the appointed institution by which believers are saved and purified in conscience (1 Pet. 1:22; 3:21). Consequently, as regards his moral relations, a believer comes out of the water a different color from that which characterized him when he went in. He goes in crimson, which is the Scriptural color for sin (Isaiah 1:18); and he comes out white, according to that other statement of the Spirit, when speaking of his class, that "they have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb" (Rev. 7:14). But this divine dyeing requires not three immersions. One immersion is sufficient, even immersion into Christ, whose blood was shed for the cleansing of those who should thus put on his name. The cleansing name is not the Father nor the Spirit in their abstract relations to mortal men, but the name of the Lamb slain for the cleansing, even the Son, who, however, is the Father manifested in the seed of David by the Spirit, and therefore, the three names in one person, which is their appointed relation to the sons of men in baptism or the divine dyeing.

Trine-immersion confounds the dyeing process, and in reality stultifies the "frequentative" theory with which it is associated. Granted that a thing may require to be dipped several times in a dyeing solution to dye it; it is the same liquor it is dipped in each time; but trine-immersion first dips the sinner in one dye, then in another, and then in a third. It is a single immersion in each of three colors; so that "baptize in the name of the Father" is not in their practice "frequentative," but a single act; so with baptize "in the name of the Son," and baptize "in the name of the Holy Spirit." Baptize in each case is single immersion, notwithstanding the "frequentative" theory they have invented. In every instance of Scriptural use, it is one immersion to produce a change.

1. Israel were immersed once (baptized) "unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea" (1 Cor. 10:2). They passed into constitutional relation to Moses by the act of concealment in the cloven waters, under the cloud.

2. John immersed once for a reformation of life. Trine-immersionists themselves admit one immersion in the case of John's baptism, and, therefore, are consistently bound to abandon the "frequentative" theory; for the word baptize is constantly applied to John's baptism (Matt. 3:11-13; Mark 1:4; John 1:33).

3. Jesus baptized in the same way as John; for it is testified that "Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John" (John 4:1). Therefore Jesus immersed once; that is, his disciples did it for him.

4. Jesus baptized the apostles with the Holy Spirit (Matt. 3: 13: Acts 1:5). He immersed them once in the Spirit.

5. Jesus was baptized with death (Luke 12:50). He was immersed once in the terrible waters.

6. "We are buried with him in baptism into death" (Rom. 6:4). Therefore, we are immersed once.

7. To us there is "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism" (Eph. 4:5).

The evidence as a whole shows that trine-immersion is an ecclesiastical invention. It is ancient, yet not so ancient as some of the arguments would try to make it appear. Its revival among some who had professed the truth is a matter of deep regret. Some of these are to be pitied perhaps more than blamed. The argument by which they have been deceived is subtly drawn and plausibly set forth and supported by assertions which, taken for truth, would seem to establish them. The argument in reality is an ingeniously complicated skeint of fallacy, colored by an element of historical truth, strengthened with kuasi-learned demonstrations of a very superficial character, and held together by statements that are positively false. When this is seen by honest men, they will repudiate the imposture that has been palmed upon them, and retrace their steps to that position of truth and liberty from which they have been seduced.

Sound Doctrine

Here it may be proper to submit to the general reader that he will, on investigation, find the following propositions to be true:

The Bible Teaches in Opposition to Popular Theology

1. That man is a mortal creature of the ground (Job 4:17; Gen. 2:7; Psa. 103: 14; 1 Cor. 15:47).

2. That he is under a specific condemnation to die and return to the ground from which he was taken (Gen. 3:19; Rom. 5:12, 18; 6:23).

3. That his spirit is not he nor his, but the energy of God, which returns to God when the man dies (Job 34:14; Ecc. 12:7; Job 14:10; Gen. 7:22; Acts 17:25; Gen. 25:8).

4. That in death there is no more consciousness than in the state before a man is born (Ps. 6:5; Ecc. 9: 5-6; Ps. 156: 3-4; Is. 38: 18-19).

5. That immortality is not native to us, but made accessible to us through Christ, who has brought it to light (2 Tim. 1:10; Rom. 2:7; John 11:25-26; 3:16; Rom. 6: 23; 1 John 5:11-12).

6. That immortality is a matter of promise (1 John 2:25; Tit. 1:2; 2 Tim. 1:1), and will be bestowed only upon those whom Christ approves

(John 5:29; Dan 12:2; John 6:39, 44; 1 Cor. 15:51, 53; Matt. 16:27).

7. That it will be given at the resurrection, when Christ comes the second time (Heb. 9:28; 2 Tim. 4:1, 8; 1 Thes. 4:16; Phil. 3:2; 1 John 3:2; 1 Pet. 5:4).

8. That resurrection and not death is the time when retribution (good or evil) is experienced (Luke 14:14; Phil. 3:8, 11; Rom. 2:7, 16; 2 Cor. 5:10; 1 Cor. 15:32).

9. That the earth and not heaven is the locality of the promised blessing (Matt. 5:5; Is. 11:9; Zech. 14:9; Ps. 2:1; 37:9, 11, 22, 29, 34).

10. That Christ's coming and not the saints dying is the time to be glorified (2 Thes. 1:11; 1 Pet. 1:13; 5:4; 1 Thes. 4:13-18).

11. That the Gospel and not morality is the means by which men will be saved (Rom. 1:16; 1 Cor. 1:21; 15:1-2; 2 Thes. 2:14; Eph. 3:6).

12. That the Kingdom of God and not the death of Christ merely is the subject of the Gospel mony styled "Holy Communion" (Acts 20:7; Luke 8:1; Acts 8:12 19:8; 20:25; 28:30, 32).

13. That righteous believers only, not those who after a life of wickedness gasp out words of remorse, will be saved ((Gal. 6:8; Rom. 8:13; 2 Pet. 1:11; Matt. 5:20).

14. That the immersion of believers and not the sprinkling of babes is what has been appointed (Mark 16:16; Acts 8:12; Rom. 6:3; 1 Pet. 3:21).

15. That a weekly breaking of bread, to bring Christ to "remembrance" among believers, is what is required and not the ritualistic and mystic ceremony styled "Holy Commuun" (Acts 20:7; Luke 22:19-20; 1 Cor. 11:23, 26; 16:2).

16. That the prevailing ecclesiastical system is a superstructure of religious fable (2 Tim. 4:3-4; Acts 20:29-30; 2 Thess. 2:3), accursed of God (Gal. 1:8-9; Rev. 11:9-10), from which all who wish to be delivered from the impending judgments of God must separate themselves (Rev. 18:4; 2 Cor. 6:17).—"The True Nature of Baptism," amended by the Editor.

CLEVELAND'S YOUNG PEOPLE'S COLUMN

Brother Fred Blyth

After heeding the call of the Master, a young sister stood on the threshhold of the passage way to the "New Life," and our Brother Huggins gave a sermon welcoming her into the household of faith. As a result, Brother Fred Blyth expressed the following thoughts:

We wonder at the hardships and trials of life, and at times the way seems very hard, and our trials are severe. God has purposed it so, and for us it is a time of straightening and testing, while we are creating an environment. We can associate together, and as no one lives to himself and each has a radiating influence, so the hardships and trials can in effect be overcome and nullified. The word "ecclesia" means an association. One learns the truth, then another, and another, until there is an ecclesia—an envioronment is created where each has a part. Do you stop to think that if you should have been placed in isolation how bad it would have been for you?

No matter how nice a person you are, it is not worth while to spend all your time in your own company. Expand beyond your little groups of friends, your place of business, your town, out to the mountains and the seas. Get out as far as you can, so it will be worth while to come back home. We hope our new sister will hold fast to that part which falls to her, and remember what Fredrick Noble has said: "A Christian is a mind through which Christ thinks, a heart through which Christ loves, a voice through which Christ speaks, a hand through which Christ helps."

Two Quotations

"Whom do we honor? Clever men are as numerous as blackberries, but it is a rare thing to find a good man. Great minds are honored, but where is the honor of great hearts? Intellect is one thing, and goodness is another."—Robt. G. Huggins.

"According to the most common idea among men, he that makes the most money is the most successful. The standard is so often adopted to measure or weigh everything by money value, and oh! how false! Poverty and scanty means are in no way or sense desirable, but we would make very emphatic that man's success or happiness is not measured by his bank account. "The successful man is the one that understands the true meaning of life, that has a heart to rejoice in human affections, that shows sympathy toward his fellowman in all his dealings, that can find true enjoyment in doing his daily work of whatever character that be, that has an eye for the beauties of nature all around him, that while not destitute of honorable ambition, has learned contentment with his lot in life, and that is ready to do what he can to make the lot of others brighter and better.

"A man may be a merchant prince and in commercial prosperity a grand success, but if lust of accumulation has eaten out all the finer qualities of soul, the determination to live for God and the welfare of those about him, he is a lamentable failure.

"The highest and best sense in which a life is a success is within the reach of everyone. The successful life is the happy one, availing itself of the many advantages of personal culture, enjoying the sweetness and comfort of home, no ma how simple or even scanty the material furnishing may be. We may develop sterling, manly characters and have now the joy in our hearts and the life of heaven in our lives.

Character, true, sterling, Christian character, is in itself success. Without it even the millionaire is a failure."—Selected.

EDITORIAL

A good book is a fountain flowing forever.

Sympathy often softens a sorrow it has no power to remove.

This week we have gained one by addition through return to fellowship of Brother Herron, the husband of Sister Herron.

No man will ever be rejected the Kingdom of God because he has made a confession of sin, but multitudes of men will be driven into outer darkness for their (supposed) goodness. God will not cover our sin unless me uncover it. We must bring our sin to confession, or sin will bring us to confusion.

We believe they are right who hold that the future peace of the world will be more permanently assured should this European war end before either side is entirely crushed and humiliated. A triumphantly victorious nation, and a sadly defeated power, are both dangerous elements for the future to deal with.

Brief sermons, especially during the summer months, are in season. Save your long sermons, and those of deep subject matter, for winter. Long and labored discourses in hot weather to sleepy auditors is wasted effort. Often have we heard brethren preach sound orthodox sermons and other things that were "sound," when the audience, instead of listening to the excellent discourse, were wondering when the end would be. This is certainly "beating the air" (1 Cor. 9: 26), and hot air, too.

NO PUZZLE

An infidel, trying to confuse a colored man, asked how it was possible for a Christian to be in the Spirit, and the Spirit in him. "Oh, there is no puzzle about that," replied the colored man. "It is like the poker. I put it into the fire until it gets red hot. Now the poker is in the fire and the fire is in the poker."—Good Tidings.

A SERIES OF QUESTIONS ANSWERED

First, is the usage of instrumental music in church worship scripturally authorized?

Second, is it scriptural for Christians to engage in song service by helping sing songs that (when sung) tell the serpent's lie over and over?

Third, would it be scriptural for a good brother to preach the truth, then ask the choir to sing the serpent's lie to close with?

T. A. DRINKARD.

Editor's Reply

Musical instruments were among the earliest inventions of men (Gen. 4:21). The Bible often speaks of stringed instruments (Gen. 31:27; Isa. 5:12; 2 Chron. 13:8); wind instruments (Dan. 3: 5, 7; Job 21:12; Lev. 23:24), and instruments of percussion. Their use was generally confined to religious and social festivities, except the trumpet, which was used to sound battle-calls.

The Israelitish Church (Acts 7:38) used instrumental music in their worship. David especially was fond of music, and was an expert musician. "Four thousand praised the Lord with the instruments, which I made, said David, to praise therewith" (1 Chron. 23:5). "The musical instruments of David" (Nehe. 12:26) were preserved and used in the worship of God after the restoration under Ezra and Nehemiah. He was a man after "God's own heart" (the sin with Uriah and Bath Sheba excepted). This statement exonerates David from all blame in using "instruments of music." Because the profligates spoken of in Amos 6:5, fancied they equaled David in musical proficiency, and because they defended their illegal passion for music by citing the example of David, does not condemn the man after God's heart. David rightly used his "instruments of music," whereas they wrongly used theirs. When God's house of prayer was cleansed in the reign of good Hezekiah, it was written: "He set the Levites in the house of the Lord, with cymbals, with psalteries, and harps, according to the commandment of David, and of Gad the King's Seer, and Nathan the prophet; for so was the commandment of the Lord by his prophets" (2 Chron. 29:25). Thus instrumental music was used "in the house of the Lord" according to the commandment of

1. David;
2. Gad the Seer;
3. Nathan the prophet;
4. And the Lord. Not that the Lord gave his reluctant permission, but they were used by "the commandment of the Lord."

Instrumental music in the church has some support in the New Testament. To the Corinthians Paul says: "Things without life (musical instruments) giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sound (notes), how shall it be known what is piped or harped" (played?) (1 Cor. 14:7). Then he exhorts the brethren to pray with the spirit and understanding, and to sing the same way (vs. 15). He desires his instructions to be carried out when the "whole church be come together" (vs. 23). He obviously means that they were to sing with the spirit and understanding "in the church" (vs. 19), when instruments "without life" were played. Plainly, then, instrumental music was used in the church at Corinth. As the apostle throughout this chapter puts emphasis on understanding (vss. 7, 8), we suggest that the organ should be played softly; and that when we sing, pray or speak "in the church," we do so slowly and distinctly, for if we fail to be understood, we "shall speak into the air" (vs. 9).

We are commanded to sing with both the spirit and the understanding (1 Cor. 14:15). Before we gained an "understanding" of the truth we sang songs which were not indited by the "spirit." We sang as we acted—foolishly. The Deity by his spirit has now given us songs in the night (Job 35:10). Yes, he has "put a new song in our mouth" (Isa. 40:3), even the song of Moses and the song of the Lamb (Rev. 15:3). We ask all who are interested in this question to consider carefully the following scriptures on singing:

"Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. And whatever you do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God, even the Father by him" (Col. 3:16, 17).

"Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess: but be filled with the spirit; speaking to yourselves in psalms, hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord; giving thanks always for all things to God, even the Father, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. 5: 18-20).

These scriptures cover the ground so far as singing is concerned. They show

1. That singing "psalms, hymns and spiritual songs" are all three scriptural kinds of singing.
2. That singing is a means by which "teaching" is communicated from the one who sings to those who listen.
3. And that singing is also a way by which "admonition," equally with "teaching" is communicated from one to another.

Now if singing is an important method of "teaching" the truth, and of "admonishing" those who are already in it, as the texts quoted declare, it is easily seen that if the words of the song are unscriptural, the "teaching" communicated is unscriptural also; if the "admonition" of the song is wrong, the admonition given to those who hear, is likewise wrong. We would as soon tell a lie as sing one.

The "good brother" who would preach the truth in a sermon, and then sing a song full of the serpent's "teaching" to close with, would flatly contradict himself. His song would contradict his sermon. If scriptural "psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs" cannot be had before and after a sermon, better omit them entirely. Truth decorated with error is only a repulsive daub. Keep yourselves detached from error in all of its forms, dear brethren.

PULPIT ECHOES

A Sermon by Robert G. Huggins, Reported by George B. Alldridge

Subject "Mercy and Power Combined in Song." Text: "But I will sing of thy power; yea, I will sing aloud of thy mercy in the morning; for thou hast been my defense and refuge in the day of my trouble. Unto thee, O my strength, will I sing; for God is my defense, the God of my mercy" (Psa. 59:16, 17).

The apostle James lays down in his epistle just the course each should pursue according to his natural mood. If we are afflicted then he exhorts us to pray; if we are sick, to send for the elders of the church; but if we are happy and our hearts merry, then sing Psalms (James 5:13, 14). David was, as his beautiful psalms reveal, a man of song. Why so? Because he knew God. No man can be a man of song except there is something in him that prompts him to sing. To understand God it is necessary to be familiar with his attributes; without a knowledge of these, to my mind, there is little to sing about.

1. Mercy and Power are Joined Together in the Word of God.

In our text David delights to sing about two of God's attributes, his power and his mercy.

Read carefully the whole of Psalm 59. Notice how David joins these attributes of God's character together; they are inseparably linked together like the links in a chain. Jesus in Matt. 19:6, in speaking of the marriage relation, says: "What therefore God hath joined together let not man put asunder." In like manner God's attributes, chief of which are his power, mercy, wisdom, love and justice, are indissolubly bound together, forming a chain that holds together the mighty universe, and subjects all things, both animate and inanimate, to his will. To separate them would be sacrilege and a departure from the order laid down for our instruction in the scriptures. Especially is this remarkably so in Psa. 62:11, 12. "God hath spoken once; twice have I heard this, that power belongeth unto God. Also unto thee, O Lord, belongeth mercy; for thou renderest to every man according to his work." Here we see power and mercy inseparably united. "Orthodox theology" separated them, presenting God either as being all-powerfu without mercy, or all-merciful without power. But

2. If Mercy and Power Are Separated From Each Other, There is Nothing to Sing About.

Suppose we present God as all-powerful, without mercy to guide or direct its action? What could we sing about in such a God as that? Suppose we only present God as being all-merciful, without power to bestow blessings upon those to whom he delights to show mercy; could we have faith or confidence in a God of that description? No, we answer. Our God whom we delight to sing about and praise must necessarily be equal in mercy as well as in power. Notice the words of our text, how

3. Mercy and Power, United, Give Infinite Value to Each Other.

This becomes more apparent when we read Isa. 63:1-7, where the prophet is speaking of the return of Christ, who will represent God in establishing peace and righteousness upon this earth. Separate mercy from power, then we only read of God's vengeance; but united with mercy, we read these beautiful and heart-comforting words: "I will mention the loving kindnesses of the Lord, the praises of the Lord according to all that the Lord hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel which he hath bestowed on them according to his mercies and according to the multitude of his loving kindnesses." How our hearts seem to swell up, ready to burst forth into praise and song as we meditate upon God's power and mercy.

Our minds go back to the morning of creation, "when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy" (Job 38:7). There we read that the sons of God fully recognized the glorious attributes of God were united. No wonder they shouted for joy." As we read David's description of the creation in Psa. 194:10-16 we shout for joy and sing praises to our God. Notice how bountifully he has provided for the creature's wants by his power: "He sendeth the springs into the valleys, which run among the hills. They give drink to every beast of the field; the wild asses quench their thirst. By them shall birds of the heaven have their habitation, which sing among the branches. He watereth the hills from his chambers; the earth is satisfied with the fruit of thy works. He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herbs for the service of man; that he may bring forth food out of the earth; and wine, that maketh glad the heart of man; and oil to make his face to shine; and bread which strengtheneth man's heart. The trees of the Lord are full of sap, the cedars of Lebanon which he hath planted. * * * O Lord, how manifold are thy works; in wisdom hast thou made them all; the earth is full of thy riches." Beloved, read this Psalm tonight before you retire. Your heart, like mine, will swell up with praise to God, especially after thinking over the first nine verses. Beloved, it is a delight to love God and to praise him when our hearts are attuned to the teachings of his word.

Jesus manifested in his life these attributes of character. In Mark 4:39-41 we find the wind and sea obeying him, but his power was used to bring peace and quietness. In Mark 3:5 his power, coupled with mercy, is manifested. Again is this exemplified as recorded in Mark 11, 12, 13, 21. The climax is reached as he stands at the grave of Lazarus. Jesus declared to Mary that her sad bereavement was permitted that God through his Son might be glorified. In verse 25 Jesus said: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believeth thou this?" What wonderful power is this! Now read verses 33-35: "He groaned in the spirit and was troubled. * * * Jesus wept!" What mercy, sympathy ,tenderness and love are here expressed; but a little later to Martha Jesus saith unto her: "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldst believe thou shouldst see the glory of God?" Yes, beloved, we see God's glory in his power and mercy.

4. And every Saint, in the Course of His Life, Will Experience the Mercy and Power of God.

Probably the time when God seems to be very near is as we near the border line that separates us from the living. As the hour drew near for Moses' demise he uttered these wonderful words: "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms" (Deut. 33:27). After all that man's skill and attention can do, usually the nurse wishes to perform the last service to the dying. God loved Moses, yet he told him that he could not enter the promised land, but as the hour arrived for Moses to lay down in the peaceful sleep of death God alone with him on Mount Nebo performed the last act of mercy and tenderness that one loving friend performs for another (Deut. 34: 5, 6). Oh, the love and tenderness of God! Surely as the prophet declares: "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom" (Isa. 40: 11). Paul wrote of the meekness and gentleness of Christ (2 Cor. 10:1). David prayed for the day when Jesus would make this earth glorious, when God's enemies become his footstool (Psa. 110).

The day is born out of the darkness of the night. If there was no darkness the sun and the moon would never be appreciated. Our trials and sufferings reveal to us God's goodness and mercy. Death is all-powerful; no man can control it; its heavy hand rests upon all. But God's mercy shines forth in this. Isaiah declares that "thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead" (Isa. 26:19). God likens his dead to the dew. Dew is formed in the night by the operation of the sun during the day. So when the sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his beams then the dead shall come forth fresh as the dew, pure, imparting life and blessing to all influenced by their touch.

Thank God then for tribulations, for tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given unto us" (Rom. 5:1-5). If we have not learned to "glory in tributions," there is a discordant note in our song. We must learn this lesson of life, to place absolute confidence and trust in God, for in this God is glorified.

After hearing this sermon, carrying away in his mind inspiring thoughts, these lines impressed themselves upon the writer's mind as never before:

"A Sabbath well spent
Brings a week of content,
And joy to the work of tomorrow;
But a Sababth profaned,
Whatsoever be gained,
Is a sure forerunner of sorrow."

COMMUNICATIONS

From Sister Mary Wolf

Dear Brother Huggins: I do not think it is right to be always getting and never giving, so I am sending you five dollars for The Restitution Linograph Fund. Hope that all the brothers and sisters will help in this cause. Though isolated I am still in the faith of the gospel, and hope of the resurrection. I never hear a gospel sermon, and there is no one near here that is in the truth.

Respectfully yours.

From Brother John Fiske, Jr

Dear Brother Huggins: Perhaps you have often wondered why the Fiske-Moore debate was discontinued. Well, it was discontinued because the editor of "The Pacific Christian" absolutely refused to publish it any farther There were ten articles altogether, five of which he published. The remaining five he refused absolutely to publish.

If any one, especially an immortal soulist, desires to read the last five articles, if he would let me know, I would be glad to send them to him.

Yours in hope of immortality.

From Brother T. A. Drinkard

Dear Brother Huggins: May I be permitted to ask you a question or two?

You may answer through The Restitution, because there are others I presume that would like to have your views upon the matter.

I am very glad to see you meeting squarely the Josephite Theory regarding the birth of Jesus Christ.

It seems very unreasonable that people, who claim to be guided by the scriptures, will go off with such a theory. If they have a right (?) to assert that what does not suit them in the scriptures is not true, then I have just as much right to cull out what I may not like. When people get so highly educated that they know more than Matthew, Mark and Luke regarding the Lord's birth, then they are overstepping "thus saith the scriptures."

May the Lord prosper you and all his servants.

Your Brother in Christ.

From Sister S. J. Whitten

Dear Restitution: Tell your readers the Pleasant View Church of Warren County, Indiana, has just had a glorious meeting. Brother Maple begun a series of meetings the 3d of June, closing the 19th. The Spirit of the Lord was in all the meetings, the church greatly strengthened, and two young men made the good confession. Brother and Sister Railsback, of South Bend, was with us, also Brother Ora Railsback, of Argos, who led the singing. I am sorry to say we lost two members by death, during the meeting, Sister Moyer, of Perice, and Sister Thompson, of West Lebanon. Brother Maple preached their funerals to large audiences. We also lost a member in May, Brother Cole. Brother Williams was called from Iowa to preach the funeral. The church at Pleasant View feels the loss of these members greatly. I hope the brothers and sisters everywhere will report all the good meetings, or any spiritual uplift they have. Your waiting for the coming of the Lord.

THE NAME

No. 2

John: Good evening, Tom. I am here on time for our lesson, and would like to continue our last last lesson.

Tom: Good evening, John; I am glad to see you on time. I am sorry to say that many of our members are never on time for church, but come in late and thus delay the service. Well, you wish to continue our last lesson?

John: Yes; you spoke of Christ coming in the Father's name (John 5:43). Now, how did he get that name?

Tom: The answer is found in Heb. 1:4: "Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they."

John: Then he must have been, as the Bible teaches, the begotten Son of God, since he received the name before his birth (Isa. 7:14; Matt. 1:18-23).

Tom: True. In Psa. 2:7 we read: "I will declare the decree: The Lord hath said unto me. Thou art my Son; this day hath I begotten thee."

John: I now understand how Christ got the name, and did his work in that name (John 10: 25). But we, too, must bear the name. Do we inherit it?

Tom: No. When a lady marries she receives the name of her husband. And when we accept Christ in baptism we receive the name of our Master, "the only name given under heaven or among men whereby we must be saved (Acts 4:10-12). In Acts 2:38 we read: "Then Peter said unto them. Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." And in Acts 19:1-7 we find that some disciples, who had been baptized unto John's baptism but were ignorant of the Holy Ghost, had to baptized again "in the name of the Lord" before they could receive the Holy Ghost.

John: Is there any other way to receive that name except by baptism, or could one be saved outside of that name?

Tom: No, the Bible does not show any other way to take the name except by baptism, neither does it point out any other way by which we can be saved. Please look up Peter's statement in Acts 4:8-12.

John: But it seems to me that that is rather a narrow view, and if it is true many good people would fail to get into the kingdom.

Tom: Well, I did not make the way into the kingdom, and in Matt. 7:13, 14, we find two ways —one a narrow way leading to life, and the other a broad way leading to destruction. And Jesus tells us that few find the narrow way, while many go the broad way.

John: Well, I hope to be one of the few, but in Luke 13:24 the Master says: "Strive to enter in at the straight gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able." Now why can't those who seek to enter find a home in the kingdom?

Tom: The answer is found in 2 Tim. 2:5: "And if a man also strive (seek) for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully." Now some seek to enter in an unlawful way; that is, they do not obey the rules laid down by the Master. Let me call your attention to John 3:5: "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God." Now John, do you think the narrow way is too narrow for you?

John: In view of the fact that it leads to life, I think not; and I t hank you for calling my attention to this way, and I hope to meet you again.

Tom: Come again next Wednesday evening and we will continue our studies.

OUR LINOTYPE FUND AND THE MACEDONIAN GIVERS

By S. Roxana Wince

Of all the stories given in the Book of God, that of the Macedonian brethren touches me most deeply. How I wish that we knew more about them. What heavy trial were they enduring? There is no one to tell us. But whatever it was, Paul says, "it proved their steadfastness," for "out of the depth of their poverty" the fulness of their joy overflowed."

How could they give at all, when so poor? how poor, we can only guess, by recalling what we once read of some converted Sandwich Islanders, living in little bare huts with no furniture, and possessing no property save a pig perhaps, and some chickens and a few tropical fruit trees, yet all enthusiasm when it came to building a church. But it was "the fulness of their joy" in both cases that impelled them to give, not only according to their means, but beyond their means.

They seemed to realize far better than we do, what it means to have hope of eternal life, for their gift was "not wrung from their covetousness' nor given "grudgingly nor of necessity," but of their bounty and of "the free choice of their heart." Paul did not need to beseech them with much entreaty to give; the tables were turned in this case, for they were obliged to beseech him with "with much entreaty" to take, "that they might bear their part in ministering to Christ's people."

So we must each bear our part in raising this Linotype Fund, "finishing the work according to our means." "For if there be a willing mind the gift is acceptable when measured by the giver's power, and needs not go beyond" (2 Cor. 8:1, 2, 3, 4, 12).

It is joy to know that each one of us is working for the good of all the rest, as well as for our own good. Where are you Helen? Alice? Mattie? Alfred? Eva? and so many more whose names are dear to me? Surely you all intend to give? I am looking for your names—do not disappoint me. SisterE—, where are you?

AN ENJOYABLE MEETING

On Sunday, June 18, a meeting of several of the Cleveland brothers and sisters was held at the home of Brother B. F. Smith and family, Monroeville, Ohio. One of the Cleveland brothers took charge of the meeting. The lesson considered was 1 John, chapter 2. Many interesting comments were made, and all present were made to feel the justice of God in his great plan of salvation, and what an important position Christ holds as advocate for us. The communion service followed the lesson, making each one realize his close relationship with the Father, and that where two or three are gathered together, he is in their midst. Part of the afternoon was devoted to singing some old familiar hymns, which added to the joys of the day.

"CHURCH LOOKS LIKE A HAREM"

Styles and Theaters Were Denounced by Chicago Baptists

"Baptist women are in many cases falling victims to the vulgar and suggestive styles of the gay, and frequently our places of worship are suggestive of Oriental harems rather than Christian churches."

The Chicago Baptist Association took this fling at the fashions in a report made public Saturday. The association further denounced the theater as a demoralizing institution, although admitting that about one-third of the Baptist ministers are theater-goers.—Sel.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 26); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17) and belief in the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31). THE VALUE OF THE BIBLE TO THE YOUNG

An Address Delivered by the Editor of "The Restitution" Before the Young People's Society, May, 10, 1912.

"Wherewith shall a Young Man Cleanse his Way? By Taking Heed Thereto According to Thy Word" (Psa. 119:9).

My Dear Young Brethren and Sisters:

This text, written especially for the young, vividly presents the value, the supreme value, of God's word to the young. The "young man" is specifically mentioned rather than the young woman for several reasons. Among them may be mentioned the fact that "man" is a generic term, and is comprehensive of all mankind. Accordingly, in the first chapters of Genesis, "man" is used as a plural noun, and embraces Eve as well as Adam. Again, the "young man" is primarily addressed in our text because he is more exposed to temptations and impurities than his sister. The indolent and immoral mobs that gather on saloon corners of the street will stop their obscene language while a girl passes by, but they do not respect a lad this much, for he is "only a boy." Thus fortunately our sisters are screened and protected largely, and to some extent by the ungodly themselves, from hearing unbecoming language and seeing sinks of iniquity that are familiar and fascinating to the young man. Then the tendency of the young man toward irreligion is more potent than in his sister, because he is stronger and coarser in his organization. According to statistics, which are based upon the false religion of orthodoxy, there were about 8,000,000 young men in America in 1899; and but twenty-five per cent. were church attendants. Where were the 6,000,000? Seventy per cent. of criminals are young men; they form eighty-five per cent. of the saloon's patrons. These facts make it clear why the text asks, "Wherewith shall a young man cleanse his way?"

The answer to this question is remarkable; it sets forth the great value of the Bible to the young: "By taking heed thereto according to thy word." The boy or girl that rejects God's word, that refuses to "take heed" to its admonitions and exhortations, is sure to be destroyed by the evils of the world. When one says: "No; I will not heed God's word," this thought of rebellion to divine authority is registered in the plastic brain cells. Time burns that decision deeper and deeper into the nature, and after while it has all the force of a habit. Character is the will in action, and you have willed to say "No." Every fibre of encephalon, every corpuscle of blood unites in that awful decision, and they hurl back "No" into the face of the Bible, and into the fact of God, its author, as he stands at your heart's door pleading. Age fossilizes the life, and God's word is excluded with all its softening influences. To neglect God's word in youth is the most hazardous thing that a boy or girl can ever do. Nineteen-twentieths of all the people converted in America (the estimate is based again upon orthodox statistics) are converted before their twenty-fifth year. There are good reasons for this fact. One-half of the people born die before they reach five years of age; a large per cent of the remaining ones die before they reach seventeen; and the average length of human life is, in Christian lands, only twenty-eight years, with a mean average of thirty-three years. What does this prove? It means that if you are here to-night, twenty-five years of age, and have not begun to "take heed" to God's word, the chances against you ever becoming a disciple of the Lord are as 10,000 to one. If you are thirty-five and unconverted, the chances against you ever becoming so are 50,000 to one. If you are forty-five and still in your sins, the figures leap to the alarming proportions—two hundred thousand to one against you. If you are fifty-five and are yet ignoring the "cleansing" word, the chances are as three hundred thousand to one against you. At sixty-five you simply stand one chance in five hundred thousand. And from that time on the spark of hope has burned so low that only the keen eye of faith can see it. I am in harmony with science. I am not presuming that God will not have mercy upon any, but that the character is so absolutely fixed when the years which I have mentioned are upon the individuals in question that disease or sudden death sweeps them into eternity before they will turn. Not one man in a million who reaches the age of eighty-five ever changes his mode of living, morally or religiously. Only three out of every hundred thousand reach the age of one hundred. Truly, "To-day is the day of salvation," not to-morrow. Young hearts, as yet unscarred by the ravages of sin, unscarred by the works of iniquity, unweakened by contamination with evil, let the "cleansing" word of Jehovah become crowned as king in the throne of your heart to-day. And young brethren and sisters, that word that has already cleansed our way, let us "give heed" to it with double diligence that it may keep us cleansed, "without spot, wrinkle, or any such thing."

Youths, perhaps this news to you,
May have no weight, although so true;
The carnal pleasure of the earth
Cast off the thoughts and fears of death;
'Tis awful, awful, awful!

The laughing youths, all in their prime,
Are counting out their length of time;
They often say 'tis their intent,
When they get old to repent:
'Tis awful, awful, awful!

The aged sinner will not turn.
His heart so hard he cannot mourn;
Much harder than a flinty rock,
He WILL NOT TURN, though Jesus knock:
'Tis awful, awful, awful!

SUNDAY SCHOOL DEPARTMENT

Lesson 1—August 6, 1916

Subject, Faith in God

Memory Text

"But without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Heb. 111:5).

1. "There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus" (1 Tim. 2:5).

2. "Thus saith the Lord the king of Israel and his redeemer, the Lord of hosts; I am the first and I am the last, and beside me there is no God" (sa. 44:6).

3. "Is he the God of the Jews only? Is he not also of the Gentiles? Yes, of the Gentiles also" (Rom. 4:29).

4. "For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness;

5. Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them, for God hath showed it unto them.

6. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse.

7. Because when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.

8. Professing themselves to be wise they became fools,

9. And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things" (Rom. 1:18-23).

10. "But our God is in the heavens; he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased" (Ps. 115:3).

11. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (Jno. 4:24).

12. "One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all" (Eph. 4:6).

Practical Truths

Our lesson is about God. He has a real existence. He is the Creator and upholedr of all things. Hs is a Spirit being. There is but one God. Faith in him is necessary, so also is obedience. Our homage, reverence, love, praise and fidelity to him is our reasonable service. Get acquainted with God, for to know him is life eternal. The one who knows the only true God is he who does his will. He has revealed himself through nature and through his revelation. His existence lies as a foundation of all Bible truths. Let us humbly study to know God.

Notes on the Lesson

"Faith."—Belief; the assent of the mind to the truth of what is declared by another. Faith in God the Apostle here declares is, to "believe that he is and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Trust. Confidence.

"Impossible."—That which cannot be. God's condition of acceptance is faith, and no one can please him or receive his approbation who does not come believing and trusting in him.

"A Rewarder."—God will not fail to recognize us when we come in the right way and will fulfill all he has promised.

"Diligently seek him."—With whole heartedness; with industry and assiduity; not carelessly nor negligently. The intensity of our efforts tells the degree of earnestness of our desire for knowledge.

1. "One God."—One numerically; not two nor three, nor any other number.

2. "Beside me there is no God."—There is no more forcible passage in the entire Bible and one which arrests the attention of the reader, as does this verse. There is a similar one in Rev. 1:8.

3. "God of the Jews."—God showed his power through the nation of Israel for many years, while the heathen or Gentile nations worshiped idols; so that in time God was termed the God of Israel, the God of the Hebrews, the God of the Jews. But Paul assures us here that the same God is the God of the Gentiles also.

5. "God hath showed it unto them."—His power and existence may be known by all men.

6. "Being understood by the things that are made."—The creation of material things which we can see is governed by the same laws which govern unseen things. Creation only is an argument for the existence and power of God; so that men who deny the existence of God "are without excuse."

7. "Foolish heart was darkened."—The man who refuses to acknowledge that there is a God willfully puts away from him the only ray of light there is, and the inevitable tendency is to darkness.

8. "Became Fools."—Ignorance of God is an absence of wisdom. "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God" (Ps. 14:1).

9. "Uncorruptible God," Corruptible Man.—God and man contrasted. Man corruptible, dying. God incorruptible, immortal and undying (Rom. 1:23).

10. "Father of All."—We should pause with filial reverence before the magnitude and preciousness of the thought that one God is indeed the Father of all.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. The Existence of God.—What is said in our memory text, to be impossible? What is meant by "coming to God?" What kind of service does God demand and reward? Has God a material and real existence? Where in our lesson is the existence of God shown from his work?

2. The Unity of God.—Does the Bible teach that there is but one God (1 Tim. 2:5, Eph. 4:6, Rom. 3:30, Gal. 3:20).

3. The Fatherhood of God.—In what sense is God the Father of all (Acts 17:28, 29; Gen. 2:7)? Is there any other sense in which the Fatherhood of God is taught (Rom. 8:14, 16, 17; Eph. 4:6; Matt. 6:9; Gal. 4:6, 7; John 1:12; 7 Jno. 3:1, 2)? Was Jesus the Son of God in the above sense only? Was Christ the "only begotten Son of God?"

4. Idolatry Forbidden.—What is idolatry? Where is it forbidden in the Bible? What idols are we most inclined to (Col. 3:5)? Show how covetousnes is idolatry. Is this a sin of the last days especially (2 Tim. 3:2)?

5. A Personal God.—If God is a principle, how can he be a person? What do you understand by "person?" Can we have personality without form? Has God form and personality (Phil. 2:5, 6; Heb. 1:3)?

6. God's Attributes.—Tell what you know of God's character. Where is his power manifested? Where is his wisdom displayed? In what is his love shown (John 3:16, Rom. 11:33-36)?

7. Faith in His Existence and Promises.—What is faith? How can we have faith in God? How do we know that he is? Does Nature declare God (Ps. 19:1; Rom. 1:19, 20; Acts 14:17)? Does God always fulfill his promises? What are some of the promises he has made to us?

HOW ARE THE DEAD RAISED?

This question has been the subject of much controversy, some of it perhaps needless; and I fully agree with the editor, that it is a "minor issue." Redemption in Christ is our Alpha and Omega; being sound on that, and keeping our garments unspotted, we have nothing to fear; even if unable to clearly explain some things connected with the resurrection and judgment.

There were in the Corinthian Church some members who, like the Sadducees in Judea, denied the resurrection; and it being Paul's object to quash their heresy, we may well understand that he labored to show the final result rather than details of procedure: "The dead shall be raised incorruptible" (1 Cor. 15:52).

This can, as the editor says, refer to only the righteous; still Paul did not say one class shall be raised mortal and the other immortal; neither did he say that all shall be raised mortal; one class to be glorified and the other destroyed. As, however, one or the other is true, we are forced to admit that he did not say all that could be said on the subject—"In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established" (Matt. 18:16).

But it is never safe to build a doctrine on one text, particulary when, as in this case, it does not fully explain the subject under consideration.

Mr. Wm. Richmond, of Nottingham, England, in his pamphlet, "Christadelphians Astray," page 16, challenges his opponents to give either Scripture texts or reasons for their theory, that Jesus was raised corruptible. It is strange that any man will appear in public with such a glaring error, flatly contradicting the risen Lord: "Behold my hands and feet . . . flesh and bone, as ye see me have" (Luke 24:39).

It may be needless, and perhaps unwise, to reopen a question that has been so much debated; but, to me it seems reasonable that all holy persons will be raised as Christ was—mortal, and afterward glorified. This corresponds fully with Matt. 25:31-46, that all nations shall be gathered before the Savior, and "He shall separate the sheep from the goats:" while, upon the immortal resurrection theory, they would be separated in their graves: "We know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he it" (1 John 3:2).

How could any one see him, and thereby be made like him, while still in the grave?

Forty days was the risen Lord here on earth, still mortal, at times eating and drinking with them (Acts 10:41). He was taken up to heaven, into the Father's immediate presence, and was there and then glorified (see Dan. 7:14). Hence, when later seen of John on Patmos, he was no longer "flesh and bone" (Rev. 1:14, 15).

His physical constitution was not changed in the grave, why then should we expect ours to be?

I. RODE, in "The Student."

Reply by Brother R. H. Judd

Editor "The Student," Dear Sir:

I notice in the April issue of "The Student" an article over the signature of I. Rode advocating the mortal resurrection of the now sleeping saints. This subject seems to be quite a hobby with a certain class of teachers, who because they cannot explain every difficulty that presends itself to their mind, are not in the least daunted, even going to the length of suggesting that Scripture information is inadaquate. In some cases this almost amounts to an assertion of superior grammatical ability over the inspired writers of the New Testament, as if they were unable to clothe their ideas the woods suitable to the occasion. It might be a little too severe to say that this is the position taken by the writer of the article under review, but it is nearly so.

With regard to 1 Cor. 15:52, "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," he says: "We are forced to admit that he (Paul) did not say all that could be said on the subject." He then adds: "It is never safe to build a doctrine on one text particularly when, as in this case, it does not fully explain the subject under consideration." Several bold assertions are made here, which in themselves are true, if applicable to this particular passage. It is doubtless admissable to state that Paul did not say all that could be said with regard to the question, "How are the dead raised?" but most readers would feel that if Paul only wished to state the "final result" the 15th Chapter of 1st Cor. might have been a good deal shorter. The inference is obvious. The remark that "it is never safe to build a doctrine on one text" can only apply where apparent contradiction in statement occurs elsewhere, but the doctrine that "the dead shall be raised incorruptible" is not based on one text alone, but many; nor is there a text anywhere which denies the quotation from 1 Cor. 15:52. The following verses in the same chapter convey equivalent ideas to the one just quoted, showing that ample opportunity occured to "explain fully the subject under consideration," if the words referred to do not.

Verse 42, "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption."

Verse 43. "It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power."

Verse 44, "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body."

And lest there should be any doubt as to when this takes place vss. 54, 58 plainly affirm that it is when "Death is swallowed up in victory." If that does not occur when death gives place to life, and the dead become living, language fails of its mission. 1 Thess. 1 is not quoted by the writer.

Mr. Rode quotes Luke 24:39, "Behold my hand and my feet," as proof that Jesus the Christ was raised mortal. "Hands and feet," and "eating and drinking" are not properties pertaining only to mortals, as is evidenced by the following scriptures: Rev. 5:1; 6:5; 20:1; Josh. 6:3; Rev. 19:10; Luke 22:30; Matt. 26:29; Mark 14:25; Luke 20:18; Psa. 78:25. Surely there is evidence sufficient that our Savior possessed bodily powers (typical of the powers of the age to come) (see 1 Cor. 15:43) after his resurrection, that he did not possess before, powers such as no mortal man ever did possess. His various appearances during the 40 days to which Mr. Rode's refers, clearly demonstrate that.

Matt. 25:31-46 has reference to the judgment of the nations, and the reward to those nations who showed consideration to his brethren the Jews, and is probably contemporary with the time when a child shall die an hundred years old," and is not applicable to the present issue where individuals taken out from all kindreds and nations are concerned.

Had Mr. Rode been careful to read the content, immediately preceding the quotation in 1 Cor. 15:52 he would have found all necessary explanation, and would not have committed himself to the absurd remark about believers seeing Christ while yet in their graves, for he would have seen that the change is instantaneous with resurrection, and his reference to Rev. 1:14, 15 as a literal physical description of Christ would hardly have been penned, had he consistently read verse 16 also.

Our friend admits that Paul does not say all shall be raised mortal—then why advocate such an idea when it cannot be found in Scriptures? Let him, and let us all, be satisfied with what Scripture does state that "some" shall awake to everlasting life, and that "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," for he has already agreed that this last scripture has reference to the righteous only. King David said: "I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness."

BIG CHANCES BOTH WAYS

The famous physician and the eminent clergyman were deep in a discussion which threatened to become acrimonious.

"You see," said the minister, sarcastically, "you medical men know so much about the uncertainties of this world that I should think you would not want to live."

"Oh, I don't know," responded the physician, caustically. "You clergymen tell us so much about the uncertainties of the next world that we don't want to die."

REPORT OF THE DEDICATORY SERVICE OF THE CHURCH OF GOD IN LAWRENCEVILLE, O.

"Great is the Lord and greatly to be praised," is the voice of the Springfield church in her newly acquired church home July 2nd, 1916.

Newly decorated; made bright and pleasing with beautiful flowers, located in the village of Lawrenceville, seven miles from Springfield. The building is of brick; 30x50, with platform 28x7. Light and airy, with porch entry, belfry and call-bell. On either side are fine large maple trees, affording refreshing shade. Excellent drinking water.

The anviously awaited date came. the morning most auspicious with the glorious sunshine. And with incoming electric cars and automobiles, nearly the entire membership of the Brush Creek Church, and many isolated ones near Troy came to swell our number. One lone greately loved member from the Cleveland church, cheered us by her presence, viz; Sister Emma Lang. The village people came too to brink in our rejoicing in the dedicatory exercises.

Chairman, Brother Alden Overholser. Order of exercise: First, Sunday school, lead by Brother Brewer, of Brush Creek; scripture lesson; prayer. Brother Anderson.

The inspiring songs, "Standing on the Promises," and "In Whom I Have Believed," were sung with Sister Netts, organist. Class collection, song and prayer, by Brother Dan Lehman.

Reading of the founding and history of the Springfield Church, by Sister M. Woodbury, followed by solo, Sister Netts, "Greater Love."

11:15—Church service. Song, "How Firm a Foundation." Prayer, Bro. John Lehman. Dedicatory sermon, "The Tabernacle," Bro. Anderson. Pleasing in his clear, forceful way. Readings from Exodus, followed by table service, Bro. John Lehman officiating. Deacons, Bros. Frank Beck and Charles Netts.

Brief report of church fiinances by the chairman, showing amount of home pledges and Brush Creek Church, together with goodly amounts from loyal isolated brethren and from brothers of Roll, Ind., Ecclesia, and many others in various sums, so kindly given.

A deficit of $165 was still wanting. When Sister Lang cheerily read a greeting from the Cleveland church presenting a check for $50. Our debt was then decreased to $115. But by a colection and free will offerings we have $84 in our treasury over and above present expenses, cheerfully given. The chairman with deep emotion announced: "Brothers and sisters, the church is out of debt."

A rising vote of thanks was then given to the Cleveland and Brush Creek Churches, also brothers from Roll, Ind., Church, and all the isolated brethren who so cheerfully and generously contributed toward making our church building our own, an occasion for rejoicing and long to be remembered.

This is the first church home of the Springfield Ecclesia, made possible by our beloved brother and sister, Peter Overholser, purchasing the property and reserving a building lot for themselves.

Dinner was then in order, served in old-fashioned style in family groups, on snowy cloths spread on the grass under the trees planted forty-six years ago by our benefactor, Bro. "Peter."

2:00 o'clock—Social meeting, led by Sister Lang in her friendly, inspiring way. It was indeed a social meeting, all feeling the inspiration of the occasion. "O the Golden Morning," all singing praise unto our God and Chief Shephehrd, who will shortly come.

3:00 o'clock—Sermon by Bro. Anderson. Subject, "The Ark." Beautifully illustrated thoughts, types and symbols. One can not get weary in listening to the clear and entirely scriptural discourses of Bro. Anderson. Good attendance by village people. Some were asking: "Never heard so much Bible; why, the people around here don't know anything about the Bible."

3:45—Homegoing of those from a distance.

6:00 o'clock—Supper. Many with basket leftovers resorted to the hospitable Kauffman home, where all together there was sufficient for a refreshing last supper—"the hot coffee good." Bro. Anderson was one of the number. "How good to be both temporally and spiritually fed with wholesome, unmixed food."

The day was hot, with short thunderstorms in the afternoon, but they only cooled the air, so the evening was delightful with starlit heavens.

Evening service 7:30—Bro. Anderson. Subject, by request of village people, "The Second Coming of Christ." Reading, first three verses of John 14. Text, John 13:33.

Bro. and Sister Robison had hoped to be present, but ill health would not permit. The day was a strenuous one for Bro. Anderson. For some time he feared he could not be with us, as their eldest daughter, Mellie, was very sick, but fervent prayers in her behalf were answered.

Come and worship with us. Take S. T. and P. traction line for Lawrenceville.

M. WOODRURY.

ARGOS, IND., MEETING

The church of Argos, Ind., will, God willing, hold an evangelistic and Bible conference August 9th to 13th. The evangelistic services will contine until August 22nd.

The speakers will be Mrs. Clara Chaffee, Chicago; H. V. Reed, Magnolia Springs, Ala.; L. E. Conner, Cleveland, and C. C. Maple, Elyria, Ohio. Mrs. Lydia Railsback, South Bend, will have charge of the children's meetings. All friends of the word of truth are invited to attend.

MRS. FRANK BOGGS, Sec'y.

Roebling, the engineer who built the Brooklyn bridge, said:

"My first thought when I begin to plan any work is as to how it will endure. I may wish it to be beautiful, I may wish it to win me fame, I may desire it to gain money for me, but these are not my uppermost thoughts.

"My all-powerful thought is to have the bridge endure, to honestly serve the people who paid for it, and to keep up my reputation as an honest man."

If this genius could feel so in regard to the final end of a bridge, how much stronger should be the human thought for the formation of the character.

THE ALL IN CHRIST

"For As in Adam All Die, So Also in Christ Will All be Made Alive" (1 Cor. 15:22).

The above text has been a source of much controversy among different expositors. One class sees in it universal resurrection and universal salvation for all mankind; others limit it to those who are asleep in Christ. Both views cannot be true. Prof. C. F. Hudson presents a critical point in the text which is quite generally overlooked. He says: "We think the verse applies to the subjects of Paul's previous discourse, the pronoun being contained in the verb, as in Luke 20:38: 'For as in Adam they all die, even so in Christ shall they all be made alive.' Thus understood, the harmony of the passage with vss. 45-58 appears at once" ("Christ our Life," page 15).

The first question which presents itself is: Do believers die in Adam, and do sinners die in Christ? To avoid the force of the above point, it requires a change in the construction of the text as follows. "By Adam all die, even so by Christ all will be made alive." The reader will at once see the force of the above statement. The phrase "in Christ" occurs nearly one hundred times in the writings of Paul, but it never refers to any one but to those who are believers in Christ. And when the death of believers is mentioned, they are represented as "asleep in Christ," or "dying in the Lord," or "dead in Christ," etc. In the 18th verse of this same chapter (1 Cor. 15), the apostle refers the phrase directly to those who are believers: "Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished" (2 Cor. 5:17). The wicked do not die in Christ, neither do the believers die in Adam. The wicked do not sleep in Christ, while in the state of death; they are yet in Adam, and therefore cannot be raised in Christ. Our Lord makes it plain that the believer is raised to life, but that other class "to condemnation." "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son, hath not life." Hence it will be impossible to raise the wicked dead "in Christ" whatever views we may have of human destiny. We must adhere to the one great fact that wicked men cannot be raised in Christ, as they were never inducted into him. They are not in Christ while alive; they do not die in Christ, and are not in Christ while dead. There is only one way to evade this position, and that is to adopt the Catholic purgatory system, and reform the whole world of the wicked dead, and have them purified and made new creatures in Christ, so that they all may be raised in him and be of them who are Christ's at his coming! But the wicked dead who die in Adam cannot be raised in our Lord at "the resurrection of the just." As all in Adam die, so all in the Christ will be made alive, and will put on immortality at his coming. This view presents a complete harmony of the whole chapter of 1 Corinthians 15. Christ is the first fruits of those who sleep in him. He who sows to the flesh, will reap corruption; and he who sows to the spirit, will reap life everlasting. So it appears to me.

There has been considerable demand among the brotherhood for a Sunday School department in The Restitution. Heretofore we have not been able to supply this demand. Not that we could not fill up space with weak attempts at Sunday School work, as nearly all religious papers do; but we have refused to waste valuable space with the childish prattle that passes for Sunday School helps. However, we have now arranged for Sunday School material that is worthy the high standard of The Restitution; and beginning this week, the "Sunday School Department" will be a fixed feature in our paper.

Our self-confidence is in the way of our receiving many a divine blessing. The child Christ set in the midst of his disciples was humble (Matt. 18).

Have we not always found in our past experience that, on the whole, our kind and brotherly interpretations of another's motives and deeds were truer than our unkind and unbrotherly ones?

Sunday, July 9th, Mrs, M. Keith, formerly adhering to the Salvation Army, was baptized into Christ. She is a sister in the flesh to Sister Finlayson. Brother Watt is a zealous distributor of sample copies of The Restitution. He left his Restitutions, after reading them himself, with Sister Keith, for the whole of the past year; and you may judge of his surprise when he was told that she had leaned the gospel by reading The Restitution.

Word comes from Sister Amy Weaver that Sister Emma Forester fell asleep in Jesus July 9th, after a lingering illness. Obituary latter.

Sister Ella Knowles writes: "We were sorry to learn that you have been sick, and hope you are well again. We are pleased to have Brother and Sister Robison with us again after their long absence; but sorry to tell you that Brother Robison has been confined to his bed with lagrippe. He has been very weak, but we think he is gaining strength, and hope he will soon be able to be with us in our little meetings again, to teach in our Sunday school and to preach the word."

JUDGMENT IS BOTH PRE AND POST-RESURRECTIONAL

A sister who rather inclines to the theory of mortal emergence writes: "There is considerable testimony which bears out the idea of immortal emergence, but I believe Paul is speaking elliptically when he says the dead are 'raised incorruptible.' To me Christ's prerogative as judge is nullified by a pre-millenial judgment. 'It is appointed to men once to die, and after this the judgment' (Heb. 9:27). What do you think on this question?"

We think that diversity of opinion on this subject results from finite minds mistaking half of the truth for the whole truth; or of making one part of truth antagonize another part. To repudiate a premillenial judgment because we find texts which speak of a post-resurrectional judgment is to accept one half of truth at the sacrifice of the other half. The text quoted to prove a post resurrectional judgment, Heb. 9:27, does not do it exclusively, for the next verse is declaratory of those who will be saved at the judgment "after" death: "Those that look for him"—to these he will appear the second time "unto salvation." Let the sister diligently study the messages of Christ to the seven churches of Asia, recorded in the second and third chapters of the Apocaypse, noting carefully how our Lord commends some things and how he condemns others, and we fell sure she will not deny again that judgment is now in process of administration. Postresurrectional judgment is not the beginning of a process, but the completion of a process already begun. If we pass the time of our sojourning here "in fear," as Paul admonishes; if we make our calling and election "sure," as Peter evhorts, the future judgment, however terrible it may be to the ungodly, can have no terrors for us. If we are "faultless" we have the promise of being presented before the presence of his throne and glory "with exceeding joy" (Jude 24).

IS A PAID MINISTRY SCRIPTURAL?

A correspondent in Chicago writes: "You have a paid ministry, which reminds me of God's word by Malichi: 'Who is there among you that would shut the doors for naught, neither do you kindle fire on mine altar for naught.' Of course we know the laborer is worthy of his hire, and that we are not permitted to muzzle the ox; still Paul of whom it is said, 'Be ye followers of me, 'wrought with his own hands and was chargeable to no man (2 Thess. 3:7-12; 1 Thess. 4:11). I like The Restitution, and will try and subscribe for it the first of the year."

Editor's Reply

This writer objects to a paid ministry, and as she represents quite a band in this objection, we feel that good for the cause of truth will result by subjecting the scriptures quoted against the practice of a paid ministry to a critical examination. Are Bible teachings opposed to a paid ministry? Let us see.

The text first quoted is from Mal. 1:10. It was addressed to Israel (verse 1), not to the ministers of the sanctuary. The priests are not mentioned until we get to Mal. 2:1. The text, we repeat, was spoken to Israel, the people in general; the people who had so apostatised from God's law which required the best (Lev. 22:20, 24), that they brought the worst! They brought the blind, the lame, the sick, for sacrifice (verse 9); and the rebuke of the 10th verse is right here: The very people who made such niggardly gifts to God would not serve as a door keeper unless paid! If it is insisted that the ministering priests are meant, and that they only had the right to "kindle a fire" on God's altar, then we must tell you that they were allowed "to live of the things of the temple" (1 Cor. 9:18); the law cutting them off from all secular employment, and making their living wholly depend upon the offerings of the people (Lev. 6:16; Deut. 10:9; Numb. 18:20). Malichi 1:10 is not condemning but merely recognizing as a fact the custom then in vogue, and in vogue by the express command of God, that those who shut the door of the temple (the janitor) and those who kindled a fire on God's altar for sacrificial purposes (the priests, if you will,) were paid for their services. To condemn this custom is to condemn God's law which created the custom. The inadequacy of this text for the purpose of condemning ministerial support is preceptibly felt by the writer, for she speedily dismisses it to point to the example of Paul.

Will you allow us to say before we study the example of Paul that it is a freakish characteristic of all opponents of a paid ministry to skip Christ, the perfect example, and take Paul, the imperfect. There must be some reason for dodging the example of Him whose steps we are to follow (1 Pet. 2:21). Paul says we are to be followers of him certainly, but only to this extent, "As I am of Christ" (1 Cor. 2:1). He is only to be followed when he follows the Christ. What light does the example of Christ shed on the question of a paid ministry? He was a carpenter, you say, and made his own living at secular work. Yes, until he began to preach the gospel. He never worked at his trade again. "He went about doing good" (Acts 10:38); but if his followers had been drilled against paying or supporting him, he would soon have been forced back to the carpenter's bench at Nazareth. How did Christ manage to live for three years and one-half and not do secular work? Luke answers the question, and will our no-pay-minister advocates listen to him? "And it came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every city and village, preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God. . . . And Joanna and many others ministered to him of their substance" (8:1-3). Luke only mentions a few of the brethren and sisters who supported our Lord in his ministry; but that their action in the matter represented the general sentiment of believers at that time he shows by stating that "many others" participated with those he names in this work of love. If paying a minister is wrong, is it not strange that these disciples of Christ were not corrected by the Savior, and, if it were wrong, marvel of marvels, that our Lord should accept their "substance!"

The example of our perfect pattern speaks loud as thunder in justification of a paid ministry. This explains why those who oppose the compensation of ministerial labor evade the Savoir, and go on aggressively fighting the example which he has left us to follow (1 Pet. 2:21). They are great on Paul and his example. Well, if Paul or any other saint in the world, however good, has acted differently to our Lord, cling to the Lord's example still! Let us then settle it forever before we study Paul's example in this matter, that if he acted differently to his Master, the servant is wrong and hisMaster is right.

What then about the example of Paul? Just a sample of his teaching and example in 1 Cor. 9.

He begins by saying to those who examined him, (no-pay-minister advocates doubtless, vs. 3), that he had the "power" or right to have a wife and take her with him in his ministerial journeys, if he wanted to; so did the "other apostles, and the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas" (vs. 5); that Barnabas had quit working, and he had the "power" or right to quit! (vs. 6); that the brethren paid all the charges or expenses of his trips (vs. 7); that the ox must be fed for his work (vs. 9); that he preached "in hope" of receiving "carnal things" in the way of compensation (vss. 10. 11); and that preachers of the gospel should make a living of the gospel (vs. 14). Why, the servant talks just like his Master! They are both agreed that the minister is to be supported.

Our sister grants as much, but nullifies her concession by saying, "Still Paul, of whom it is said, 'Be ye followers of me,' wrought with his own hands," etc. She refers to 2 Thess. 3:7-10. To understand Paul on this occasion we must take into consideration the circumstances. A report had spread among the brethren of Thessalonica that Paul had written a "letter" to the effect that the day of Christ was at hand. This had "shaken them in mind" (2:2). They began to act like people did in the "Miller Movement:" they sold their property and quit work. To sober them and put them on their feet again, to stop their "disorderly" conduct, he reminds them how orderly he behaved among them, how he "wrought with labor," and how that "if any would not work, neither should he eat." Owing to this extraordinary condition in Thessalonica he worked himself to show the brethren by example how they should remain faithful to their duties; and that the Lord's coming was not possible for a long time to come. Though he acted thus to sober their fanatacism, he boldly asserts, even here, "Not because we have not power" (2 Thess. 3:9). The lawless, "disorderly" condition of things in this church caused him to act among them the part of a laborer, while having "power" to do otherwise. Whether he was justified in doing as he did, is another question. To the Corinthians he says he did not use his "power" (1 Cor. 9:12), but afterwards confessed that he did wrong, and asked their forgiveness. He also frankly admits that they were inferior to other churches. His words are: "For what is it wherein ye were inferior to other church, except it be that I myself was not burdensome to you? Forgive me this wrong" (2 Cor. 12:13).

In conclusion we ask opponents of a paid ministry to note two truths that are contained in 2 Cor. 12:13:

1. That the church at Corinth did not pay Paul for preaching, and this made them "inferior to other churches;"
2. And that Paul confesses he did "wrong" to preach without pay, and asks their forgiveness.

From Sister "D. F."

Dear Sister Wince: In reading The Restitution I notice the brothers are trying to raise enough money to buy a linotype machine. Inclosed you will find two dollars. It is not very much, but it will help some. I will try to help some more later on. May the Lord give us all a charitable hearts, and we need not fear, but what the machine will come in due time.

From a Sister in Christ.

FROM SISTER ELLA KNOWLES

Dear Restitution:

I have just finished reading an article in The Restitution of July 4th by Sister Birdie Krogh. In the article she says: "Parents neglect too much the teaching of the children from the scriptures, leaving it all to the Sunday School teacher." I am very much pleased with her article, as I have taught in the Sunday School for a number of years. It is surprising how many of the children of those who are members of the body are so little acquainted with the scriptures. The little ones love the simple Bible stories, and if taught them thoroughly they are never forgotten. In our Sunday School almost all of our children belong to those outside of the body, and we must teach them all they know of the scriptures. We have a brother and sister that live so far away that they can not meet with us often, but their little girl of three years of age answered so many questions and knew so much of the Bible that other children would ask about the little girl that knew so much about the Bible. Brothers and sisters, you can do so much to help the Sunday School and to help your children by doing as the sister advised, teach your little ones to love the simple Bible stories, and as they grow older teach them to know the prophets and the Bible promises, for the time is too short to be taken up with the many pleasures of the world. Surely the world is pleasure-mad. If those of the Church of God have no time to teach their children to love God's word, and if those that teach in our Sunday Schools have no time to help teach the children the beautiful lessons, the wonderful things that are promised that Christ is soon coming to fulfill, the church is in a sat plight. The Church of God needs earnest workers in this time of waiting.

THAT LINOGRAPH-LINOTYPE AGAIN

By S. Roxana Wince

Certainly! Not a moment are we going to halt until we reach the goal. Patiently and perseveringly pressing forward with our eyes fixed upon that shining beacon, and footsteps guided by the hand of God, we shall not fail.

The army that has God on its side is never defeated in the final outcome.

"Ever the fire has gleamed on the way to the promised land:" and still it gleams before us, setting our hearts to singing:

"The cause of thy master with vigor defend,
Be watchful, be zealous and fight to the end
Whenever he leads thee go, valiantly go,
And stand like the brave with thy face to the foe."

It is not a small thing that is at stake, dear brethren and sisters. Cannot I make you see? It is "God's Cause" that is appealing to you! The Restitution is the means he is using to bring that "Cause" to the attention of men. Shall it plead to you in vain? He or she, who can give but a single dollar may tip the beam toward the side of victory; even 25 cents may turn the scale.

"We see dimly in the present
What is small or what is great,
Slow of faith, how weak an arm, may Turn the iron helm of fate.

And more dimly still do we realize what the results of the turning of this helm may be. It is a great thing to make the sinful, ignorant ones of earth, good and happy and comfortable here, but how much greater a thing to bring them to such saving knowledge of Jesus that they may attain unto the life that will never have an end!

Oh to have the love that was in the heart of Christ; O to be like-minded with him! He became poor for our sakes, and that leaves us to infer that his family was a wealthy one. But it was all put aside. An earthly crown and kingdom with its fading pageants, appealed to him without avail; he had come to save us, and salvation could be brought about only at the cost of his life. None but a sinless victim could unbar the gates of death and so he died! It makes me feel that all, all I have and am must be laid at his dear feet, that not a thing can I withhold." What does it matter about the style of my gown," or if sometimes I "must pattel around in bare feet?" I will gladly do it if some one can thereby be saved.

Jesus was in the royal line, both through Joseph, —his legal father,—and through Mary, his mother. He might have been a king then and there. No one could have said him nay, not even Herod, not even Rome. But that was not God's plan. The bruising of his heel, must come, before the triumph and the reigning.

He did so much for you, what will you do for him? How much give up? Dear ones, don't hold fast to your money when God asks you for it. You can't take it with you into the grave. "Shrouds have no pockets." Leave to your children your accummulated treasures, and in a few years every penny will be gone. Lay up your treasurers in heaven.

OBITUARY

Emma Chapman, oldest child of Dr. Clark Chapman and Bithiah Chapman, was born December 23, 1848, near Argos, Indiana, and died July 2, 1916, aged 68 years, 6 months, 9 days.

She was united in marriage to B. F. Taylor December 5, 1867. She was the mother of four children, Effie, George, Florence and Lura. Effie died at the age of four years.

She was obedient to the gospel message and was baptized by Elder S. A. Chaplin March 19, 1868, and united with the Antioch Church. Sister Taylor has been a good wife and faithful mother. She was especially untiring in the care of her mother Taylor in her old age sickness and death some years ago. She was an accommodating neighbor, ever ready to lend a helping hand to those in distress. She was a student of the Bible and a regular attendant at church services when able.

She has been sick for five years, but bore her afflictions with great patience. She rested her hope upon a resurrection from the death state to a condition of freedom from the ills of the flesh.

Of her father's family she leaves three brothers and five sisters. And of her own household she leaves her husband, B. F. Taylor, three children, George of Argos, Mrs. Florence Cordill, and Miss Lura, both of Mishawaka, Indiana, and three grand-children and one great grand-child.

She's laid to rest from toil and pain,
To wait her Savior's rule and reign.
We drop the sympathizing tear;
We'll miss her voice, and her good cheer.
But, there will come a fairer day,
When life will come, and come to stay.

Funeral services were held from the residence Wednesday, July 5, 1916, at 2:30 p. m. Many floral gifts expressed the love and esteem in which our sister was held. We spoke words of comfort to the bereaved friends from John 14:19. Burial was made in Maple Grove cemetery.

MICHIGAN CONFERENCE REPORT

The annual conference of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith in Michigan met at Blanchard, Isabela County, Thursday evening, June 22, 1916, and continued over Sunday. Meeting called to order at 7:30 p. m. Opening hymn, "To the Work." Lesson read by Sister M. A. Woodward (John 15:1-8): "I am the true vine." Words of welcome by Bro. B. W. Woodward, with a short gospel sermon. Response by Sister M. A. Woodward, and sermon, "The Duty of the Hour" (John 5:17).

The meeting was held in the beautiful new church, which is large, well lighted and convenient in every way. A motion was made at the business meeting by Bro. Wm. McCrodan that the conference cancel the loan of $300 given at the Adrian Quarterly Conference to the church at Blanchard, and also that the $100 received from the sale of the Watson church be presented to their church was unanimously carried. This decision of the conference greatly rejoiced the hearts of Blanchard brethren, who had made such efforts to build their church.

We were royally entertained by the brethren and friends, and we thank them for all their kindness and hospitality, and wish them success in every way.

Ministers present: Bro. S. J. Lindsay, of Oregon, Ill.; Bro. F. V. Blakley, of Grand Rapids, Mich.; Bro. B. W. and Sister M. A. Woodward, of Dutton, Mich. Bro. and Sister Lindsay, of Oregon, Ill., were the only ones from a distance. It was a pleasure to us that dear Sister Lindsay could meet with us. The attendance was very good, brethren coming from all parts of the State.

Auditing Committee: Sister Blakley and Bro. A. K. Richardson. A committee of three was appointed to arrange for the evangelistic work during the coming year. Bro. Edwin Coats, Sister M. A. Woodward and Sister Rosetta Hill were appointed to this committee, Sister Woodward being made chairman.

June 23rd. Meeting called to order by Sister Woodward. Sermon, Bro. S. J. Lindsay. Lesson, 1 Cor. 13: Subject, "Charity." 2 p. m., sermon by Sister Woodward (John 21:1-19): "Lovest thou me?" 7 p. m., social meeting led by Sister Moses. Sermon by Bro. Lindsay; lesson, Dan. 2:1-48; subject, "The Kingdom of God."

June 24th. 11 a. m., sermon by Bro. Blakley (Eph. 4), "The Body of Christ." 7 p. m., social meeting led by Sister Woodward. A lesson on love and obedience, followed by a good sermon by Bro S. J. Lindsay. Lesson, Gal. 3. Subject, "Law vs. Gospel."

June 25. 9:30 a. m., an interesting session of the Sunday School was held. Bro. George Scott is superintendent. 10:30 a. m., sermon by Bro. Lindsay. Subject, "Baptism."

On Sunday Bro. Lindsay assisted five dear ones in putting on the all-saving name of Jesus: Cecil Scott, Mrs. Frances Munn, Mrs. Ada Jane Daniels, Dale Bissel, May Robinson. At 2 p. m. sermon by Bro. Woodward, "I Have Kept the Faith," followed by communion service administered by Sister Woodward and Bro. Blakley. At 6:30 p. m. a very interesting session of the Berean Society was held, led by Bro. Blakley. Cecil Scott recited "The Vacation of a Minister," and Sister Lesh "The Drinking House Over the Way." At 7:30 p. m. an eloquent and instructive sermon from Bro. Lindsay, "A Picture of Hope" (Isaiah 65:17): "For behold, I create a new heaven and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind." Subject, "The Restoration Age." It was indeed inspiring and uplifting.

The Bible School which directly followed the conference was in charge of Bro. Lindsay, who gave us excellent lessons, which we pray may be with us all through our lives.

May we in humiliation subdue all sin and conquer self, and win a crown of life, is my wish for each and all.

EMMA JACKMAN, Sec'y.

A little boy asked "mamma" the following questions, to which all "mamma's" answers are not yet recorded—"Mamma, if a bear should swallow me, I should die, shouldn't I?" "Yes, dear." "And should I go to heaven?" "Yes, dear." "And would the bear have to go too?"

"What is the value of this estate?" said one gentleman to another with whom he was riding, as they passed a fine mansion surrounded by fair and fertile fields.

"I don't know at what it is valued; I know what it cost its late possessor."

"How much?"

"His soul."

The Greatest Discovery. "What do you consider the greatest discovery you ever made?" an interviewer asked Sir James Y. Simpson, the eminent Scotch surgeon and the discoverer of chloroform. "That I have a Savior," he replied, without hesitation.

The poor useth entreaties; but the rich answereth roughly.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:16, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:25, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-55); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:15; Rom 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17) and belief in the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13:3), and obedience by baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:28), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31). MY IDEA OF PEACE

Lord of heaven and of earth,
Grant thy kingdom soon a birth;
May it reach from sea to sea,
And include both you and me;
May the nations now at war
Come to thee, accept thy power.
Hear the cry of "Peace on earth."
Praise the God who gave it birth;
Bring the day when war shall cease.
Then we'll live with Christ in peace.

PULPITS ECHOES: FUTURE PUNISHMENT

A Sermon by Robt. G. Huggins, Reported by Geo. B. Alldridge

In the book of Daniel we have recorded a series of world wide prophecies. A careful and thoughtful study of them reveals to the unbias mind the supremacy of God. The subjection and punishment of King Nebuchadnezzar; proves conclusively that "the heaven do rule," and that God is absolutely supreme.

First, we notice the moral government of God.

We observe that all things, animate and inanimate, are subject to and are governed by law. Inanimate matter is blindly obedient to physical impulses. In the great animal world, in fact all sentient beings except mankind, every where are obedient to instinctive impulses. But man, the highest and most gifted creature habitat of this earth, we find that God has endowed him with an enlightened conscience, which subjects him to the moral law.

The question so often asked, "Why did God permit sin?" is answered by the wisdom of God in the arrangement whereby man is placed under the law of obedience, which brings blessings, and the law of disobedience, which brings cursings. By this arrangement the choice is left with man, a free moral agent, and involves necessarily the possibility of going wrong, and well as doing right. God is the author of this law. Since God is holy, just and righteous, the law, like himself, must necessarily be the same. If he is the author of law, and the creator of man, its subject, then he only can be his judge. "The Lord is our jurge, the Lord is our law giver, the Lord is our King; he will save us" (Isa. 33:22). "Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good" (Rom. 7:12). Now we can see secondly.

The excellency of divine law.

Man is free to do that which is right, to abhor that which is wrong. God has so constituted man that in the endowment to do right, the same endowment may be exercised to do that which is wrong. Paul declares that "the law" as a whole is good, "the commandment," or its several parts takes separately, is also good and wholesome. In Mark 12:19-31, the law is expressed by two commands, viz; Our duty towards God, and our duty towards man. In Exodus 20:12-17 an analysis of the law, or our duty towards man, is clearly given. Now notice, God is as the scripture declares, a "happy God." Hence any law that he is the author of must result in happiness to those who obey it. The law not only seeks to make you happy in obeying it, but it also makes your neighbor happy in preventing you from doing him a wrong.

Men who make no profession as believers, or follows of Christ, insist that the only way to bring justice and happiness among men, is by each living up to the requirements of the "golden rule." Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets" (Matt. 7:12). The conscience of every man approves "the golden rule." This becomes a wall of protection which the law of God, if obeyed, surround every man.

Christ only had one ambition and that was to glorify God (John 17:1). It is written of him in Isa. 42:21: "The Lord is well pleased for his righteousness' sake; he will magnify the law, and make it honorable." How did Christ magnify the law? Read Matt. 5:27-28: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery." But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." Jesus here points out that the law of God deals with internals, not externals. Men seek happiness of things without, but God's law establishes a condition of the heart, and that only can bring happiness. Happiness springs forth from within, not from things that are without. Robert Ingersoll, the great infidel, knew this secret or happiness. During a remarkable lecture given at Chicago a few years ago, he stated that Christ received his "admiration and his tears." As he studied the life of Christ and his devotion to the magnifying of the law of God, he realized that happiness could only come from that source; while on the other hand, he was utterly disgusted by the misery in the world caused by violating the law of God. But we must not stop at

Barren adminration of law; we must reach some sober conclusions.

It was right for God to give a "good law," making it our duty to love him supremely. How can God guard this law, since he has made it? By enforcing the penalty incurred by violating or disobedience of the law. If God has the right (which all men concede) to make this law, surely all will agree that God has the same right to inflict the penalty for its disobedience and violation. Then punishment becomes imperative. But we find that God's justice is coupled with mercy. Our Unitarian and Universalist friends object to the mercy of God. They claim that God's justice demands the payment of the uttermost farthing; that mercy is suggestive of weakness. But God's ways are not man's ways, neither are God's thoughts man's thoughts.

God has made a perfect adjustment between justice and mercy. This is made clear in Ezek. 18: 20-22: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father. neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him. But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die. All his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him: in his righteousness that he hath done he shall live."

These scriptures reveal this fact that some are not punished. on the contrary, they are saved Paul in Rom. 3 chapter makes this very clear. Some objector may say "that God's ways are not equal." Paul cuts this "Gordon Knot" and shows us the equality of God's ways. In this remarkable chapter (Rom. 3). Paul reasons that the Jew through unbelief was no better than the unbelieving Gentile. "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God. There is none good. no not one."

How. than. can God forgive us. and yet be just?

Paul tells us in Col. 1:13, 14, that God hath "delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son, in whom we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." How so Paul? Just this way: God imputes to us who believe and obey the gospel the righteousness of another. This is how Paul works this out: "Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation (satisfaction) through faith in his blood to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God: to declare at this time, his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus" (Rom. 3).

Now notice Paul's next question: "Where is boasting then? It is excluded. By what law of work? Nay; but by the law of faith." All the requirements of the law Jesus met: God's justice and abhorance of sin was meted out upon Christ He died the just for the unjust. A sacrifice for sin—the sin offering. God's mercy was manifested towards us. By belief and obedience to the gospel, our sins are remitted: we come out from under the curse, visited upon all mankind, and are adopted into the family of God, made fellow heirs with Christ, whose righteousness manifested in his obedience even unto death, is imputed unto us. Hence we stand before God accepted in his beloved Son, covered with the robe of the righteousness, which protection can only save us from the wrath of God, resting upon the children of disobedience.

After hearing this discourse this hymn was sung which to the writer had a new meaning:

Our heavenly Father, hear
The prayer we offer now;
They name be hallowed far and near,
To thee all nations bow.

Thy kingdom come, thy will
On earth be done in love,
As angels quick with love fulfill,
Thy perfect law above.

Our daily bread supply,
while by thy word we live;
The guilt of our iniquity
Forgive as we forgive.

From dark temptation's power.
From fleshly lust defend:
Deliver in the evil hour,
And guide us to the end.

Thine then forever be
Glory and power divine;
The sceptre, throne and majesty
Of heaven and earth are thine.

THE DESTINY OF THE EARTH

No. 3.

Jesus says, "Heaven and earth shall pass away. but my words shall not pass away" (Matt. 24:35). He also says, "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5). If both passages are literal, and "the earth" in the first means the present earth as it now stands, what reason have we for saying that the same words (the earth) in the second means a newly created earth that shall take the place of this one? It seems that one of the passages must be taken figuratively: for when the meek inherit the earth they shall "dwell therein for ever" (Psa. 37:29). And Solomon says, "The righteous shall never be removed: but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth" (Prov. 10: 30). It certainly must be the literal earth from which the righteous are never removed, and that proves that it will never be destroyed, or pass away: but we have seen that figuratively speaking, earths have passed away, and will in the future; so conclude Jesus was speaking figuratively when he uttered the text at the beginning of this article. "But the day of the Lord will come as a theif in the night; in which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and earth also and the works that are therein, shall be burned up" (2 Pet. 3:10). "Looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be disolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat" (vs. 12). What this text alludes to must occur very near the second advent of Jesus: for the day of its occurence comes at an unexpected time like that of the advent. and the fact that it is. "The heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition (destruction) of ungodly men," which comes with the advent (see ver. 7, and 2 Thess. 1:7-10). But if the literal earth is burned up at that time. where will Israel be. that she can return to her own land, never to be removed out of it again, as the prophets have promised? If mortal she would be burned with the earth, and that would be the end of her: for she is never told that she shall go to a new land, but return to the land given her at first, and which they once did inhabit (see Jer. 16:15; Isa. 43:6; Ezek. 37:25).

Then does Peter teach the burning up of the literal earth? Let us see: "For this they are willingly ignorent of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water: whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water perished" (ver. 5). Peter here mentions the flood, and speaks of the world perishing then. Did the literal earth perish in the flood? No. How do I know? Because Peter says it was, "the world of the ungodly" that was destroyed by the flood (chap. 2:5). The literal earth is the same that was created in the beginning (Gen. 1:1). Then it is the ungodly that will be destroyed at the advent, and that is exactly what Peter says, "the perdition of ungodly men." Their works and systems will also be destroyed. "And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was no place for them" (Rev. 20:11). Is it the literal here? If so. where will they fly to? Will they go out of existence, as there is no place for them? They must if they have no place in which to rest, and then all that God has said about the earth being the eternal home of the saved is false. Who can accuse God of falsehood? None who acknowledge his existence. Then his promises are true, and the righteous will dwell in the earth eternally; and the figure used by John teaches something else John continues: "And I saw the dead, small and great. stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened. which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it," etc. (vers. 12. 13). The literal sea is on the literal earth. and if the literal earth was gone where was the literal sea that the dead could come out of it? It is very clear that we can not literalize here, for it would do away with a place from which to raise the dead, and hence do away with the resurrection at least of some whom God says shall be raised. Then "heaven and earth" must stand for system that shall pass away at the close of the age to which John alludes. and then a new order will take their place, called "new heaven and new earth." Peter says: "Nevertheless. we. according to promise. look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" Who promised a new heaven and earth? Isaiah: "For behold. I (God) create a new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered. nor come into mind" (Isa. 65:17). What was God going to create? Let him explain: "But be ye glad and rejoice in that which I create; for behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy" (Isa. 65:19). Then Jerusalem rejoicing and her people a joy is the new heaven and earth, and not an earth made out of the ashes of the present one. Again Isaiah says: "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain." Whose seed and name? Israel's (ver. 20). "And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. And they shall go forth, and look upon carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched" (Chapt. 66:22-24). This text shows that the carcasses of the men that have transgressed will still exist at the beginning of the new heavens and the new earth, which could not be if the literal earth is burned up and recreated unless the carcasses were also made new out of the ashes to which they had been burned by the fires of their perdition. Then we conclude that the literal earth will never be destroyed and recreated, but will continue to exist as it is with its mountain heights and fertile plains covered with verdant flowers and fruits that will bless and make it glorious for a habitation for man.

PRAYER IN THE NAME

No. 3

John: Well, I'm here again for another lesson on the name that is above every other name.

Tom: Come in, John, take a seat. I am glad to see you again, and to see that you are on time.

John: I have been reading the following passages of Scripture: "And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it" (John 14:13, 14). "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name he may give it you" (John 15:16). "Verily. verily I say unto you. Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name he will give it you. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name. Ask and ye shall receive. that your joy may be full" (John 16:23, 24). Now. is that the only name by which we must pray to God?

Tom: Yes, you remember that Christ is the only way or name by which we can approach God (John 4:6; Heb. 10:19, 20).

John: Must one be in Christ before he can use the model prayer given in Matt. 6:9-13?

Tom: Yes. In Matt. 5:1,2, we find that Christ left the multitudes and went upon the mountain and taught his disciples, and in his sermon on the mount he gave them the model prayer. In Luke 11:1-4 we find that one of his disciples asked him to teach them how to pray. and in his reply he gave them the model prayer. By reading Eph. 3:14, 15. and John 8:44 you will find that there are two families on earth. God's and satan's. Now, before we can address God as "our Father" we must become his children. Do you understand this point, John?

John: Yes, I believe I do, and I understand that by faith and baptism we take the one name and are adopted into the family of God.

Tom: I am glad that you see that point, and some time I hope to show you that to have the one faith we must believe certain things taught in the Bible.

John: Very well. I hope to be ready, but tonight I would like to take up the model prayer. As you have opened my eyes to the fact that this prayer belongs to the Lord's family, and some day I hope to be a member of that family.

Tom: I hope you will, John, and now we will take up the model prayer. First, we notice the first two words, "Our Father." John, if God is our Father, then we are his sons, and in Rom. 8: 14-19, we find these words: "For as many as are led by the spirit (word John 6:63) of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to bear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption whereby we cry (pray), Abba Father. The spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are children of God. And if children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together; * * * for the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God."

John: God must have a great love for the children of men to give them the privilege of coming out of the world and being adopted into the family of God and made joint heirs with Christ.

Tom: Yes, indeed. Turning to 1 John 3:1-3 we find these words: "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

John: Wonderful love!

Tom: Yes, worthy of our Father. In Gal. 4:6 we read: "And because ye are sons God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying: Abba Father. Now, John, you see that we are in a position to pray, as Paul did, "with the spirit and the understanding also" (1 Cor. 14:15).

John: Yes, I see that when we become members of God's family and are guidded by the spirit word, that then we can worship God in spirit and in truth, and thus please him and know Christ and glorify the name (John 4:21-24).

Tom: Yes, John, when we get into that position our prayers will be answered; for we then shall not ask amiss, because we shall be guided by the word. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you" (John 15:7).

John: Well, well, it's 11 o'clock, and I must get up at 5 a. m., and we have examined only two words in the model prayer.

Tom: Yes, it is past my bedtime, but I have been very much interested in our lesson. Come again next Wednesday evening, and we'll continue the investigation of the model prayer.

RESISTING TEMPTATION

So long as we live in this present world we cannot expect to be without tribulation and temptation. We must therefore be watchful and prayerful, lest we be deceived. Prayer is necessary to keep us out of temptation. After Christ finished praying in the garden, he came to his disciples and said, "Why sleep ye? Rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation."

No one is free from temptation, while in this present world, for the root of it is in us. We are born with an inclination to evil. We can expect nothing else but tribulation because we have fallen away from our state of felicity, through our first parents. We have a tendency to feel, at times, that our temptations are greater then those of another. Paul said to the Corinthians, "There hath no temptation taken you but such is common to man." We cannot expect to get away from temptations, for we meet them on every side. We must meet them and overcome them with patience and humility; which will make us strong. Temptations are often very profitable, for in them we are humbled and instructed. It is a good thing, sometimes, that we have these troubles, for they make us examine ourselves and realize in what a hopeless condition we are, of ourselves. when thus afflicted, troubled, or tempted, we can understand better the great need we have of God, without whom we can do nothing. Such a condition demands faith and trust in a greater power than one's self. Such things help us to gain the sweet virture, humility, and safeguard us from self-esteem and vain-glory; for then we are inclined to seek God.

Temptation begins with lack of confidence in God. Without temptation we cannot prove what we are. We are worth more in God's sight if we overcome than if we had never been tempted. "Life's gold comes out of its furnaces of affliction." How true this is of one who has been tempted and has overcome. If we are faithful and trust in God we will be as the gold of which one author has said, "Gold remains gold though it lie in the mud." The beginning of evil must be guarded against; for after the first thought of evil there comes a strong imagination, then delight and finally consent. Little by little we will be tempted and overcome by the adversary if we entertain the bare thought thereof. We must act immediately, for the longer we neglect resistance the weaker we become, and the stronger the enemy. It is our duty; our responsibility. No one else will overcome this for us. We are the ones involved. "No strong character can be developed unless emphasis be laid upon the thought of personal responsibility."

Some are tempted more than others; according to the wisdom and justice of the Divine hand. "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able to bear; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it" (1 Cor. 10:13). God allows us to suffer these things that he may make better men and women of us.

By these obstacles we develop better character. "Often the bitterest things in life bring out the sweetest and best in character." We ought not then to despair when tempted, but so much the more fervently pray to God. Through temptations and afflictions we are proved how much we have profited and thereby our reward is greater. Let us look unto God, for "the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations." Let us, beloved, continue to have faith in him, for unless God is with us, all our toil is vain.

"MEN-AH! MEN-AH!"

Every day the traveller in the East sees things which remind him of the Scriptures, and illustrate the teachings of the Savior. The Eastern shepherd and his flock are perpetual reminders of our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep, and the flock of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood.

The "Christian Age" tells of an American traveling in Syria who saw three native shepherds bring their flocks to the same brook, and the flocks drank there together. At length one shepherd arose and called out, "Men-ah! men-ah!" the Arabic for "follow me." His sheep came out of the common herd and followed him up the hillside. The next shepherd did the same, and his sheep went away with him, and the man did not even stop to count them. The traveler said to the remaining shepherd:

"Just give me your turban and crook, and see if they will not follow me as well as you."

So he put on the shepherd's dress and called out, "Men-ah! men-ah!" but not a sheep moved.

"They knew not the voice of a stranger."

"Will your flock never follow anybody but you?" inquired the gentleman. The Syrian shepherd replied:

"Oh, yes; sometimes a sheep gets sick, and then he will follow any one." Is it not so with the flock of Christ?—Sel.

A NEW CURE FOR PNEUMONIA

Doctor Park, in the Medical Record Journal, tells that he has discovered a new treatment for pneumonia, which seems to effect a cure every time. His published statement, intended for physicians, is briefly stated as follows.

"In 2 ounces of chemically pure distilled water I dissolved 15 grains each of solium salicylate and the soluble phosphate of iron. This solution is sterilized by heat, and on cooling there is added 15 minims of saturated calcium-creosote mixture, the whole then being passed through a small laboratory porcelain filter. The injections are made through the skin, with an all-glass syringe, using a 27-gauge needle, into one of the large veins of the forearm. Great care, of course, is taken with the asepsis and also to be sure that the needle is within the vein. If it is properly inserted there will be absolutely no pain. If pain is felt, it means that he needle has gone into the muscle instead, and the injection must instantly be stopped and a new trial made. There may be a momentary flushing of the face and occasionally a temporary nausea. The dose varies from 2 to 5 c.c., according to circumstances. The injection must be made very slowly."

MEMORIALS

Yesterday was the fourth of July, a legal holiday. During the greater part of the day business was suspended and people went here and there hunting some place to spend the time in pleasure. As I sat on the porch watching the people go by, some to a picnic and some to fish, I wondered how many were thinking of what the holiday meant. I am satisfied the majority never thought once of what the "fourth" means to us. In fact, the event it celebrates is so far in the past that many hardly know it, and care little for it if they do. Memorials cease to be of any value in proportion to the way people lose their significance. Usually they are detrimental when the object is lost to view. They degenerate into a blind search for pleasure or into actual dissipation.

What is true of national affairs along this line is unfortunately true of religious matters. The communion is clearly a memorial service. It proclaims the death of Christ and we do it in memory of him. When separated from this idea it is utterly valueless. The first day of the week is not significant so much as a rest day, as the time when Jesus arose from the dead, and the time to remember him in the supper memorial. It is not surprising the people who know nothing of the true significance of the day, make it a time of pleasure, fun, visiting and excursions—in fact, anything for diversion, but never consider the real import. Such people care nothing for the communion service. A big dinner, an all-day singing, an excursion on train or boat, a baseball game or a picture show will be amply sufficient to keep them away from this sacred memorial. Of course we do not expect the world to care for this service, but we do have a right to expect Christians to know their duty. When they fail it is because they have lost sight of what it signifies. When we fully appreciate the significance of the day and the supper, nothing but an unavoidable circumstance will keep us away. The fourth of July comes once a year, never fails to come that often, and has the same national meaning every time it comes. If necessary to celebrate the event one fourth, then necessary every fourth. The first day of the week comes every seven days, never fails to come that often, and has exactly the same significance every time it comes. If necessary to remember Jesus one Sunday in the memorial supper, then necessary every Sunday. Since the Bible gives no intimation about which Sunday we must observe the supper—or says which Sunday may be omitted, the law is as universal as the day—the duty comes as often as the day. Nothing but a lack of knowledge or faithfulness can cause Christians to neglect it.—Selected.

EDITORIAL

We have lost Brother and Sister John Milner, who have removed to Chicago, Ill.

July 16th, Mrs. Lela Blythe, of Columbus, O., put on Christ in baptism, after an intelligent confession of faith. Sister Blythe is the wife of Brother Ernest Blythe, and was formerly a Reformed Presbyterian. They are the only believers in Columbus as far as we know.

There is a place for everybody if they choose to make it. The way to make it is to be of use and service to others. People who make a business of doing good become indispensable. This is the secret of "Influence" which many are dying to have but cannot acquire because they desire it for their own selfish self. From such unholy men and women, influence spreads out its wings and flies away.

If believers of the gospel worked for the truth as zealously and persistently as sinners work for error, they would do a vast service for the cause of righteousness. Jesus is our Master; satan rules them. Surely our Master deserves as good service from us as sinners render to satan. Let us wake up and get up!

Loss takes a man's character to pieces, fibre by fibre, and shows him what he is made of. Prosperity takes a man to the edges of a great cliff, and proves whether he be a giddy adventurer or a wise pilgrim.—Dr. Parker.

All of Sister Wince's articles on the linograph have been excellent, but the one in this issue seems to us to be the most eloquent and captivating of them all. At this writing we have $593.40 in the linograph fund. We have been gratified beyond measure at the hearty co-operation and liberality of the brotherhood in this matter. The cause is certainly worthy, since the good will accrue to the whole brotherhood. We now feel confident that we can soon buy the linograph and pay cash at least for one-half of the entire purchase price.

MYSTERIES FOR MEN; REVELATIONS FOR SONS OF GOD

What was "the mystery" that was made known unto Paul? "Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit" (Eph. 3:3-5).

Who are meant by the "sons of men"? Please answer through The Restitution. It may be that some one else will be benefited, as well as myself.

MRS. A. J. MARTIN.

Editor's Reply

As to the "mystery" of which Paul speaks in the third chapter of Ephesians, we think the sixth verse makes it plain: "That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel." It had been revealed in prophecy in the plainest words that the Gentiles were to be made equal heirs with the Jews in all the Jewish promises "in Christ" (Isa. 49:6; 56:6, 7); but still the heirship of the Gentiles along with believing Israel is an unsealed mystery to Israel to this day.

As to the "sons of men," they stand in antithesis to the "holy apostles and prophets" in the fifth verse. There is a double antithesis in this verse which should be noted with care:

First, there is a contrast in time: "other ages" are opposed by "now."

Second, there is a contrast in persons: "the sons of men" are opposed to "the holy apostles and prophets."

Now the "sons of men" are in contrast with the "daughters of men" in Gen. 6 chapter; the "sons of Adam" are opposed to "the sons of God" (Deut. 32:8; 1 Jno. 3:1, 2). Following this analogy, we reason that the "sons of men" in Eph. 3 chapter are put in opposition to the "holy apostles and prophets." From this premise this conclusion seems to follow inevitably: Since "sons of men" refers to men in their state by birth in contrast with the "sons of God" illuminated "by the spirit," or rather "in the spirit" (Rev. 1:10; Matt. 16:17), they did not understand that the Gentiles were to be blessed in Christ by the gospel; this was a "mystery" to them. Let Paul himself illustrate our meaning. As Saul he was one of the "sons of men," but when he became a son of God in the person of the apostle Paul, "by revelation he made known to me the mystery," declares the new man in Christ (verse 3). The oldest MSS. read, "That by revelation was the mystery (namely, of the admission of the Gentiles, (verse 6; 1:9) made known to me" (Gal. 1:12). "As I wrote afore," he goes on, "in few words" (verse 3). See Eph. 1:9, 10 for the "words afore," which he now repeats in part. The Jewish scriptures had said in so many words that the Gentiles were to become fellow heirs with the Jews in the promises of the gospel; even as far back as Abraham the promise, was, "In thee shall all nations of the earth be blessed." Notice that Paul, when speaking of "other ages," which mean generations, does not say Abraham, and the "apostles and prophets" of those ages did not understand the common heirship of the Gentiles with Israel. Read critically. He does not write, "The mystery was not revealed," but it was "not made known"—another statement and another thought entirely. It had been revealed; but it was not made known to the sons of men. Many things are revealed which are not made known. The sons of men are natural men, and they "receive not the things of the Spirit of God: they are foolishness unto them; neither can they know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. 1:14). Thus it comes to pass that the simpliest things of God's revelations are "mysteries" to the world. Mysteries are for the sons of men; revelations are for the sons of God.

COMMUNICATIONS

From Sister Bessie Kay Walker

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed you will find $1.50, for which please send me The Restitution for one year. I have been a reader for years. My father, S. H. Thomas, has taken it as long as I can remember. I have been getting it from him all along, but now I wish to take it myself instead of borrowing,' and hoping at the same time that my subscription, small though it be, may possibly be some help to the little paper we could hardly get along without.

From one who is earnestly watching for the coming of our Lord and King.

From Bro. J. D. Hogarth

Dear Bro. Huggins:

Believing that a linograph machine will be of great assistance in the publication of The Restitution. and a great help in reducing the cost of the work, and thereby rendering a great aid to the manager and directors in financing their work, and wishing to aid a very worthy cause, I forward herewith a small contribution, and trust that a sufficient sum may be raised to pay for the machine when it is purchased.

Yours in the truth.

A TRANSLATION OF THE SIXTY-EIGHTH PSALM AND EXPOSITORY PARAPHRASE

By Charles Smith.

Elohim shall arise; his enemies shall be scattered, and those who hate him shall flee from before him. As the smoke dispersed thou wilt drive them away; as wax melting before the fire shall the wicked perish from before Elohim. But the righteous shall be glad, they shall rejoice before Elohim, and they shall leap with gladness singing to Elohim songs to his name. Extol him riding in the desert in Yah, his name, and dance ye before him. A Father of the fatherless and a judge of the widows is Elohim in the habitation of his holiness. Elohim is causing the lonely ones to return home; causing the prisoners to come forth in righteousness; but the rebellious dwell in a dry place.

Elohim! in thy going before the people—in thy marching in the desert—Selah—the earth trembled, yea, the heavens dropped at the presence of Elohim; this Sinai at the presence of Elohim, Elohai of Israel. A shower of liberality wilt thou pour out, Elohim! When thy inheritance languished thou established it; thy company dwelt in it. Elohim! Thou wilt establish thy goodness for the poor. Adonai will give the word: those announcing the tidings are a great host. Kings of armies shall flee, shall flee; the dwellers in the house shall divide the spoil. Though ye may lie among the cattle pens; as the wings of a dove covered with silver and the fathers with lustre of fine gold. Shaddai in scattering kings in it; it will be white in Salmon.

The mountain of Elohim the mountain of Basham; a swelling mountain is the mountain of Bashan. Why will ye leap, ye swelling mountains? the mountain Elohim desires to inhabit; yea, Yahweh will dwell forever.

The chariots of Elohim! many thousands of thousands—Adonai among them, Sinai in the holy. Thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captive captivity; thou hast received gifts for men; and also the rebellious to rest yah Elohim!

Blessed Adonai! day by day, will bear to us the power of our salvation—Selah—the power to us the power of salvation. And to yahweh Adonai the outgoing from death. But yet Elohim will smite the hairy scalp and the head of his enemies from walking in their guilt. Adonai said, I will bring from Bashan, I will bring from the depths of the sea; because thou shalt splash thy foot in blood—the tongue of thy dogs in the same—from thy great enemies. They saw thy goings, Elohim! the goings of my Ail. my King.

In the holy the singers went before, afterwards the players on instruments; in the midst, the virgins playing on timbrels. Bless ye in the congregation Elohim Adonai, because of the flowing forth of Israel. There is little Benjamin exercising lordship; the princes of Judah their council; the princess of Zebulon; the princess of Naptali. The Elohai established thy strength. Elohim! strengthen that which thou wrought for us. Because of thy temple at Jerusalem shall kings bring thee presents. Rebuke the beasts of the reeds; the teachings of the mighty men with the following of the people causing submission in tribute of silver.

Scattered are the people delighting in wars. The wealthy shall come from Egypt. Cush shall run with his hands to Elohim. Ye kingdoms of the earth! Sing to Elohim; Send to Adonai—Selah. To him riding in the heavens, the heavens of old. Behold! he will give in his voice a voice of strength. Give ye strength to Elohim over Israel; his majesty and his strength in clouds. Fear his Elohim. From thy holy place, the Ail of Israel—He giveth strength and power to the people. Blessed Be Elohim.

The Expository Paraphrase

The standpoint in the psalm is the Kingdom of God; the time, that of the rebuilding of the tabernacle of David; the events are those occurring in the process of driving out the enemies, subduing the nations, raising up the desolations of many generations, clothing the wastes with verdure, and the people with joy and gladness.

The divine rulers of Israel shall arise; his (the most High Ail's) enemies shall be scattered, and those who hate him shall flee before his multitudinous manisfestation. They shall be driven away as smoke dispersed; as wax melting before the fire shall the wicked perish from the presence of the rulers of Israel. But the righteous shall be glad, they shall rejoice before the mighty ones of Ail, year, they shall leap with gladness, singing to their almighty rulers—songs to his (Yehweh's) name. Extol him marching in warlike and multidinous manifestation in the deserts; and in his name yah dance ye before him. A Father of the fatherless and a judge of widows is Elohim in the habitation of his holiness. The divine rulers of Israel are causing the lonely outcasts to return home, bringing those, who have been prisoners, forth in righteousness. But they leave the rebellious without help. Elohim! who appeared unto Moses (the representatives of the Elohim of the Psalm), in thy going before thy people, in thy marching in the desert—Selah—the earth trembled, yea, the heavens dropped at the presence of Elohim, this Sinai at the presence of the Mighty Ones, the mighties of Israel.

A gushing out of abundance didst thou pour out when thy inheritance languished, yea, thou established it, Elohim! and thy company dwelt in it. Thou, Israel, governors, thou wilt establish thy goodness for the poor. Adonai (the Lord) did give the word in the days of his flesh, when God sent to Israel preaching peace by him. But now, the mighty Lord of lords and King of kings, he will give the word and a great host shall be the proclaimers of it. The bridegroom gives the word; the bride (the term in the Hebrew is feminine) announces it. The enemies, the kings and their armies shall flee, and those dwelling in the house, or kingdom, shall divide the spoil. And ye poor ones of Israel, though ye may be lying among the cattle pens, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver and her feathers with the lustre of fine gold. When Israel's mighty ones overthrow the kings and their armies in it, the kingdom, it will be white with Salmon. Salmon, the black forest (a poetic image of the black and desolate condition of the country). Under Elohim that blackness will be turned to whiteness; the valleys with waving corn; the hills with flocks of sheep. The mountains, i. e., the kingdom; the mountain of Bashan (Bashan means a plain, also shame—another poetic figure for the past state of the kingdom, but now this Bashan) is a rising or swelling-up mountain. Why do ye leap ye rising mountains (plural because the kingdom is composed of twelve houses or kingdoms; therefore, Yahweh,s house is established above the mountains, they all constituting one), mountain of the Divine ruler of Israel, where God's government is desired to dwell? Where Yahweh shall dwell for the age. The chariots of Elohim or the warlike host of the mighty ones are many thousands of thousands, in Sinai, the holy. Thou, the Lord Jesus, has ascended on high; thou hast led captive captivity, or chained diabolos, thou hast received gifts for men, and even that the rebellious nation may become a willing people and have rest. He who shall be the might Ones, blessed Lord, day by day, he will bear to us the power of our salvation, being our High Priest and King—Selah! The power to us, his willing people, the power of salvation, even to He Who Shall Be Our Lord, belongs the outgoings from death! But yet the mighty ones of Israel shall smite the haughty and high-headed enemies in the guilt.

Adona said, I will bring from Bashan, from the plain of national death and shame, I will bring from the depths of the sea. In the overthrow of your great enemies, your feet shall be bespattered with blood and the tongues of your dogs with the same (a poetic figure for the complete destruction of all enemies). They saw thy marching, ye mighty ones, the marching of Israel's power, of Israel's king. In the holy, the place of thy rest; the singers advance first, behind the players on instruments, between the virgins on timbels; in their praise, saying, bless ye, in the congregation the mighty ones of our Lord, because of the flowing forth of Israel; for there is little Benjamin with authority; the princes of Judah with their council; also the princes of Zebulon and Naphtah. O Israel, thy mighty ones shall establish thy strength. O our Divine rulers, confirm that which thou hast wrought for us on account of thy temple at Jerusalem kings shall bring to thee a present. Rebuke the beast of the reed—the wicked who lie in wait, the teaching of thy mighty men—false teachers—with the people—following them causing their submission in tributes of silver. They are all scattered who delight in war!

And now the rich shall come from Egypt; and the children of Cush shall come up with full hands to the mighty ones. All ye kingdoms of the earth, sing to Israel's King, sing to Adonai—Selah. To him riding on the heavens, the throne of David, the heavens of old. Behold, he will give forth his voice of resistless power. Give ye strength to Israel's mighties: Yahweh's majesty and strength in clouds. Fearful is Elohim from thy holy place—the Power of Israel. He giveth vigor and strength to the people. Blessed are the Mighty Ones of Ail

OUR LINOTYPE FUND AND TITHING
In Ancient Israel

By S. Roxana Wince

The Israelite in olden days carefully set aside one-tenth of the seed of his land, of the fruit of his trees and of the increase of his flocks, as holy unto the Lord (Ex. 27:30, 32). At the end of the third year, which was the year of the tithing, he appeared before the Lord and said, I have brought away the hallowed things out of my house, and also have given them unto the Levite, and unto the stranger, to the fatherless and the widow according to all thy commandments. I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I taken thereof for any unclean use, nor given thereof for the dead" (Deut. 14:28, 29; Lev. 27:30, 32; Deut. 26:12, 13, 14).

Can we appear before the Lord and make truthfully the same solemn assertion? It was not an easy thing to do, for the tithe was but a small part of what the people of Israel gave for the service of the Lord, for beside the tithes there was the offering of first fruits, the paying of vows, and the providing of all the animals for daily sacrifice.

Then "the mourning for the dead" was a very expensive matter. The iron hand of custom compelled the bereaved friends not only to entertain the great crowds assembled for the funeral, to reward the priests with large sums for their services, and to have bands of mourning, but also to make "feasts for the dead," at stated intervals for forty days after the funerals. These customs are still followed by the people dwelling in the Holy Land. If a whole tribe comes to a funeral, the whole company must be fed, and food must be cooked on certain days thereafter and be sent to all the friends in the name of the dead, even if it takes every scrap of property the dead man possessed and his family be left to starve.

But not even in the dire straits of his mourning would the Israelite touch any of the hallowed things to eat of them himself or to give on behalf of the dead. Nothing could move him to deal otherwise than faithfully in the matter of tithing. The commandment said "The tithe is the Lord's;" "it is holy unto the Lord," and it would be sacrilege to take aught of it.

And where would the blessing come in if the commandments of the Lord were not kept? Where? Would not the rain be withheld, the land refuse to yield her increase, the trees be bare of fruit, the threshing fail to reach the vintage, and vintage to reach the sowing? Would not fear come in place of safety, and war come in place of peace. God's face be set against them and the pride of their power be broken?

And note, God's cause took the first place, in the giving of the consecrated things. The Levites were God's ministers, and were therefore the first recipients of God's bounty. His share of the fruits, the grain and the herds, went for the support of his worship, and to provide for the stranger, the widow and the fatherless. Israel must not forget the stranger, because she herself had been a stranger in the land of Egypt. And God had said "I will preserve the fatherless and let the widows trust in me."

Why should we not be just as faithful in turning over every penny of the Lord's money to him as was the Israelite of old? Is he not just as gracious to us of these latter days as he was to his people of old? And does not the same sacred obligations rest upon us that rested upon them? Has he not committed to us the keeping of his holy oracles, given it to us to sustain his ministers and to carry the gospel of the Son of God to the stranger?And if we can do this more rapidly and effectively through The Restitution by having a linotype, is it not our bounden duty to get the machine and set it to work as soon as possible?

I do not need to urge you, for already your gifts have come pouring in, not quite as they did at the time of the building of the tabernacle, yet just as cheerfully and freely. And gladly, and with hearty promises of more later on, if needed. Thank God for a loyal people! He knoweth them that are his, and they will make up that shining chain of jewels that is to be the Saviour's when he comes.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON LEAF

LESSON II—AUGUST 13, 1916.

Subject, Jesus Christ

MEMORY TEXT

"For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus" (1 Tim. 2:5).

---

1. "And the angel said unto them, fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people.

2. "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:10, 11).

3. "And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom; and the grace of God was upon him" (Luke 2:40).

4. "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people" (Matt. 4:23).

5. "And when they had crucified him, they parted his garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take" (Mark 15:24).

6. "Go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him" (Matt. 28:7).

7. "And when he had spoken these things, while they behold, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight.

8. "And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel;

9. "Which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:9, 10, 11).

10. "And he shall send Jesus Christ which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began" (Acts 3:20, 21).

Practical Truths

Our lesson today is about Jesus. We find: 1, He was born. 2, He grew to manhood. 3, He preached and worked wonders. 4, He was crucified —murdered. 5, God raised him from the dead. 6, He ascended to heaven. 7, He will come again to earth. As in the last lesson, concerning God, so in this, we should look carefully into the facts bearing upon the existence of Christ. He was a real person, like we are. We should study his nature. We should believe in him, by studying his promises and believing them. God worked through him in a wonderful manner (Acts 2:22), and in the investigation of his origin and nature we should speak with becoming reverence and humility.

Notes on the Lesson

Mediator.—One who mediates or interposes between parties at variance for the purpose of reconciling them: an intercessor.

"The Man Christ Jesus."—He is frequently called man, and the Son of Man, but never "a son of man."

1. Angel.—A messenger.

Tidings. -News. This good news was not to be confined to one nation, but was to all people.

2. Born.—Brought into life.

"City of David."—This probably refers to Bethlehem the home of David in his boyhood (1 Sam. 16:1. 18, 19; 17; 15), and not to Jerusalem which is also called the City of David.

3. This is a remarkable quotation. It shows Jesus "grew" like other children in body—that he grew in spirit strength, and God's favor followed him.

4. Gallilee.—A political division of Palestine. In the time of Jesus' preaching that country was divided into Judea, Sumaria and Galilee; Galilee being the upper or northern division.

5. Crucified Him.—This was done by nailing or tying to a cross all persons considered worthy of death.

6. Risen from the Dead.—Jesus came to life under the power of the Spirit of God after having been dead. That Jesus was dead seems evident from many passages, notably Rev. 1:18; Rom. 6:5 -10; 1 Cor. 15:3, 14, and others, and being dead had a literal resurrection. He is a first fruit, a sample of the resurrection.

7. He was Taken Up.—It would seem that the ascent of Jesus to heaven was not an effort upon his part, but he was taken by a power from above. God's power was manifest in his works, in his resurrection and in his ascension.

8. Two Men in White Apparel.—These without doubt were heavenly messengers or angels.

9. Come in Like Manner.—He will return as truly as he went away. Personally, literally.

10. He shall send Jesus Christ.—It is in the purpose of God that Jesus shall return to earth. He will then enter upon his work and give the rewards promised. The return of Jesus to earth is not given the prominence its importance deserves by the teachers of our times. The Old Testament and especially the New Testament Scriptures abound with references to this subject. What event in the history of our world is so important in its results to mankind as the coming and kingdom of Jesus the Christ

1. Who Jesus Was.—Why is Jesus called "man" in our memory text? Where is he called "the Son of Man" in the New Testament? Where is he called the "Son of God? What was his nature while here, that of God or man? Had Jesus both a human and a divine nature? Was he immortal? Is he immortal now?

2. His Mission while here.—What was his mission (John 3:16-17)? At what time in his life did his mission begin? Is his mission finished. (1 Jno. 3:8; Heb. 2:8, 9)? Is the mission of Jesus two-fold, one covering the period of his suffering and the other the period of his exaltation and reign?

3. His Position in the Plan of Redemption while here.—Was Jesus like his brethren (Phil. 2:7, 8; Heb. 2:17)? Was he perfect (Heb. 2:10, 5:9)? Was he tempted (Heb. 4:15)? Could Jesus be tempted? What does the Apostle James say about temptation (Jas. 1:12-15)? Did Jesus overcome all temptations without sin? Is it possible for us to follow him? Was he our pattern in all things?

4. His Preaching and Work.—What did Jesus preach? What did Jesus Work? Mention some of the places where Jesus preached and the subject preached upon. Mention some of the works he did, also the place. Is the Sermon on the Mount "preaching" to the people or instruction to his disciples? By what power did Jesus work miracles (Acts 2:22, 10:38)? Did Jesus preach under the influence of God's spirit (Luke 4:18)? Did the prophets preach under the influence of God's spirit (2 Pet. 1:21)? Could the prophets have worked any miracles without the Spirit? Could Jesus? How do we account for the superiority of his works and preaching? What was the object of the miracles and preaching of Jesus (Rom. 15:8)?

5. His Death.—Did Jesus die? Why did Jesus die? Did God demand that Jesus should die or was his death the result of circumstances? How are we redeemed (Eph. 1:7)? In what sense did he die for our sins 1 Cor. 15:3; Isa. 53:4, 5; 1 Pet. 2:24)? Did Christ's atonement reach our sicknesses as well as our sins (Matt. 8:17)?

6. His Mediatorial Work.—What is a mediator? Was Jesus a mediator while on earth? Are the office of Mediator and the office of Priest the same? Was Jesus a priest while on earth (Heb. 8:1; 9:11-15)? Will he be a priest after he returns to earth (Heb. 5:6)?

. The Promised Return.—Where in our lesson is there a promise of Jesus' return? Will his return be a visible one? What is the object of his return? Why do we desire his coming? How will the church be benefited by his return? How will the world be blessed? What is meant by "the restitution of all things?"

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF
The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26): the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17) and belief in the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 18: 3), and obedience by baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:28), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1: 3:18): and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31). SOME THOUGHTS ON TRIUNE IMMERSION

Having been raised a triune immersionist, I should be able at least to give a good reason why I am now a staunch believer in single immersion. I will give my reasons for giving up that mode of baptism, and changing to the single mode.

The Dunkards themselves admit that the word "baptizo" is not a frequentative verb, for they say that the commission, as recorded by Matthew, should read: "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and (baptizing them in the name) of the Son, and (baptizing them in the name) of the Holy Ghost." That the sentence is an elliptical one, and should be so understood. (See Quinter on baptism, page 121, and "Doctrine of the Brethren Defended," by R. H. Miller, page 149.) Then when they read, "I baptize you in the name of the Father," they baptize the candidate in that name. Your questioner will admit that he was first baptized in the name of the Father, I am sure; then how many times was he baptized? Once only. Then according to Dunkard practice baptism is not a frequentive verb. If it was frequentive they would have to repeat the immersions in each of the three names, and nine instead of triune immersion.

Dunkards, like Sabbatarians, do not practice what they preach. Sabbatarians contend that the ten commandments should be kept to the letter, but go ahead and build fires and drive their horses on the Sabbath day, which is contrary to the commands. Dunkards take a person into the water, cause him to kneel, and then dip or immerse his head three times; but his feet and the greater portion of his body is only once immersed. If single immersion will do for the lower part of the body, why not for the head? Can Mr. Campbell tell? Those who claim to have been baptized by triune immersion, and were baptized by Dunkards, are partly mistaken, for they have only partly been so baptized.

Paul says: "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." Mr. Robert H. Miller, in his book, "The Doctrine of the Brethren Defended" uses 71 pages of said book to prove that baptism is immersion, and he makes an able defense of immersion, clearly proving that it is baptism, and nothing else is. Then let us quote the text again: "One Lord, one faith, one immersion," as proven by Mr. Miller. Is he right that baptism is immersion? If he is, and Paul told the truth, then it is single immersion.

But Mr. Quinter says "it should read one dipping." Then let us read some more scripture the same way: "Dipping them in the name of the Father," etc. How many dips do Dunkards use in the name of the Father? One only. Then if dipping them in the name of the Father can be performed by one dip, why can not one dipping be done the same way? But if one dipping is three immersions, then when a man is dipped in the name of the Father he should be immersed three times; for Dunkards dip once in the name of the Father, or baptize once in that name. The fact is, baptism and immersion are synonymouse terms, and Bible baptism is only one immersion, hence not three.

Again: "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, and were all baptized unto Moses, in the cloud and in the sea" (1 Cor. 10:1, 2). How many times did the Israelites pass through the sea? Once only. They did not go in, then go out backwards, and in again, and back out, and go in the third time; they only went in once, and came out once on the other side; a single baptism separated them from their former enemy, and the same will separate us from our enemy, sin. Then how old is single immersion? As old as the Exodus of Israel; it was not invented A. D. 400, as Dunkards contend.

"Therefore we are buried with him in baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life" (Rom. 6:4). Did Christ die once, raise up and die again, and again, as Dunkards baptize? No; he died once, was buried once, and arose only once, and we are baptized in the likeness of same, if properly baptized, and single immersion only fills the bill.

"For if we have been planted in the likeness of his death we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection" (Rom. 6:5). How many times do we plant seed? Do we plant the seed, then take it up, plant again, and then a third time? We might be called insane if we were caught at such way of planting. Once is enough to plant seed that it may produce the new plant, and one planting is sufficient for us to arise to walk in newness of life. As baptism is scripturally called a "planting," and one planting in nature is all that is required to produce natural things, where would be the resemblance if baptism is triune immersion? But single immersion most beautifully resembles natural planting—the person is covered once, and comes out, or up, only once

"He that beleiveth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mk. 16:16). That is, he that believeth and is immersed shall be saved. Now suppose I believe the gospel and go and am immersed once, will I not be saved? Have I not been baptized? If I have not then baptism is not immersion, for I have been immersed. Mark does not say he that believeth and is thrice baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth and is immersed shall be saved, and single immersion fills the bill.

If baptism is triune immersion, then no one is baptized till thrice immersed, and when a Dunkard takes a candidate into the water and says, "I baptize you in the name of the Father," he has not immersion, and if he actually baptizes the candidate three times in that name; one dip is single immersion, and if the actually baptizes the candidate in the name of the Father, as he says when he immerses him in that name, he admits that baptism is single immersion, because he baptizes a candidate in the name of the Father by single immersion; and so of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Then Christian baptism is not triune immersion, or the first two dips would not be Christian baptism; and that would make the third single act, or baptism in the name of the Holy Spirit, un-Christian also, for it is single. Dunkards should not say "I baptize you in the name of the Father" unless they dip three times in that name; they should change it to "I one-third baptize you in the name of the Father, and one-third of the Son, and one-third of the Holy Spirit," dipping each time once, then the three-thirds would make one baptism, or triune immersion; but that would spoil their interpretation of the commission. So long as they call baptism in one name baptism, and make one act baptism in that name, they admit that single immersion is baptism, and that settles the case forever.

The apostles understood, and practiced just what the commission required, and none of them used the exact words of it, but baptized in the name of "Jesus Christ" (Acts 2:38): "Only in the name of the Lord Jesus" (Acts 8:12), "In the name of the Lord" (Acts 10:47), "in the name of the Lord Jesus" (Acts 19:5), and many other passages; but none to the contrary. Could our dear correspondent say, "Only I have been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus?" If so, then there are three baptisms in one name, and that of the Son only. The fact is that the commission does not mention three names, but one, which is that of the Father, Son and Spirit, and is included in the name above every name, the name of Jesus Christ. The Hebrew name Yah-Shua, or Yah, is our Savior, and that is why it is said at his naming: "He shall save his people from their sins" (Matt. 1:21). He stands between humanity and the Father, and is the one mediator, and we can only reach the Father through him. It is never biblically said "We are baptized into the Father," but "into Christ." "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ" (Gal. 3:27). "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death" (Rom. 6:3))

After we have been baptized into Christ we are then said to be in him, and "in him we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins; then if we are baptized into the Father before we get forgiveness, and it does not bring forgiveness, of what use is that baptism? And after we are baptized into Christ, and get forgiveness, why be baptized into the Holy Spirit? But baptism into Christ brings forgiveness. We can be baptized into Christ by one act, as Quinter and Miller admit. Therefore single immersion is the baptism that brings pardon.

J. J. HECKMAN.

FOUNDING AND HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF GOD IN SPRINGFIELD, OHIO

From a longing desire to know and understand the things concerning the resurrection of the dead, as found in the 15th chapter of 1 Corinthians, my father, Wm. Fish, lived in Springfield in 1856. He had a longing desire of many years gratified by attending an announced lecture on the subject, and from that chapter. Both pleased and interested, he sought the acquaintance of the lecturer, a Mr. Almon Barnes, which resulted in reading God's word for himself, to "see whether these things were so."

By request of father investigation meetings were held at our home. A Mr. Alex. Dean, living 6 miles in the country, showing an interest, was induced to attend, walking the six miles to do so, thought past middle life. They read and searched through the winter, resulting in father, Mr. Dean and my sister Louisa (afterward Mrs. Nellis), being persuaded and convinced of the truth, believing the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, obeyed the word, and were baptized early in 1857.

Father, seemingly the happiest person living, was overjoyed to be freed from deception and the fearful burning place taught in those days. He was truly destined to be one of the called-out ones. These four were then brothers and sister in the one faith and hope.

The seed of truth was sown and taking root. As in the early summer of 1858, my mother, Sister Mary, and later her husband, Benj. Kauffman, and one other man (name slips my memory) were baptized.

That spring Dr. Wm. Reeves and wife removed to Springfield; also Geo. Cherry and wife from Marysville, Ohio. All were firm believers in the things concerning the gospel of the kingdom. They sought and found each other through advertised meetings.

A church was then organized; the first one then known of the "One Faith" and "Hope" in the state. In 1862 we learned of Brother McLaughlin, who was the nucleus of and organized a church in Cleveland, Ohio. They called Brother M. Joblin, of Kentucky, to be their pastor. They met in an upper room. I myself had the pleasure of hearing brother Joblin preach in the winters of 1863 and 1864.

Meetings were now held every first day at our home, observing the memorial.

Nothing daunted with only eight or ten members, father proposed holding a conference to bring together others of like precious faith.

"The World's Crisis," edited and published by a Brother Marsh, of Rochester, N. Y., one of the first papers of our faith (I believe). In state and city papers, a convening conference was announced to be held the first week in October, 1858, in the old red brick court house on present site.

The date came; our house was thrown open to receive delegates. Brother L. H. Chase, of Adrian, Mich., responded as a speaking brother. Also Brother Marsh, of Rochester, N. Y., and a Brother Hudson—capable as an evangelist—from what place I can not now recall. A brother and Sister Southworth and daughter from Fairfield, Ohio, came. A Brother Brown, from Meadville, Pa., and a blind brother, who learned the truth from hearing the word of God read to him by his daughter. He was very happy when he laerned of some others of like faith and belief who would come and immerse him. He wanted to attend the first conference of the peculiar people.

A Brother Kanier Dean, brother of Alex. Dean, was present also, later proving to be an able expounder of the truth.

There was good attendance, but the doctrine being so new and peculiar as advocated, the people were slow in understanding even the subjects announced and preached upon. We were called "Soul Sleepers," and "Annihilationists," because of the sleep of the dead. But scattered ones abroad were brought together.

During the winter, after the conference, father recalled Brother Chase to give a series of lectures at our house. This resulted in D. S. Morrow being immersed after holding out for the validity of a former baptism. Brother Morrow became a staunch believer.

In February, 1859, I myself was immersed. There were now 12 members.

In that month father removed to Dayton, Ohio, building up a church of some 15 members there. He continued to hold meetings in our home until his death in 1867. Sometimes he rented a hall and, with different speakers, held a series of lectures.

But in the fall of 1859 there was a conference in Marysville, Ohio., where Brother and Sister Cherry had removed. Then there was not another one until 1903, and that one in Salem, Ohio. Thus ended the labors of the founder of the first church in Springfield.

(Here beautiful white carnations were placed in a vase by my sister, Jessie. And I read: "Our tribute of love, sacred to the memory of father, mother, and two sisters—charter members of the first church.")

Brother Kauffman and myself are the only two surviving members of the original church. In the meantime Dr. Reeves continued holding meetings in Springfield.

They met at the different homes for some years; then in an upper room on Fountain Ave. Changes came through death; others removing from the city, others following.

But since 1888 and 1890 there has existed a true church of steadfast believers, meeting in an upper room on Main Street for some twenty-six years. Here for some years Brother David Shank labored as an able speaker. Death took him from us.

Brother Benj. Howell then fed the little flock, until sickness and death bereaved us of his leadership and ability.

Brother and Sister Robison, efficient teachers, were with us some years past. But for many years we kept together in fellowship, in reading the scriptures, in prayer, and in breaking of bread, through our faithful and greatly beloved brother, John Beck, who now restfully sleeps in Jesus.

In appreciation of faithful service, and their love of the truth, sacred to the memory—(Here was placed one white carnation, in a vase, by little Howard Overholser, and I read: "To Brother Shanks, Brother Howell, little Margaret Netts (grand-daughter), Brother Beck, little Erma Beck (grand-daughter)—we will let these pure sweet flowers attest our love.")

David Beck, a capable brother, has now taken up the work.

Since 1892 fifteen members have fallen asleep in Jesus, while twenty were added to the church by putting on the all saving name of Jesus.

We have at the present time thirty enrolled members.

Our little flock has never had a church home. But today, after a lapse of nearly fifty eight years, we are rejoicing in having a church home in a nice commodious room, all our own. Our esteemed brother, Peter Overholser, made its possession possible for us. And we rejoice in having been so abundantly fed out of God's word, by our beloved brother, J. H. Anderson, as our pastor for the past three years, in able discourse, and timely exhortations to be steadfast unto the end.

We congratulate ourselves in having him with us today; in helping us to dedicate this house to the service of the Lord.

And it would be our delight to have him continue his service with us henceforth, that others coming into a saving knowledge of the truth, in this new field of labor, he might thus see the fruit of his own labors.

May the Lord bless us and cause his face to shine upon us, is the prayer of the church.—Compiled by MATILDA WOODBURY for July 2, 1916.

REVELATIONS 13:11

The design of this article is to prove that this two-horned symbol is not the Papacy. "And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon."

First, their origin is different. The Papacy is first seen as a horn on the head of the fourth beast of Dan. 7:8. It is a lineal descendant of the beast, and heir to his estate, as seen in Rev. 7, with "seven heads and ten horns," a royal monarch. The two-horned symbol "comes up out of the earth," which is a symbol of democracy, a product of the clay of the image (Dan. 2:42). Therefore he appeals to the people to make the "image of the first beast" (Rev. 13:14). This difference in the origin of these two powers is fatal to the contention that they are the same, and gives emphasis to what is written of this two-horned symbol, that it is "another beast."

Secondly, evidence that this symbol does not represent the Papacy is found in the language of "the true witness." In Matt. 11:15, when our Lord ended his instructions about John and Elias, he added: "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." The close student of the word will find that Jesus used this language at the ending of one subject before commencing another. For instance, at the end of each message to the seven churches, and before commencing the next message, he says: "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." And in Rev. 13, at verse 9, he says: "If any man have an ear, let him hear." This comes after his description of the acts of the leapard beast, and before the two-horned symbol is introduced. The fact is, Rome appears in different phases, but all the time it is Rome, "dreadful and terrible." In chapter 12 it is "a great red dragon" persecuting the woman and her son.

In chapter 13 it is the beast like a leopard, and at verse 5 he has a mouth given to him. Now notice the actions of the beast, after he receives the mouth. The mouth was a blasphemous mouth; this is a mark of the Papacy. Again he was to continue forty-two months, another mark of the Papacy. And at verse 7 we read :"And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them," another mark of the Papacy. The term "the beast" in this chapter always refers to Rome, never to the two-horned symbol. Another mark of the Papacy is found in verse 18, 666, the number of "the beast," which is found in the title the Pope wears on his crown: "Vicarious fili Dei. "Vicar of the Son of God." Not one of these marks is used by the spirit, as applicable to the two-horned beast, but all apply to the Papacy.

The importance of a proper understanding of the symbols in this chapter is evident from the fact that they find correspondence in the history of our time just prior to the second coming of our Lord. If we, in adhering to sectarianism, shut our eyes to the signs of our times we are liable to be found fighting against God.

A knowledge of "the earth" as a symbol would prevent anyone from applying the two-horned symbol to the Papacy. In Rev. 12:13 we read: "And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child."

Now what are the facts concerning the dragon? He was the royal head of the Pagan Roman Empire, but was cast out of the heavens by Michael (verse 9)"into the earth." Now when a monarch loses his throne what is he but a common individual, one of the people?

This symbol, "the earth," has a mouth that swallowed up the flood that the dragon cast out of his mouth (verse 16). "The earth" here is a symbol of the army of Constantine, that defeated the army of the Pagans in the Roman Empire. "But," says the objector, "was not Constantine a royal monarch?" Yes, but the agent of democracy. On the death of Constantine's father in Britain the soldiers forced Constantine to assume the purple contrary to the wishes of the then reigning monarch in Rome and Constantine fought his way from the Rhine to the Tiber, hailed by the people as their deliverer from the tyranny of their rulers.

Now if "the earth" is a symbol of democracy we may expect to find some hint of it in the holy writings. The monarchies of the world are symbolized by gold, silver, brass and iron (Dan. 2:38-41). But in the feet, or last part of the image, we have clay mixed with the iron; and clay, being a component part of the earth, aptly represents the democracy, in contrast to royalty.

And in the image we have evidence that the clay is formed into nations. Dan. 2:35 reads: "Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold broken to pieces together," etc.

Now question: If the "clay" was not formed into nations how could it be broken to pieces? Now, in correspondence with the image, we find clay nations, the United States, France, Switzerland and all the South American republics. And Great Britain is more of a democracy than an iron monarchy.

I will close this effort with a few examples of "the earth" used as a symbol. Deut. 32:1: "Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and hear, O earth, thet words of my mouth." Heavens, royalty; earth, democracy. Hosea 2:21: "And it shall come to pass in that day, I will hear, saith the Lord, I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth." Therefore the two-horned symbol from the earth is a democracy.

THOUGHTS FOR THE CHILD OF GOD

Do we all realize what glorious prospect lies before us, we who have become obedient to the Lord's commands and are living in hourly expectation of meeting the blessed Master and being changed into a state of immortality to dwell with him forevermore? Have we given up the things of the flesh, to walk in the spirit; are we watching and waiting, lest when he comes he should find us sleeping? Are we looking forward with happiness to the "sign of the Son of Man in heaven," and thus know that our dear Lord has come for his own; or is it with a sense of fear and and weariness that we look for his appearance? At that time only the saints who are found worthy will be caught away to meet the Lord in the air, and given a place on the right hand of the throne. What then will be the position of him who has become weary or careless of well doing; he who has grown indifferent and slack in the study of God's word, and thereby been unable to withstand the temptations of the world---what about this criminal carelessness which has caused him to forget the gracious promises of the divine Master and the glorious hope within him, the fulfillment of which we should all be looking forward to with joy and gladness inexpressable? Let us be firm and steadfast in our faith that God will remember every promise made, and I would say to the apostate or the careless, indifferent one, who has turned away and given up the truth, read Heb. 6:4 to 7. These words from the Lord seem very clear and unconditional; and just as certainly as we fall away from the "truth into the world again, just so surely jeopardize our chances of eternal life and a home in the glorious Kingdom of God in the next age.

Those saints who have lived pleasing in God's sight will be taken away to join the Lord before the last "great tribulation" is visited upon the earth; they will escape that awful time of trouble, and be with the Lord Jesus. This time of awful retribution and judgment that will strike terror to the inhabitants of the earth will happen at, or about the time of the end of this age or dispensation (Dan. 12:1). At that time the Lord will come and all the saints with him, to put down all other kingdoms, and set up a kingdom of his own, which shall have no end (Rev. 11:15; Isa. 9:7). Then will come the greatest time of trouble the world has ever seen; then will Christ proceed to do battle with the nations, and wreak his vengeance upon the wicked; then will the great battle of Armageddon be fought. "For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh, and the slain of the Lord will be many (Jer. 66:16; Joel 9:9 to 16). Then will occur a scene of bloodshed and carnage almost beyond description, but the Lord will be victorious (Joel 3:16), and all his people shall then know that he is the Lord. "And every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him" (Rev. 1:7). Then will the Lord sit upon the throne of his glory, and proceed to deal out judgment upon the nations, as set forth in Matt. 25th chapter. The "sheep" there spoken of being those saints who have been found worthy, are there with the Lord; they will be given their rewards, and will be invited to take their places on the right hand of the great King; while the "goats," who are the saints found unworthy to be caught away to meet the Lord in the air, and who comprise those who have not lived worthy of their calling, the apostates, etc., will come up for judgment and will be found wanting. They will be told to "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels" (Matt. 25:41), and they will be placed on his left hand.

Oh the bitter regret and despair of those unfaithful ones who will find themselves cut off forever from the joy and pleasure of a life eternal with Christ, and the glories of a reign with him during the millennium! "And it shall come to pass that in all the land, saith the Lord, two parts therein shall be cut off and die, but the third part shall be left therein" (Zach. 13:8); "and I will bring the third part through the fire" (Zach. 13:9). Is not this third part Christ's own brethren, the Jews? At that time those who are left of all the nations on the earth who have escaped the awful destruction (Zach. 14:9), will be given a chance during the thousand years' reign to accept Christ and worship him. "For in that day there shall be one Lord, and his name One." Then the times of restitution and refreshing will begin, and conditions on the earth will be growing better; wickedness and sin of all descriptions will not be allowed to manifest itself, for everyone must acknowledge Christ as King, and come under his rule, and there will the patience of the saints be rewarded; for they as joint rulers with him will be given power and opportunity for untold good in bringing souls into the truth, and a right way of living and serving God, as will make life amid the joy and beauties of the earth in the next age an existence to be eagerly desired. We are not told in God's word how long a time must elapse between the two (so called) stages of our Lord's coming, but it would look reasonable that the second coming will follow very closely upon the first. Again, it would seem that some years must be consumed by Christ and the saints in subduing the destroying the worldly nations and kingdoms and the establishing of his own great kingdom; but be this as it may, we ought to all strive to make our election sure, and if we live in accordance with 2nd Peter 1:4 to 9, we shall never fail.

The exasperating thing about revenge is that it never satisfies, but leaves one at the end as angry as at the beginning. After all, one might just as well forgive at once.

EDITORIAL

Despise not your inferiors. They can no more help being what they are than you. If you are better than they, it is cause for humility and gratitude—not boastfulness and pride.

A current worldly maxium requires revision to this effect, "God helps those who help others." The judgment day will reveal that the self-help of the ungodly has had no God-help in it at all. "We must provide for ourselves," is the insistent plea, but it is a needless plea, as there is little fear of our coming short on this point.

Common sense is better company than technical love. The first is based upon what is eternal in the universe; the second upon the transient superficialities of fleeting time, and is simply a human device.

It must have afforded the parent heart of Prother J. H. Anderson much joy and gladness to be able to send us the following lines: "On Thursday afternoon, July 20, 1916, Mellie Anderson, oldest daughter of Brother J. H. Anderson, after a careful study of God's word, was baptized into Christ, at Brush Creek, Ohio. May she walk worthy of the Christian life, and in the age to come receive eternal life, is the prayer of her father."

Sister Wince sends the following correction: "You have made a mistake in crediting twenty dollars to Frances T. Chapman. It should be:

Frances T. Chapman	$10.00
Sister Chapman's son	10.00
One who does not believe in fraternalizing with Josephites	5.00

Dependence upon God is admirably illustrated in Jesus Christ. Although he was "holy" when born (Luke 1:35), and "holy" in his adolescence (Acts 4:30), and also sinless in his majority (Heb. 4:15), still his exceptional, impeccable, and phenomenal life was derived from God his Father, according to his own acknowledgment. He explicitly states repeatedly that his words and doctrine were his Father's (John 7:16; 14:24), as well as his works (John 5:36; 9:4; 17:4). His abnegation was so complete, his dependence so entire upon his Father, that he represents himself as impotent without his Father as the Christian is without the Christ (John 15:5). The signs, miracles, and prodigies of his life he admitted were the "stretching forth" of his Father's hand (Acts 4:30). He was simply " a man" among men; and to account for the miraculous element in his life the lucid and satisfactory Pentecostian explanation is given: "A man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you" (Acts 2:22).

COMMUNICATIONS

From a Nebraska Brother and Sister

Dear Restitution: You will find enclosed thirty dollars, a portion of the Lord's goods entrusted to our care. It is for the Linograph Fund. We realize that we are only stewards, and responsible to him who purchased us with his own precious blood. We must shortly render an account of our stewardship, and wish to perform our obligations in a manner that is pleasing to him who has entrusted us with his goods.

We believe the little tithe would become a mighty power for good, if we are never guilty of robbing God. There would be no further use of begging. The Lord's plan is the best if we only adopt it. May the Lord enable us to see our duty and give us courage to perform it. Yours in Christian love.

From Ethel May Howard

Dear Restitution: I am sending you $1.00 for the Linotype Fund. I am only 12 years old. The amount I am sending may seem small, but then it helps a little. How few there are that know Christ in the right way, and how many there are that are carried about by every wind of doctrine that happens to blow! Oh! how good God is to his people, and how thankful we should be for all the blessings he has given to us!

From Sister Chas. C. Ezell

Dear Auntie Wince: I have wanted to write to you for a longtime, but have neglected satisfying that desire as I'm not a very good letter writer. I've simply learned to love you through your pieces to The Restitution. They are so helpful, so full of love and goodness.

I have two little children of six and eight who are always anxious to know if Auntie Wince has anything in the paper. We are delighted to see the Linograph Fund grow so fast. I am sending $2.00, and my little boy, Alvin, who is eight, is sending 10 cents of his savings. When asked if he wanted his name in front of that little mite he replied, "Yes, ma'am. I want them to know that I am interested, too." I'm so sorry that I haven't more to send, but we are poor in worldly possessions and have not had this little amount to spare sooner. The children and I have Bible lessons often, also songs. They enjoy them so much. Alvin has already said he would like to be baptized when he is older. Dear Brother Wilson baptized my father, two sisters and myself about ten years ago. I have missed him so much in The Restitution. Now, Dear Auntie, you needn't send me a receipt for what I am sending. If you should happen to write, please do not mention it.

With Love.

From Mrs. A. F. Marsh

Dear Restitution: I am not a member of your church, but I find much in your paper that is helpful in understanding the scriptures. Would like to read more on "The Two Witnesses," and how it is when the stone smites the gold, the silver, etc., is ground up together. I would like to read something on this subject, as all the image long ago has been destroyed, yet the prophecy speaks as if all the four parts of the image are in existence when the stone smites the whole image.

Again, why are all churches opposed to socialism? Who will be the rulers, and just who will be the subjects in the kingdom of God? These questions are not clear to my mind. And who are the 144,000, and who the "great company" or great multitude? I would like more light on all these subjects.

From Brother J. H. Anderson

Dear Brother Huggins: As you know, we have had a Young People's Bible Class at Brush Creek, and that for some time we have been investigating the teachings of the Word of God. Well, dear brother, we are rejoicing at Brush Creek over the result of our investigation. On Thursday, July 20, Mellie Anderson was baptized into Christ. And on the following Sunday, July 23, the following were baptized into the all saving name: Lottie Peason, Edna Pearson, Fay Pearson, Charles Pearson, Edna Vance, Lydia Burnsides, Paran Wilburn Anderson, Mrs. and Mrs. L. E. Pearson, Sr. L. E. Pearson, was raised in the Catholic Church, but has now become a branch of the vine.

We wish you could see our new church house at Lawerenceville. We are confident that the Lord has opened up a good field for the Springfield Church, and we hope they will find a good faithful worker to assist in the new field.

NEW SONG BOOK

Report of Committee

To the Brethren Scattered Abroad, Greeting:

Nearly two years ago Brother Newell, president of the Nebraska State Conference was asked to appoint a committee to co-operate with the brethren everywhere in compiling a new song book. The books published by our people were out of print, and the books so used up that the church was confronted with the problem of getting out a book of our own.

And now we wish to tell you what it has taken to get it ready and printed. As only part of the Committee could get together at once it took a lot of correspondence to get started. We agreed upon a plan to raise the money to buy plates and hire the book printed and bound. It took several months to get pledges enough to warrant the Committee in taking any steps toward buying plates or printing. We corresponded with a number of firms and got the terms; and succeeded in getting a satisfactory price, making quite a saving on the plates. Finally we had enough collected to warrant making a contract with the engraver. But here came the big task of selecting and preparing the copy for the engraver. We knew the brethren wanted a book free from doctrinal error, and you will never be able to realize the labor it cost us to fulfill this requirement. Our former books were gone over with care; some that have been in former editions and left out, were put back, and some in later editions, left out. To find words to harmonize with the truth, and to harmonize with the music, was in some instances a hard task, taking much time and patience. When an error was found in the words of a song, we had to decide on the word to be supplied. All such words you may know were selected by the Committee and cost hours of search and work.

Again, we had to keep these copies as clean as possible—a hard task when much pasting of words had to be done. Some of the songs for beauty of words and music were selected from old books. The Commitee has looked over a good deal of the book as it came from the press. The first 94 pages of the book is two scores of music at top of page, and two or three songs in type at bottom to the same music. These we call "hymns," and are for Sunday worship. At first some of us did not like this, but after understanding their place and use we were very much in favor of them. In meeting for church worship these hymns get our hearts right, and when you get used to them you would not think of doing without them.

When we came to the point of arranging the songs we had another big task. Several trials showed us that we had to do the classifying in the index. If you should desire to find a duet look at the index where it says "Duets" and you will find every duet in the book. If you wish a song on the coming of the Lord, or on resurrection, funeral, communion, baptism, or any other subject look at the index under these different captions and you can easily find what you want. This was a lot of work, but it has paid, as you will see when you get the book.

The book contains 258 numbers, and we do not believe a doctrinal error occurs in the book. But think of the work of reading over all these songs and of correcting them! All this took time, and are things you would never know. We have kept everything moving the best we could.

Again, as we selected the songs from different books, and they were photographed, the titles will appear in different type. This could be obviated only by hand engravings, and we could not afford that. But these are minor defects. We believe it to be one of the best books and one of the largest our people have ever had. It has been slow work, but we believe in the main you will like the book. We feel sure there are single songs in it worth the price of the book. We wish to thank all who have assisted us with money and otherwise. With the experience we have gained in getting out this book we could get up another in half of the time and right many defects. Brethren, be lenient with your criticisms, if you should have any, for it has been a big task, and many hindrances you know nothing about.

Part of the books for home and church use are to be bound in cloth and sewed. The title will be on the cover in gold. These will sell for 50 cents per copy, or $6.40 per dozen. (Should this not be $5.40 per dozen?—Editor.)

The others will be bound in Manila and sell at 35 cents per copy, or $3.60 per dozen. The name of the book is "Manual of Praise." The printer has promised they will be ready August 1st. Send orders to The Restitution, or to Almus Adams, 3944 Hartman Ave., Omaha, Neb., for the present. Orders enough have been received to take a large share of the first edition. We hope the book will help to bring many to the truth, and help many who are in the faith express themselves in song suited to their belief.

Submitted in love,
MRS. CHAS. A. GOSS,
MRS. BESSIE JENKINS,
MISS ROSE STARJOHNN,
ALMUS ADAMS,
Committee.

As the mental philosopher may become so much absorbed in analysing the various faculties of the mind as to lose sight of the mind itself in its oneness, so we may dwell so exclusively on the many forms of right-doing as to shut from view the presence of goodness itself, which must reign supreme as a love and a desire in the heart before true life can be infused into any of its forms.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON LEAF

Lesson III.—August 20,1916

Subject. Man

Memory Text

"Man is like to vanity: his days are as a shadow that passeth away" (Psa. 144:4).

1. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7).

2. "The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven.

3. "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy: and as is the heavenly such are they also that the heavenly" (1 Cor. 15:47, 48).

4. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, ye must be born from above" (John 3: 6, 7).

5. "Man, that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble.

6. "He cometh forth like a flower and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not (Job 14:1, 2).

7. "Shall mortal man be more just than God? (Job 4:17).

8. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence" (Psa. 115:17).

9. "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth so dieth the other: yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast: for all is vanity.

10. "All go into one place, all are of dust, and all turn to dust again" (Eccl. 3:19, 20).

Practical Truths

The Bible alone gives a satisfactory statement of the origin of man. He was created. "That he could not create himself," is readily admitted. All the elements in man's make up are found in the earth. He is made of earth, and is therefore earthy in his nature. He is a being of time. He is transitory. He dies and returns to the dust. He exists in common with all earth's creatures and dies in common with them. Experience and observation teach the truth affirmed by the Bible that man is "mortal." His origin is dust, he is by nature mortal and his destiny is to return to the dust from which he was taken. To see ourselves as we really are, is the best possible standpoint from which to study our needs. We desire to live forever. We want immortality, and through Jesus it can be realized by all, through the birth of the Spirit.

Notes on the Lesson

Vanity.—Unsubstantialness, emptiness, visionary. Man is said to be like vanity. He is transient in his existence.

Shadow.—How transient are the shadows that come and go. His days are like the shadow and are soon gone.

1. Formed Man.—The creation consisted in giving organization form and life, or in the case of inorganic objects simply form; while by the law of parentage life comes first, then organization, then form. "Formed "signifies made, and 'made' " is used by the Apostle Paul in 1 Cor. 15, in speaking of Adam.

Dust of the Ground.—Probably refers to the elements which enter into man's organization.

2. First and Second Man.—They are by nature a contrast. The first being earthy, the second heavenly.

3. Earthy and Heavenly.—The two Adams are the Federal heads of two races. Adam the first, being the head of the earthy or mortal race; while Adam the second is to be the head of the heavenly or immortal race, which will succeed the mortal in the possession of the earth.

4. Flesh. Spirit.—Like begets like. We are born of the flesh now, and are therefore flesh or mortal, but when we shall be born of the Spirit, we shall be Spirit beings.

Born from Above.—It is impossible for the natural of itself to enter the domain of the spiritual, but it is the glory of the spiritual to reach down and elevate the natural. We must be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven if ever mortality is swallowed up of life.

5. Few Days.—A short life.

6. Like a Flower.—We are struck with two thoughts when we look at a flower—its beauty and its transient stay with us. Such is man: beautiful, even the crowning work of God, yet how soon he dies! David says: "Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am."

7. "Mortal Man."—This needs no comment. How forcibly the term teaches us that we must die.

8. "Praise not the Lord."—How silent is the place of death! While we live we should praise God.

9. "One thing befalleth them."—In regard to death man and beast share a common fate.

10. "All are of the dust and all turn to dust again.—A fact of universal application and patent to all.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. Man's Origin.—What theories have scientists advanced in relation to man's origin? What is the statement of the Bible concerning his origin (Gen. 2:7, 1; Cor. 15:45)?

2. Man as a Living Being.—What caused man to live (Gen. 2:7)? Where does all life come from (Psa. 36:9)? Where is the life of man said to be (Lev. 17:11-14)? How does the life get into the blood (Gen. 2:7)? Does the phrase "breath of life" signify that the life was in the breath? What caused the two witnesses to live in Rev. 11:11? Are the Spirit of life and breath of life similar expressions? Is the breath a part of the man? Is the life any part of the man? Show the difference between a live man and a dead man. Does man think while alive and cease to think when dead? Is man a unit or a dual being? Show why man is responsible to God.

3. The Law of Being.—Can you show where in our lesson is an illustration of the saying "Like begets like?" If Adam was mortal and died, what may we expect, being his children? To whom then must we go for endless life?

4. The Brevity of Human Life.—What is the age of the longest life upon record (Gen 5:27)? What is now the average length of life? With what is man's life compared in the lesson? In what respects is man like a flower or a shadow?

Mention and read some text which relates to the brevity of human life (Psa. 39:4; Psa. 90:3-5; Jas. 4:14; Job 7: 1, 6).

5. The Common Destiny.—Why does man die? Must all die (Eccl. 9:5, Job 14:5, 7:1, 1 Cor. 15:22, Psa. 89:48)? What does our lesson say of the common destiny of man and beast?

6. A Change Contemplated and Provided for.—Will man always remain mortal? Where is the Bible is a change in his nature contemplated (1 Cor. 15:51-55)? What are the conditions on our part to receive eternal life (Rom. 2:7; John 3:15, 16, 36; Mark 16:15, 16)? Will this change take place before or at the resurrection?

7. The Future Life.—When will the future life be realized (Col. 3:4, 1 Pet. 5:4)? Do we even now receive an earnest of that life by faith? What is it to be born of the Spirit?

THANKSGIVING

By Auntie Wince

A gift for the Linotype Fund came yesterday (July 24th) from a little lad of eight years—Master Alvin Ezell, of far away Texas—his own earnings. I thanked God and took courage, for God loves the little ones, and prizes their gifts far more than rubies or diamonds, and often makes to grow out of them what grown-up people think impossible. Who knows but that it may be so in this case? Anyhow, I just had to drop my dish cloth and tell the dear readers of The Restitution about it. God bless the child! When his mamma asked him "If he wanted his name in the paper opposite his gift?" he said, "Of course I do, I want them to know I am interested."

Young as he is, he loves The Restitution, takes delight in Bible lessons and in singing, and wants to be baptized when he is a little older.

God will give us the linotype; never fear, for he always honors the faith of the children. I thought at once of the little boy, who having heard his elders, wondered if it would be possible for them to build a much-needed church, set to work and earned the money to buy a load of brick for his wheelbarrow and wheeled it to the lot that they were talking of building on.

"What are you bringing that load of brick here for?" asked a man.

"To build our church, sir," said the little fellow. And soon the news was all over town that "the first load of brick was on the ground for the church," and contributions came in thick and fast, and the church was built—and all because of the faith of a little child. Little children lead.

I am so thankful when they and the young people take hold, as our young Bereans are doing. I hope more of the little ones will give. Some think there is no way for the children to earn money but Alvin found a way, and others surely can. (Little Ethel May Howard, only 12 years old, has also sent a contribution for The Restitution Linograph Fund, which has already been acknowledged. When the children show their interest in such a substantial way, we must be on the way to success.—Editor.)

The Cheerful Givers

"The God of heaven, he will prosper us; therefore we his servants will arise and build." "Through God we shall do valiantly" (Neh. 2:20; Psa. 60:12).

"But this I say, he which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully; every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver" (2 Cor. 9:6, 7).

"Upon the first day of the week let everyone of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him" (1 Cor. 16:2).

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852
A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF
The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:15, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17) and belief in the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13: 3), and obedience by baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31). PULPIT ECHOES

Subject: River and Rock

Text: "And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever" (1 John 2:17).

In reading this epistle, we observe, there is no preface, no introduction; it is addressed to no individual or particular church. But we gather from verses twelve to fifteen that John is addressing the whole church. His exhortation is to the whole family of God. This is made obvious by the phrases "little children," "young men," and "fathers."

There is a beautiful analogy between an earthy family and the family of God: first, children, then youth or young manhood, followed by fatherhood or age. When we obey the gospel, in God our Father's sight, we are but babes (1 Cor. 3:1; 1 Pet. 2:2; 1 Cor. 13:11). God treats us as such (Heb. 5:13). As our spiritual minds and perceptions become developed, God recognizes our spiritual manhood, and our food is provided and prepared accordingly (Heb. 5:14). As we become old in the service of the Lord and the brethren lean upon us, waiting to be fed by the good word of God, we become fathers, charter members so to speak, the pillars of the church (Titus 2:2).

John, then, is addressing all believers in our text. To them all he says: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." These words, like snow held to our fevered forehead, tends to cool our passions and desires. Why? Because the next verse says: "And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." This text suggest to my mind an antithesis between something in perpetual flux, and something which is permanent. The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life passeth away. "But he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

We think in metaphors as well as in words. By casting these two thoughts, viz: the lust of the world and doing the will of God into metaphorical form our minds see a river and rock.

The River

The sad truth of sensual desire suggests the transiency of "the world" that passeth away and the lust thereof; the rock, or doing the will of God, permanency, that which endures for ever. The world to our sense of desire becomes and is external; like the river it is passing on, nothing is permanent. In the world our senses dwell only in the past or anticipating the future. We know no present time; while we name the moment, it dies. A drop of the moment hangs for an instance or the brink of eternity, gleaming in light, then falls into the gloomy abyss that silently sucks up years and centuries.

As the world to our senses is external, we note there is also a corresponding transiency in "lust"—our internals. James shows the relationship that exists between the world and our senses: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempted he any man; but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin, and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death" (James 1:13-15).

We have outgrown some of our desires. There was a time in our lives as children when toys were esteemed higher than gold. Our life experience agrees with that of Solomon expressed in Ecclesiastics 12:5. How many disappointments, hopes blasted, burnt out pleasures vanish before us like a dream—the world and its lust passeth away.

"But pleasures are like a Poppy's spread,
You seize the flower its bloom is shed,
Or like the snow flakes in the river,
One moment white, then gone for ever,
Or like the Bove-alis race,
That flits ere you can point the place."
—Burns.

Some desires remain when the gratification of them is no longer possible. Sometimes the "lust" outlasts the "world;" sometimes the world outlasts the lusts, and one knows not whither is the sadder. In Judges 18:24 we read that when Micah lost the gods he had made, his idolatrous heart and desires still cleaved unto them. How often circumstances prevent the indulgence of our fleshly appetites and desires, still the desire is there, and longs for gratification. Jesus says, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." In Luke 16:19-31 we have the parable of a certain rich man and a certain beggar named Lazarus. These characters to me are real. I must differ with many of my brethren in their interpretation of this parable. "The rich man representing the Jews, the beggar the Gentile nation," etc. To me the Lord is teaching this striking lesson that, though we may die, be buried, and lay for centuries in the silence of the tomb, a day is coming when the unjust on the day of judgment shall lift up his eyes in torment, and shall behold Lazarus—the just class—in Abraham's lesson. "And I say unto you, that many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth" (Matt. 8:11, 12). In this case the world outlasts the lust and desires.

Some one may say, "Brother Huggins, don't give us a 'kill joy.' But I answer, beloved brethren, by an illusion we deceive ourselves with the notion of stability. Suppose you lived in a country subject to earthquakes, and you built a house just as if there were no danger of an earthquake; or you ascended a mountain in the Alps, ignoring slipperiness and gravitation, failing to provide against these,—what would happen? You answer in both cases, "destruction." In 2 Pet. 3:7 we learn that the heavens and the earth are to perish. "Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless." Again, "seeing then that all these things (the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and pride of life) shall be dissolved, what manner of person ought ye to be in all holy conversations and godliness?" Our prayer then should be daily, ah yes, hourly, "so teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom" (Psa. 90:12).

But we take courage when we turn to or the glad truth of faith. This is John's antithesis to the world that passeth away. Our first thought naturally would be, it is God that abides. This is true, assuredly so, but beloved, this is not John's thought in our text: it is "He that doeth the will of God" abideth for ever.

God is from everlasting to everlasting. A being without the beginning of days or ending of years (Psa. 90:2). The length of a man's days are three score years and ten (Psa. 90:10). Just as a tale that is told, like the watch of the night that is past. "When a few years are come then I shall go the way I shall not return" (Job 16:22). "Behold, thou hast made my days as it were a span long; and mine age is even as nothing in respect of thee; for man walketh in a vain shadow, and disquieth himself in vain; he heapeth up riches, and cannot tell who shall gather them. And now, Lord, what is my hope? truly my hope is even in thee. For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterd seeing that is past as a watch in the night." Beloved, when we compare God's existence with the period of man's existence we feel humble in our finiteness.

But John says we may abide for ever. God is the only timeless and permanent being; "but he that doeth the will of God" links himself with the Divine Eternity. Peter speaking of Christ says, "Who vevily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifested in these last times for you" (1 Pet. 1:20). The word of God, eternal life, has existed with God from all eternity: God revealed it in his son Read carefully 1 John 1:1, 2. John declares that Christ received eternal life by his fellowship with the Father—God: even so, John reasons, if we abide in Christ then we have fellowship with the Father and Jesus Christ—hence eternal life, and will abide for ever. Peter declares the same thought: "Who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory, that your faith might be in God" (1 Pet. 1:21-25). Whatever God has done for Christ, because of his abiding in him, he will do the same for us, if I abide in Christ.

Three things God bestowed upon Christ: glory, honor and immortality. These things Paul says in Rom. 2:7 are ours, if we continue patiently in well doing. And Solomon expresses this same thought in Prov. 22:4: "By humility and the fear of the Lord, are riches, and honor, and life." May we then, by God's grace, avoid the pitfalls around us, sweeping like a mighty river all who follow the world and its fashion that are doomed to pass into oblivion. And may we cling to "The Rock that is higher than I." (Psa. 61).

Poor, fainting pilgrim still hold on thy way—the dawn is near.
True thou are weary now; but your bright ray becomes more dear.
Bear up a little longer; wait for rest,
Yeild not to slumber, though with toil oppressed.

The night of life is mournful, but look on—the dawn is near;
Soon will earth's shadowed scenes and forms be gone! Yield not to fear.
The mountain's summit will ere long be gained,
And the bright world of joy and peace be attained.

Joyful through hope; they motto still must be,—
The dawn is near.
What glories will that dawn unfold to thee; be of good cheer;
Gird up thy loins; bind sandals on thy feet;
The way is dark and long; the end is sweet."

THE JUDGMENT OF MATT. 25

I believe it was two articles written by myself two years or more since that started the controversy that has been and is still being waged, over this question. And as on account of some friction occuring in the paper at that time I did not complete the series, I feel that the editor and readers should give me a further hearing on this important subject. I agree with nearly all that Sister Wood has written in her last article, but it seems that she failed to hit the point on when the righteous are judged in this judgment. The words, "Come, ye blessed of my Father," seem to teach that the righteous go into their reward at that time, and are words, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal," show that the reward is the putting on of eternal life. Then his judgment must be the separation that takes the righteous from among the wicked. The fact that the righteous go into life eternal proves that it is not righteous nations; for no nations will exist in the age-to-come but the one nation, restored Israel; all others will become parts of it. "The Lord will then be king over all the earth." The iron and clay will become as dust of the threshing floor (Dan. 2).

Now read when the separation takes place;

"For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angles; and then shall he reward every man according to his works" (Mat. 16:27).

"And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other" (Matt. 24:31).

"There shall be two in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left" (Matt. 24:40, 41).

"Then shall he send his angels, and gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven" (Mark 13:27).

These are all the words of Jesus, and the most of them are in the Olivet discourse which contains the whole of the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew. Then when the righteous are separated from the wicked it will be while the nations are at their work, and sleeping; for some will be taken from the bed, and some from the field, which is the case at all times on the earth as she moves along in her natural way: but these things could not be so if all were gathered at one place to be separated.

The Greek emprosthen, translated "before" in the common version, means "in his presence," and tunachthesetai, the word translated "gathered," means "assembled." When Jesus comes in the clouds of heaven, sitting on the right hand of power, the throne of his glory, having received a kingdom in the far country (Mk. 14:62; Lu. 19:15; Matt. 25:31), he looks over the nations which are assembled over the earth, and gathers by sending his angels, his elect, both dead and living, out of them. It would be impossible to gather the nations any closer than they are now, unless their territory was made smaller, and they were huddled closer together as little powers. The American nations are assembled on this continent; and so with all others on the continents on which they exist; and when Jesus comes they will be in his presence, and the separating takes place. The living saints are here changed in a moment of time, and go forth to meet the Lord, clad in immortality; the dead are raised incorruptible; both go into life eternal, at this separation, and could not go into it at a later one.

The parable of the ten virgins teaches too that there will only be one class meet the Lord at his coming, and that the separation takes place while the foolish virgins are out trying to get ready for the coming—which could not be the case if all peoples were bunched up in one great throng for judgment: or as the Christadelphians put it, "the responsible gathered." In this same discourse is also the parable of the talents, which shows that the obedient servants were reckoned with before the disobedient. The words, "Come ye blessed," and " depart ye cursed" can be uttered when the righteous meet the Lord, and the wicked hear their doom. The scriptures teach that at the establishing of the kingdom, some wicked people will see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets in it. We learn also that, "The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity: and shall cast them into a furnace of fire" (Matt. 13:41, 42). The "furnace of fire" here must be "the everlasting fire" of Matt. 25. But the righteous go into life eternal at that separation, and never have to enter it but once, as it will last to all eternity. The righteous also inherit the kingdom at this separation, and hence must get the kingdom, and eternal life at one and the same time.

They are then in the kingdom from this time forward; then begins the gathering of the offenders, and they see the righteous, and like the foolish virgins, are too late, and are like the one talent man, are told to depart, ye cursed into the age during fire—the furnace of fire. The lesson says, "When the Son Man shall come in his glory," then "shall he separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats."

The shepherd drives his sheep from among the goats as we all know, and properly houses the sheep before he destroys the goats. The power and favor of the Lord is said to be in his right hand, and those who go to that side of him are those who are to be kings and priests, and reign with him on earth. It would be quite a job for the Lord Jesus to place the literal nations around so that some would be at his right hand, and some at his left, unless one half of the nations, and them all on one side of the earth, are to be blessed with eternal life, while the nations on the other side are to go into everlasting punishment. When Jesus said, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations," I believe he meant for the disciples to go to all the nations, and teach them the gospel; but when he said, "Baptizing them," he meant to baptize individuals who become believers through the teaching of the disciples. So when he says all nations will be separated, he means individuals of the nations. We read, "All nations shall serve him" (Psa. 72). We cannot believe that it is every individual of every nation: but the left of those nations after the wicked have been destroyed; these will become subjects of the kingdom of God.

The Christadelphian may say: "Does not the Bible speak of a judgment in which we all (meaning the church) shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ? And there is where I get my mortal emergence." Yes, the Bible says: "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ: that every one of us may receive the things in his body, according to that he hath done, whether good or bad." This appearing is that we may receive the reward for doing good or bad, not to decide what we have done, but get our pay for what we have done. Notice, "receive" is the word used. We are elsewhere told, "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his works be" (Rev. 22:12). Then the judgment is to give us our reward, our pay; and he pays the dead righteous by raising them immortal, and the living by changing them to immortality before they meet him in the air. Just as we meet Christ, so shall we ever be (1 Cor. 15:51-53; 1 Thess. 4:15-18).

"These my brethren "are the saints who have been kind to each other through life, and are there when Jesus utters the words. He could have said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it to each other, ye have done it unto me" James tells us: "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, depart in peace, be ye warmed; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body: what doth it profit?" Here James is writing to the brethren, and telling them how to treat the brethren, and assures them that a faith which does not work according to the rule he is giving is of no value. Then "the brethren" must feed the hungry, and clothe the naked; and Jesus gives us this lesson to show that we are not going to get the kingdom unless we do those things. The wicked fail to do them and they fail therefore to get the reward. But what nation is feeding hungry Christians to-day? Are they not taxing them exorbitantly, and starving the babies in Europe by the hundreds and thousands?

PRAYER IN THE NAME

John: Here again ready to continue the study of the model prayer.

Tom: Very well. In our last lesson we learned that God is the Father of those who may pray this prayer. Now, after addressing him as such we come to the clause, "Which art in heaven." This clause points out God's dwelling place.

John: But I have been taught that God is everywhere. Indeed, in Psa. 139:7-11 we find that David taught that.

Tom: Yes, that is true, and is in harmony with the balance of the Bible. But God is a person and has a place where he dwells. However, like the sun, his spirit or presence is everywhere. Paul says, "In him we live, move, and have our being" (Acts 17:28).

John: Do I understand you to teach that God is a person?

Tom: Yes that is the teaching of God's word. In Gen. 1:26 God says, "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness." Paul in Heb. 1:3 declares that "Christ is the express image of his Father's person."

John: That sounds good to me as I like to worship a personal God, one that can see, hear and feel: but I don't think the idea of a personal God is in harmony with the creeds of to-day.

Tom: I am not trying to find something that is in harmony with the creeds, but with the word. Next we have, "Hallowed be thy name."

John: Well! Well! is it not wonderful how the Bible always brings us back to the name?

Tom: Yes, in Gen. 4:26 we find (marg.) that the sons of Seth called themselves by the name of the Lord: and in Gen. 12:8 we find that Abraham called on that name. Since that time a few have held that name sacred. David in Psa. 111:9 says, "Holy and reverend is his name." The word "reverend" should never be applied to men.

John: I see the first request is, Thy kingdom come."

Tom: In the 33rd verse we find the command, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness:" and you will find that the Bible always places the kingdom first.

John: But, if the kingdom were set up at Pentecost why should we pray, "Thy kingdom come?" It seems to me that it would be more consistant to thank God that we possess the kingdom that pray for it to come.

Tom: John, where did you find any scripture to show that God set up a kingdom at Pentecost?

John: I don't find any, although I have hunted for just one passage; but the creeds teach it.

Tom: I know they do, but there is not a word in the Bible to support that doctrine.

John: When will the kingdom be set up?

Tom: When Christ, the king comes, and till that time we pray, "Thy kingdom come," "with the spirit and the understanding also."

John: You believe then that the kingdom is a government to be set up when Christ comes (Isa. 9:6, 7), Tom?

Tom: Yes, I do, and hope to take up that subject with you in the future.

John: The next request is, "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." I suppose this will be when the kingdom is set up?

Tom: Yes, this earth will be restored to its edenic state, and then God's will will be done.

John: Now, we pray for our daily bread.

Tom: Yes, and in doing so we must remember that this includes spiritual food too (Matt. 4:4, Jno. 6:48-58). Then, we close by asking him to not lead us into temptation, but deliver us from evil.

John: Well, I see that the prayer is so short that we can speak every word observing the pauses in about one minute, and yet it is so full of truth that in our lessons on this subject a great field has been opened up to me.

Tom: True, and we must not forget that this prayer is given to God's children through the one name, and now as it is growing late, I suggest that we close and take up our study next Wednesday evening.

John: It seems to me that God has exalted the name above every thing, and I am so glad that there is a way for us to receive that precious name.

Tom: No, John, there is one thing that God has magnified above his name; and next Wednesday evening we shall, the Lord willing, take up the study of that which is above the name.

INDIANA NOTICE

The annual conference of the Church of God in Indiana will convene at the Hillisburg Church August 24, and continue over the following Sunday. Plan to go and enjoy the association with those of like faith.

AND THEY SHALL BE MINE

Edna M. Huggins

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another; and the Lord hearkened and heard it: and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts in that day when I make up my jewels, and I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him" (Mal. 3: 16-17).

Man is a social being. He is formed for society. Men need intercourse with their fellows; the company and conversation of their friends and acquaintances alleviate many of their sorrows and anxieties and sweeten many of the bitters of life. To retire into a wilderness, or to withdraw altogether from society, would be to derange the order of nature.

We who profess the gospel of Christ have especial need of each other's society, and of mutual converse and encouragement. We are for the most part surrounded by people who are opposed to a life of purity and holiness, and have to associate with the worldly and carnal in following our daily occupation, or in transacting our secular business. From this source arises considerable danger to religious principles, making it a daily conflict to keep the word of God alive in our hearts. Even professing Christians often strive to turn us from the narrow way. What need then we have to cleave together, and to strengthen one another in the Lord.

Thus did those who loved the Lord in the days of this prophet. At this time the people had forsaken the worship of God, the priesthood was corrupt. In these serious times the few who loved the Lord and appreciated the advantages of religious communion diligently improved the privilege of maintaining it. "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another."

"They that feared the Lord"—who is it that feared the Lord? It is said of Job that he was a perfect and upright man; one that feared God and eschewed evil (Job 1:8). Of Obadiah that he feared the Lord from his youth (1 Kings 18:12), and so I might show how all the ancient worthies feared God. The psalmist says, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom" (Psa. 111:10). The proverbs tell us that the fear of God is to hate evil (8:13).

They that feared God, obeyed his commands and hated evil, spake often one to another. Of what did they speak? This is not expressly mentioned, but from the character of the speakers we may safely conclude that it was on the scripture they conversed, and in connection with that spoke of their religious experiences—their spiritual conflicts and triumphs, hopes and fears, joys and sorrows. We are creatures of emotion, so our experiences exert a powerful influence on our hearts; and what more natural way of seeking relief than to give expression to our emotions in the hearing of those who can sympathize therewith? The psalmist felt this way for he says, "Come and hear all ye that fear God and I will declare what he hath done for my soul" (Psa. 66:16). He felt such a glow of gratitude in his heart and such a transport of joy on account of the rich spiritual blessings God had bestowed upon him, that he wished to communicate it to others like-minded with himself.

Thus should we feel and do when we meet with those of like precious faith. In so doing our own faith will be strengthened, our desires to do his will will be quickened, our resolutions freshened, and our hearts inflamed with greater ardor. We will be prompted to greater watchfulness and more active efforts for the glory of our Master.

FIGURATIVE LANGUAGE

The Bible, perhaps, contains as fine if not the finest display of figurative language in all literature. Rhetorical figures are but the flowers of speech. Embedded within figurative expressions must be found the solid facts and truths, otherwise the figurative expressions are simply airy nothings, pleasant for the moment but of no value in fact. The realities of both facts and commands are usually expressed in plain literal language. The rugged truth may be polished by beautiful figures, but it is the truth at last upon which we must depend. The orator may captivate us with his eloquence, but God saves us with his truth. The value of a diamond does not consist in the polish but in its very nature. Like the polish of a diamond the figures of speech is the Bible may make its truths sparkle and shine, yet their saving nature is in the fact that they are truths.

To express a truth in a figure of speech does not change the truth nor figure it out of existence. It remains the same truth in spite of the method of expression. To call Jesus the "Lamb of God" does not turn him into a sheep nor make him like one in every particular. He is still the Son of God and Savior of the world in fact. When called a "vine" it does not change his nature. His relationship to his disciples is beautifully expressed, but that relationship is a real fact. When Paul was told to "wash away his sins" in baptism (Acts 22: 16), the expression is a figure of speech, but it does not figure the fact out of existence. The plain statement is that baptism is "for remission of sins" (Acts 2:38). That fact remains, no difference how expressed. Figurative language must always be understood in the light of plain facts and plain statements on the subject. No other rule is sensible or safe. No forceful explanation of figures can set aside plain commands.—Sel.

SOME INCONGRUITIES

I knew a young preacher before he was married that preached on how to train up children; he must have known all about it!

A young preacher once wrote to an old preacher who had a long and wide experience, "I would like to give you some good sound advice." How that preacher smiled at the bombasity of the little fellow!

It seems a little strange for a poor, weak, sickly, deformed fellow to lay out a lot of health rules and tell people how to be strong and robust. We feel like quoting, "Physician, heal thyself."

I once knew a very strong holiness man, but he would get awful mad sometimes. How queer we mortals are!

I once heard a preacher say at a funeral, "I don't want you to think our sister is here. God came at half-past six Sunday night and carried her away." And he was there tending her funeral and some of us thought we saw her in the casket. How strange!

It always seemed very strange to me to hear a person say that they loved the Saviour, and then never wanted to hear a word about his soon coming. I always supposed that a person whom we loved, was welcome to our home and presence.—Selected.

EDITORIAL

Unusually hot weather this summer. Prices of meat are soaring, and threaten to become prohibitive. The calamity would be a blessing in disguise. Milder brethren and gentler sisters would result from the consumption of less meat.

"Thou art luke warm. . . . Thou are neither cold nor hot" (Rev. 3:15, 16). Following paraphrase to us expresses the meaning of this scripture: "Thou hast neither the coldness of the profligate sinner, nor the sacred fire of the enthusiastic believer; thou keepest in a sort of medium between them. In some things thou resemblest the one, in other things the other; as lukewarmness partakes of the nature both of heat and cold."

"Keeping mercy for thousands" (Ex. 34:7). The first letter of the Hebrew word here translated "Keeping," is much larger than usual; which shows that particular emphasis is laid upon it. This emphasis may be brought out in paraphrase thus: "I most strictly and richly keep mercy for thousands; the treasure is immense, and can never be exhausted."

COMMUNICATIONS

From Sister Flora A. Wood

Dear Brother Huggins: I am in sad trouble. My husband died to-day at two o'clock, after a lingering illness of years. I wrote you of my circumstances. I have a small lot and a very small house. It is a shelter. If I mortgage it to pay the burial expenses, it will leave me an old broken down woman with no resource but the alm house. I am putting my dead away with the least possible expense. My bill will be a little above one hundred dollars. I have no one to whom I can go for help but the brethren. If they will help me each one a mite, I can stay in my home until I am called to go. Nothing in my life has ever hurt me like the writing of this letter has done; but I would far rather die and be at rest than go to the alm house.

Yours sorrowfully.

(This letter is marked "private," but we feel that our dear Sister Wood deserves the sympathy and help of the brotherhood, not alone because she is a member thereof, but because she believes and advocates "sound doctrine," and has rendered great service to the gospel by her diligent work as contributor to The Restitution. Let us not only help her financially, but also by sending her words of comfort and cheer to brighten the gloom of this her hour of darkness. Her address is Chico, Butte Co., California.—Editor.)

From Brother Stephen Cronkhite

Editor Restitution: Enclosed please to find a postal note good for $5.00 to help swell the Linotype Fund. I hope that this machine can be secured and assist in scattering the good news of the gospel of the kingdom of God among all people. I believe that the time is short; in fact, I think that we are now in the final days of the Gentile times, but we may at least be able to save some.

The people of the whole of this time enlightended Christendom are expressing themselves as looking forward for some wonderful event to happen or change take place, the nature of which they know not. The future to them is one of darkness —plenty of lamps but no oil. There are a few that do know, for they have been told before. Our prayer is, "Thy kingdom come that God's will may soon be done on earth, as it is now done by the angels in heaven."

During the past six thousand years man has had the privilege and opportunity of arranging governments and laws to manage himself. Apart from a great display of scientific calculations and mechanical ingenuity, from a religious point of view, when we look this world all over and consider this greatest of world's wars, what other verdict can we write other than failure? "They are all gone out of the way; they are together become improfitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one" (Rom. 3:12). "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways, my ways, saith the Lord" (Isa. 55:8). "Woe unto them! for they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gai nsaying of Core" (Jude 11).

Man's government, both church and political, must soon give way to the laws of one that is even wiser and greater than Solomon, even the Lord from heaven, for in Number 14:21, we read: "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Amen.

One in the race for life eternal.

GOD'S LINOTYPE

How much Have You Gained By Trading?

By. S. Roxana Wince

I do not ask the question idly, for it is one on the right answer to which depend the issues of eternity. God has not given us life and placed us in this great, needy, suffering world, to invest our years in laying up treasures for ourselves, or in seeking for pleasures that cannot abide.

Yet, life must be invested somehow, It is our God-given capital. Every moment can be made to count in some way for good or evil. How are we bartering the precious moments that can be ours no more? Are we trading them for things worth while, for things that will endure? Are we using our voices, our hands, our feet, our money, for God? How many dear souls can trace their conversion to what we have said, or done, or given? If no one, we have not been good financiers, and he who entrusted us with so many precious talents, will be justly indignant, and will in the final settlement "take from us even that which we have"—life itself.

We cannot trifle with God, in this matter. When we enlisted as his servants, he expected us to be faithful in everything; to make everything count for his glory, that we might educate ourselves in preparatory work for the still mightier, more glorious work of the age to come. If we can increase our "talent" to five or ten in the present time, it will be proof that we can safely be entrusted with life and all that life involves over there. But what if we fail? What if we do not make the Master's business, our business? What if we do not put his money out to the bankers that when he comes, he may receive his own with usury? Mind you, the money, is "his own;" we ourselves, are "his own." Our time is his time; our voices, are his voices; our feet, are his feet; our hands are his hands.

The linotype that we are working to get is to be his linotype. Every word that it sets is to be for him. Every paper that it sends out is to be a prayer for the spread of his truth; a shout for the downfall of sin, and a plea for his truth.

Who wants a hand in this work? Many have already said, "I do!" "I do!" Every few days some dear brother or sister comes forward, willing-hearted with an offering to the Lord. Keep on, dear ones. Do not slacken in your giving. You will gain by trading. And the gain will be in imperishable riches.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON LEAF

Lesson IV.—August 27, 1916

Subject—Doctrine, The Basis of Faith and Hope

Memory Text

"Jesus answered them and said, My doctrine is not mine but his that sent me. If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself" (John 7:16, 17).

---

1. "And it came to pass when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine" (Matt. 7:28).

2. "The high priest then asked Jesus of his disciples and of his doctrine.

3. Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing" (John 18:19, 20).

4. "Then the deputy when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord" (Acts 13:12).

5. "Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine.

6. Take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine: Continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee" (1 Tim. 4:13, 16.)

7. "And they continued steadfastly in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship and in breaking of bread and in prayers" (Acts 2:42).

8. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

9. I charge thee therefore before God and the Lord Jesus Christ who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom;

10. Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine.

11. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears;

12. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables (2 Tim. 3:16, 17; 4:1-4).

Practical Truths

It is a deplorable fact, that the great doctrines of the Bible are constantly and persistently ignored and shunned by the public teachers of the present time. The reason assigned is, that doctrines are not essential. The people will not endure them. They ask for "pracitcal" sermons; meaning by that something sensational. If the great doctrines of salvation as taught in the Scriptures are not "practical," it would be difficult to find in the Bible anything which would be practical. Doctrine is from God, or at least that doctrine of salvation taught by Jesus is from God. It enlightens the understanding. Faith in doctrine purifies the life. It awakens hope, and purifies the heart.

Notes on the Lesson

"My Doctrine is not Mine."—The doctrine Jesus preached came from his Father, and therefore Jesus was not the originator of it.

1. "Astonished."—The doctrine Jesus taught was so contrary to the general bent of the people's minds that it arrested their attention. He taught with such wisdom and enforced what he said by such demonstrations of his power that the people wondered.

3. "Spake Openly to the World."—Jesus was a public teacher and his preaching was almost always where he could get the public ear. The synagogues and the temple were the places where he especially put forth his efforts; his doctrine was therefore well understood by the priests and people. Although Jesus was a public teacher and spake fearlessly in the synagogue and temple, yet he never argued with his opposers nor spake in the street (Matt. 12:19; Isa. 42:1, 2).

4. Deputy.—An officer acting in the place or name of another, by appointment. A substitute.

6. "Take Heed."—The Apostle directed Timothy to be careful in two things—watch himself and the doctrine. Salvation depends upon these two things, viz: upon what we do and what we believe. (See 1 Tim. 4:16).

7. "Steadfastly."—Without wavering, constant.

8. "Given by Inspiration."—God furnishing the ideas and words; hence the importance of the doctrines they teach. Our faith in the promises thus made or revealed constitute our ground work for obedience, or good works.

10. "Preach the Word."—If Paul could charge Timothy in so solemn a manner in the dawn of Christianity to adhere to doctrine, with redoubled force the charge comes to us, when we are living in the days spoken of by him when men will not endure sound doctrine.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. Doctrines of the Bible.—What is meant by "doctrine?" What doctrine or doctrines did Jesus teach? Mention some prominent doctrines of the Bible. What is the most important doctrine of the sacred Scriptures? Is the gospel of Christ a doctrine? Is the coming of Jesus a doctrine? Where is his coming taught? (Acts 1:11). Is the resurrection taught in the Bible? (John 5:28, 29). Where are taught in the Bible the doctrines of Baptism, Atonement, Life in Christ, Immortality, Saints' Inheritance and Justification by Faith?

2. The Origin of Doctrine.—What does Jesus say about the origin of his doctrine in our memory text? What is the promise made to the man who will do God's will? What evidence can you give that Christ's doctrine came from God? Where in our lesson is it called "The doctrine of the Lord?" Where is it called the "Apostles' doctrine?" Why?

3. A Series of Promises.—Is the second coming of Christ a matter of promise? (John 14:3). Is resurrection a promise? (John 6:40). Is eternal life a promise? When will it be realized? (John 6:54). Is the doctrine of a coming kingdom a matter of promise? (Dan. 7:27; Matt. 25:34). Is salvation a promise? When will it be realized?

4. Their Value.—What do the doctrines of the Bible amount to? Does their value to us depend upon our faith in them? Will we ever be the recipients of these glorious doctrines or promises without obedience?

5. Their Effect Upon Man.—What is the first effect of preaching the doctrine of Christ to the natural man? (1 Cor. 1:18, 23, 24; 1 Cor. 2: 14). What is the effect upon the honest in heart? (1 Pet. 2:1, 2, 3; Eph. 4:14-16).

6. Doctrine the Foundation of Faith.—Can we have faith without a knowledge of Christ's doctrine? (Rom. 10:17). Can we be saved without believing the doctrine of the resurrection? (Rom. 10:9; 1 Cor. 15:13, 14). Can we be saved without faith in God (Heb. 11:6)?

7. Doctrine the Foundation of Hope.—Does our hope rest upon faith in God's promises? (Heb. 6:17-19). Do these promises involve the doctrines of the Bible?

Remarks

The work for June was very satsfactory. At Phoenix we met with the new church we set in order last July, and added five to their number. Brother and Sister Lockwood and son, and Carl Lewis and wife. Brother Lockwood is well fitted to take up the work, and push it along. Brother Lewis is a young man, very much in earnest, and his wife decided they would travel the Christian road together. They have a nice Sunday School and meet every week to study the scriptures. Sister Rose Starjohn, their secretary, helps to keep them moving.

I left them for Palmer, and on the way stopped off to make Sister Emma Sissle a visit at Columbus. Sister Sissle is all alone in the faith; but holds on with a firm grip. We had an old-time visit, of which we have enjoyed many at this friendly home.

We arrived in Palmer the 17th, and began meetings that evening. Here we met a hearty welcome. We had not been able to get there since September on account of so much new work. It kept us pretty busy going from home to home and trying to meet the demands of visitation. Brother and Sister Zeller and son, Keifer, left at the close of the meeting for California and other points, for an extended visit. A card from them en route tells of good health and the enjoyment of beholding God's great field of nature.

On the 19th I went over to St. Paul for one day; spoke at Sister Brown's home to quite a nice gathering; visited Brother C. E. Crowe, and together took supper at Brother Henry Robinson's; and anyone who ever ate a meal with them knows that all you lack of enjoying it is the appetite. Brother Crowe is printing the new song book, and thinks he will have it done July 15th. After a month's work at these points, I returned to Omaha for a few days. I have calls enough to keep me goingtill cold weather. Have just received calls for 7 or 8 baptisms in other states. May the Lord help us to reach these calls. Have had some pleasant meetings with the Omaha brethren, also the Avery church. They both are having regular meetings, and meet together quite often.

Your brother in the work,
ALMUS ADAMS.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S COLUMN

Otherwise Alone

We are a lone people, set apart for the Father's use in a big world of pleasure, wealth, scientific knowledge, vain philosophy, and doctors of divinity, so called. The responses to the isolated funds and societies, even the rousing call and answer to the linograph fund show how much alone we stand. True and brave hearts realize that some sacrifice is to be made to be more closely branded in the bonds of faith. We are here together, bearing the Father's name, and it behooves us to follow out the commandments in regard to our brother, bear no false witness against him, love him freely, and forgive him seventy times seven, if need be, share his joy and sorrow, and give him the respect and honor that becomes the child of the King. We are now on the course for eternal life and a place at the right of Christ, but though spoken of as a race with God on the judgment stand, we are not to trample down the weak and weary, but to follow out the language of Matt. 25:40, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these," etc.

Are we not workers together with Christ, just as the apostles were? At a divinely appointed time shall the workers find rest and compensation for tired hands and feet and only then. Just the same this comforting thought bears no weight on what we do now, for it winks at no slackness nor shirking in the labor of the present moment. Think back to those of whom the world was not worthy, whose power of example lives with us today, and guards the halting gait. They come to us not to make us appear little, but to show how big we may grow.

Then there are the treasuries of God's inspired word that open to us by the key of obedience and faith and diligent search. If we think and ponder on the revelations given and the lessons Christ is preaching, can one be alone? We find that we are only a little later of entering the race course down which Christ and his immediate disciples have passed.

And, finally, there is God. God who is ever present, and as a pitying Father loves those who fear him. A distant Father could not surely know enough about one to pity and love and help when help was needed. David called him his refuge, his deliverer, his help, his strength, and we well catch the words as they fall from his lips. But solicitous and loving as God is to the righteous man, let the disobedient beware. The God of our fathers who said that he would never fail nor forsake them, hands his message even down to us when Christ says: "If a man love me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him."

Otherwise alone, but for the strength of the saints now living near us, for the saints now asleep who trod the way before us, for Christ who died that we might have salvation, for the contemplation of the future glories, for the God who has promised that whatsoever you ask in faith that shall be given you—do not fear, do not be faithless; that same God, whose mandates have laid the monarch low, watches the sparrow's fall, and has not forgotten thee.

SISTER FRANCES RUSSELL.

OBITUARY

William Cullen Chaplin, son of A. P. and Minnie Chaplin, was born in Kay County, Oklahoma, July 29, 1894; died in his home in Cowley County, Kansas, June 15, 1916. He had been a sufferer from diabetes for a number of years. His last sickness lasted but a few days. The disease had so weakened his system that he was unable to throw it off. His love of home was seen and felt in every action of his life. Not being able to perform hard manual labor, he became a constant companion of his mother. They lived and loved together. His affliction made him the constant care of his mother. No child was more tenderly cared for by a mother than Willie. His love for his mother was deep and lasted until the last. It is written that "Every heart knows its own sorrow." While our heart aches, words fail to express our sympathy for the bereaved family. How we long for the time when disease and death will be destroyed and none will say, "I am sick." May our Father in heaven sustain the mother, who will feel more keenly the loss of her son, is our prayer.

AUNT NANCY B. ROBISON.

BRIEF HISTORY OF TOBACCO

Brother R. A. Frazier asks in Restitution July 11, 1916, "Why did Jesus never speak of tobacco?" Tobacco is a native of America and was not known in the east until about 1560. It was then introduced into Italy. The Popes Urban VIII and Innocent II fulminated against it the thunders of the church; the priests and Sultans of Turkey declared smoking a crime. Sultan Amaret IV decreed its punishment by the most cruel death; the pipes of smokers were thrust through their noses in Turkey; and in Russia, in the earlier part of the 17th century, the noses of smokers were cut off. King James I of England issued a counterblaste to tobacco, in which he described its use as a custom loathsome to the eye, hateful to the nose, harmful to the brain, dangerous to the lungs, and in the black stinking fume thereof nearest resembling the horrible Stygian smoke of the pit that is bottomless. All opposition, however, was vain (Alden's Manifold Cyclopedia).

E. W. KNAPP.

FIDELITY MORE IN HEART THAN HEAD

I have a striking illustration of this fact to mention. I was asked one day to breakfast at the house of an excellent man who has since gone to his rest, and on going in I heard him saying: "You deny the Bible, and therefore there is no arguing with you." I instantly guessed there was a skeptic present: and, instead of giving an exposition of a chapter, as I had done on one or two occasions, I resolved to give a succinct summary of the evidences of the Christian faith. In the course of my remarks I made the following statement, which I had received from good authority:

"There was an infidel of great notoriety, and of no ordinary powers of mind. He had a wife who was a Christian, and a daughter who was believed to be so. His wife died and went to her rest, and after some time consumption laid the daughter also on her dying bed. Three or four days before her death she called her father to her bedside, and put the question to him: 'Father, am I to die in the creed you teach, or in the faith in which my mother died?' The struggle in the father's mind was intense, and his frame was convulsed for a time. At last, in the agony of his feelings he gave utterance to the conviction of his heart: 'Die, my child, in your mother's faith.'"

I little suspected, when I rose from the table and was introduced to the party, that very father was at the moment in the room. There were tears in his eyes, but no conviction carried to his heart; though I reasoned with him for two hours, no impression was made apparently upon his hardened heart or his seared and deadened conscience. But carry this fact with you, that infidelity may do for Sunday newspapers and Socialist halls, but will not bear the terrible test of the departing hour.—Dr. Cumming.

A PRAYER QUESTION

To a correspondent of the S. S. Times asking the following question regarding the Lord's prayer, "How shall a mother explain to a child six and one-half years of age his question regarding the clause in the Lord's prayer which says: 'Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil?'" the editor replies thus:

A little child asks his father not to take him on the dark road that leads through the woods. The little fellow has been that way himself and has been frightened by a strange animal that ran close by him; and the road was filled with rough places over which he stumbled. The father may answer his child's "prayer" and lead him home by another road. Or he may know that it is best that they should walk on the dark road, and together the father and the son make the journey. With his hand safely held in the father's the little fellow knows no fear, and then, when the journey is over, he may be glad that his father did not answer the prayer, but instead lead him safely through the dangerous road.

So we pray to our heavenly Father, "Bring us not into temptation." We recognize our weakness and know that we may fall. But we know too that it may be best for our Father to allow us to meet the temptation; and so we pray that, if it is best that the temptation come, he "may deliver us from the evil one." Thus our Lord prayed, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me; nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done."

God himself never tempts a man with evil, any more than a father would send a wolf to a child that he might be scared, or put a sharp stone in his path that he might stumble over it. But God may permit us to go where the temptation will meet us, just as an earthly father may permit his child to go to a dangerous place after he has provided sure protection for him.—The Christian.

Words of Cheer.—Few persons realize how much happiness may be promoted by a few words of cheer spoken in moments of despondency, by words of encouragement in seasons of difficulty, by words of commendation when obstacles have been overcome by effort and perseverance. Words fitly spoken often sink so deep into the mind and the heart of the person to whom they are addressed that they remain a fixed, precious, and often-recurring memory—a continuous sunshine lighting up years perhaps after the lips that have uttered them are sealed in death. A whole life has been changed, exalted, expanded, and illumined by a single expression of approval falling timely upon a sensitive and ambitious nature. Words of cheer cost nothing to the speaker. On the contrary, they are to him as well as to the hearer a source of great happiness to be had for the mere effort of uttering them. The habit of speaking such words at appropriate times is easily acquired, while at the same time it is of so much importance that it should be sedulously cultivated by all.

Physical Pain: Its Offices and Uses

We are so situated in this world that it is possible under present conditions to develop our mental, moral, physical and religious faculties. Remarkable as the statement may seem, our evil experiences, as well as the good ones, tend in this direction.

Pain is so universal and pungently real, it deserves our close as well as widest attention.

Some schools of thought would have us believe that there is no such thing as matter, hence there can be no pain, sickness or sorrow. However, people may deceive themselves by believing such sophisticated arguments as are usually advanced by this cult, the painful fact still remains that we all suffer pain, sickness and eventually death, which every cemetery in every land and clime proclaims. Sin, pain and death are concomitants; none can escape them. Since this is the experience of all in infancy, in youth, and in age, how shall we bear it, and for what purpose does it exist?

This world was made for pain! Startling as this may seem, there is evidence that God anticipated man's disobedience as recorded in Gen. 3: 17, 18, and provided for this expediency accordingly. Yonder house is being erected; we ask why the builder is erecting such massive walls and installing apparatus for generating heat, while now we are enduring sweltering heat. You answer: "He is preparing for zero weather during the winter months that are to come."

Do you not, then, see the analogy? This house being built during the hot month of July is a prophecy of the storm and cold during the month of January. The design of God, like the architect's plan seen in yonder house, is wrought out in the world. In Gen. 2:15-25 we see that God prearranged for the experiences of pain and its concomitants even before it existed.

Pain, primarily, was introduced for man. Therefore we ask this question, "What are its offices and uses?"

William Paley, one of the most gifted among men, tried to answer this question in his brilliant work, "Natural Theology." The master minds of all ages have wrestled with it. None seem to agree with the Bible that God is really the originator of and back of it all. All have realized in their lives that pain, if heeded, like a flag or signal of danger, warns us of a greater and more dangerous pain that will follow, and if not heeded will terminate in death. Pain often enables us to give a correct diagnosis of a disease, and, like a sentinel on guard, warns us of approaching danger. But this is not always so; there are some pains that fail even in this. While the chief functions of pain are to close up valves, stop secretions, eject poisons, etc., some pains expel nothing, and nothing seems to be rectified by their use.

Everybody who has suffered pain knows by experience, after relief from it, that the very pain has increasd our appreciation of ease. But if this is sufficient explanation of pain, why did not God make us happy by happiness? Jonathan Edwards taught that those who went to heaven when they die (which the Bible nowhere teaches) as they looked over the battlements of heaven at the poor creatures suffering eternal torment, would turn around and praise God that they were not there. However, doctors and theologians try to explain the philosophy and phenomenon of pain, they only skim the surface; they leave the most important result, the moral benefits of pain to its subjects, untouched. In Gen. 3:18, 19 we learn that the very ground was cursed for man's sake. Paul verifies this in Rom. 5:12; he further amplifies this idea in Rom. 8:18-24, showing the universality of its worrking.

Solomon in Eccl. 1:13 tells us why God instituted this travail that man by its experience may be "exercised therewith." Everybody knows that to insure success in our home or in any business undertaking discipline is the most important factor. Paul reasons in Heb. 12:5-13 that God adopts much the same methods to educate and correct his children as we do in educating and correcting our own. David prayed that God would chasten him, but not in anger (Psa. 6:1). It matters not, then, how we may reason or try to explain the physical necessities and uses of pain, from a physical or natural viewpoint; it can only be intelligently understood as we reason from the moral and religious discipline that result from its use. God chastens us that we might be partakers of his holiness (Heb. 12:10).

II. Moral ideas and religious discipline alone can explain pain.

Probably the worst pain to bear is pain of the mind, mental pain—who has not suffered shame and mortification? Paul points out in Rom. 3:19 that all have broken God's law and stand guilty before him. The very fact that God has forbidden thus and so, even in our very thoughts, condemns us all; none are innocent. The gallows, the electric chair, the jail and penitentiary—all suggest that criminals exist. What are the uses of all these institutions? You answer: "To punish criminals." Are the penitentiaries and jails fitted up as luxuriously as our homes? You laugh at my question, and answer by asking me wherein would the punishment exist? Exactly so. I agree with you; so does God. We all know that moral wrong begets pain of the mind; why the blush of shame, why the downcast look that always accompanies guilt?

But this mental pain—shame—can be overcome by the loss of feeling. The mind by sophistry becomes seared—past feeling. Paul points out that in our day men will be habitual liars and strangers to the truth and the worship of the true God (1 Tim. 4:1-3; Eph. 4:17, 18). What, then, keeps alive the sense of guilt, when the conscience becomes dead, and we are past feeling? Who has not looked upon the victim of licentiousness, the libertine, shuffling along, physical pain shooting its twinges through his body as each step is taken? Who has not looked into the bleared eyes and upon the bloated face of the gormandizer, the very odor of his vile breath telling of the agony of his diseased stomach? Tomorrow morning I will meet men whose appearance will vividly bring to my mind the words of Solomon: "Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contentions? Who hath babbling? Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine. Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder" (Prov. 23:29-32). Oh, my beloved; God is not mocked: whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

David could write as all our experiences agree: "I know, O Lord, that thy judgments are right, and that thou is faithfulness has affected me" (Ps. 119:75). "Before I was afflicted I went astray. But now have I kept thy word. It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes" (Psa. 119:67, 71). Notice David's disposition after his affliction, how his spirit is softened, his song of praise he now sings in a lower and sweeter key. Jesus was made perfect through suffering, suffering even the pains of death, which, praise God, could not hold him (Acts 2:24).

Paul followed his blessed master along this narrow road of pain and suffering (2 Cor. 1:8, 9). We must do likewise if we desire to partake of God's holiness. Everywhere pain and suffering exist—the babe of a few days lying helpless in its crib; the noble horse, man's best helper. We sometimes complain when we see these suffer, but a voice in clarion tones proclaims, like Nathan to David of old: "Thou art the man" (2 Sam. 12:7). Among the warring nations of Europe are they sparing the cruel effects of war, its awful suffering, from animals, women and children? Nay, but the reversed. Unarmed ships without warning are sent to the bottom ofthe sea with their human freight. Food and the necesities of life are withheld from the starving millions; property is burned, homes shattered, innocent lives sacrificed in this bitter struggle. Why? Because each combatant realizes a nation consists of all its property and people. Read again Gen. 1:27, 31; Psa. 8:4-9; Heb. 8:5-12. Then read Gen. 3:14-20. God could not do otherwise and teach man the valuable lesson that only through pain and suffering, that only by the exercise of every virtue and grace God has endowed us with in fighting evil, overcoming sin in our mortal bodies, can we become like him of knowing good from evil and its ultimate results. The Bible begins with man's creation and fall; it ends with man's redemption from death and restoration to honor, glory and immortality. Pain came into the world with sin; pain departs and is no more as sin ceases to exist (Rev. 21:4).

"Here shall ye taste unmingled joys,
And dwell in perfect peace;
Ye who have known Jehovah's name
And trusted in his grace."

"THE WORD"

John: I am here again. I am very anxious to learn what God has magnified above the name, which is above every other name.

Tom: Turn to Psa. 138:2: "I will worship toward thy holy temple, and praise thy name for thy loving kindness and for thy truth; for thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name." Here, you see, God has placed his word above the name.

John: Does this mean the Word as we have it in the Bible?

Tom: Yes, the Bible is the Word of God. Peter says: "For the prophecy came not in old times by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (II Pet. 1:21). Paul says: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners, spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son" (Heb. 1:1, 2). Jesus says: "For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment. What I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak" (Jno. 12:49, 50).

John: But, I have been taught that while the Bible contains God's truth, that it has many errors, and is full of contradictions.

Tom: Did you ever read where Christ, the apostles or anyone of the holy men who speak as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, made any such statement about the Bible?

John: I never did, but I heard a man, who claims to be a follower of Christ, say that the Bible had more than 22,000 mistakes.

Tom: That man did not follow Christ. Christ made no such statements about God's holy book.

John: What did he say about it?

Tom: In Luke 24:44 he says: "These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me." In John 5:39 he says: "Search the scriptures: for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." In Jno. 10:35 he declares "the Scriptures can not be broken." These are only a few of the many statements he made concerning the Scriptures—all of which show that he endorsed all of the Scriptures. He never said a word about God's word being full of errors. Those who say it is are not following the Master, but they have a creed that is not in harmony with the Word, and in order to hold the creed they are ready to condemn all of God's word that does not agree with their man-made creed.

John: Is it true, as some claim, that by taking a verse here and there we can prove anything by the Bible?

Tom: I think you can answer that question by trying to prove the affirmation of any one of the following questions: (1) The immortality of the soul; (2) That saints go to heaven when they die; (3) That the Kingdom of God was set up as Pentecost.

John: Why the majority of church members believe all are immortal, that the saints go to heaven when they die, and that God's kingdom was set up as Pentecost.

Tom: I know they do, and because God's Word does not teach what they believe they stand ready to condemn the Word. Peter said the Word was surer than his own eye sight: "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory. "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount. We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts" (II Pet. 1:16-19).

John: Wonderful Book.

Tom: Come again, next week, Monday evening, and we'll learn what this Word will do for us if we believe and obey it.

WISDOM

In order that the true value of knowledge and wisdom be realized and that in connection with God and his plan, this essay is written.

By reading Prov. 4:7 we learn that the principal things to be gained is wisdom; which will do much for those who obtain it. "Forsake her not, and she shall preserve thee: love her and she will keep thee: exalt her and she shall promote thee: she shall bring thee to honor when thou dost embrace her. She shall give to thine head an ornament of grace; a crown of glory shall she deliver to thee" (Prov. 4:6, 8, 9). Solomon tells us the condition of those who find wisdom: "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding" (Prov. 3:13). As compared with the precious things of the earth, she is most precious. She is more precious than silver, fine gold, rubies, and all the things desired cannot be compared unto her.

Let us find out how this wisdom can be obtained. In the first place, we must fear God, for "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge." We must receive his words and keep his commandments so that we will incline our hearts unto wisdom and understanding. We must seek for knowledge so that we may understand what the Lord expects of us. (Read Prov. 2:1-5.) We are exhorted to seek for knowledge and wisdom. Is there any difference between these two? We can have knowledge without wisdom, but when we have wisdom we have the possession of both. Wisdom is knowledge and the capacity to make due use of it; it is knowledge practically applied to the best ends (Read Eccl. 12:9).

Knowledge is important, for without it we would not know God and understand his great plan. Knowledge increases responsibility. The more we know, the more is expected of us. Christ upbraided Bethsaida, Capernaum, and other cities because of their sins after possessing proper knowledge. He said that in the day of judgment it will be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon and other places in which the mighty works had not been done as in the cities upbraided.

After obtaining knowledge let us proceed to rightly apply it. Let us seek wisdom with our whole hearts. In order to seek it we must first know where to look for it. Solomon tells us who gives it. He says, "For the Lord giveth wisdom, out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding" (Prov. 2:6). There is an additional statement concerning the source of wisdom and how it may be obtained: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him" (James 1:5.) It can be obtained, but not without faith. "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering."

In Prov. 8 wisdom is personified. She is represented as a woman making an appeal to the sons of men that they receive instruction and knowledge. Wisdom was with the Lord from the beginning. She says, "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was." All the great works of the Lord were performed by wisdom. "The Lord by wisdom hath founded the earth, by understanding hath he established the heavens. He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion." Of the wisdom and knowledge of God, Paul says: "O the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out" (Rom. 11:33)!

Job asked where wisdom could be found and where the place of understanding. Then followed the declaration: "Man knoweth not the price thereof: neither is it found in the land of the living. The depth saith, 'It is not in me: and the sea saith, It is not with me. It cannot be gotten for gold, neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof . . . . the price of wisdom is above rubies.'" Job asked again, "Whence then cometh wisdom, and where is the place of understanding?" The reply is, "God understandeth the way thereof, and he knoweth the place thereof; and unto man he said, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom" (Read Job 28).

Solomon excelled in wisdom, which was obtained from God (1 Kings 4:29). God promised to continue blessing him on the condition that he walked before him in integrity of heart, in uprightness, to do according to all that he commanded, and keep his statutes. If the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, then the first step in the acquisition of knowledge and wisdom is to fear God. Fear him in the sense of deference and fear to displease him. David says that those who have a good understanding are they who do all of God's commandments. The Israelites, when given commandments, received these words: "Keep therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people" (Deut. 4:6). Let us be diligent in seeking this wisdom.

We have in word and through personal observation that the possession of wisdom changes the appearance of man. "Who is a wise man? And who knoweth the interpretation of a thing? A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine, and the boldness of his face shall be changed" (Eccl. 8:1). There are some people who stand up and proclaim the word of God and who rejoice in the truth because of obedience and love for it. It has been said of such a one, "That man's beaming countenance tells us that he loves the truth." Why? Because he fears God, loves him, and keeps his commandments, which is the beginning of wisdom.

Paul speaks of two kinds of wisdom; that of this world, and that of God. He says that the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God, and he exhorts us not to glory in men because the thoughts of these wise men are vain. What is to become of this kind of wisdom? "It is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise; and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent" (1 Cor. 1:19). God's wisdom, Paul says, was ordained, or instituted, before the world. Had the princes of the world known this wisdom and understood God's plan, a terrible deed would have been prevented; the crucifixion of the Lord of glory (1 Cor. 2:8). Of the wisdom of God, James says: "It is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy." Of the wisdom of the world, he says, "But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not against the truth. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work" (James 3:14-16).

Let us ask God to "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

VIOLA G. MEERMANS.

THE LORD'S LINOTYPE

By S. Roxanna Wine

That is how I love to think of it: just as the Israelites thought of the tabernacle of old. Giving for it seems very much like giving for the tabernacle, for we confidently expect the Lord to abide in and go with "The Restitution," and to work through it for the saving of men.

To me, it seems like a place of prayer; a holy altar whereon to lay our gifts, and in thought, I instinctively turn to Exodus 25:21-30, and to Numbers 7:1-39.

"And they came every one whose heart stirred him up, and everyone whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the Lord's offering to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation and for all his service. . . . . And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing hearted, and brought bracelets and earrings and rings and tablets, all jewels of gold; and every man that offered an offering of gold unto the Lord."

So many things they brought, colored cloths, and fine linen, and goats' hair and beautiful skins, silver and brass, accasia wood, onyx stones and oil for the lamps. And at the dedication of the tabernacle "They brought their offerings before the Lord, six covered wagons, and twelve oxen," "to do the service of the tabernacle." Silver chargers. Silver bowls full of fine flour, mingled with oil, silver spoons full of incense; bullocks, rams, lambs and goats.

And so it was when, in the closing days of the life of David, a palace, "not for man, but for the Lord God," was to be built. "The chief of the fathers and princes of the tribes of Israel offered willingly," giving thousands of talents of gold and of silver, of brass and of iron, and many precious stones. All the people rejoicing with the king, "because with a perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord." And how thankful David was, that God had made them able to offer after this sort. Listen to his prayer, or to a little part of it, at least:

"Now, therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name. . . . . For all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee, O Lord our God. All this store that we have prepared to build thee an house for thy holy name cometh of thine hand and is all thine own. I know also, my God, that thou triest the heart and hast pleasure in uprightness."

Note two things, that when we bring our gifts to the Lord, we bring him only what is his own; and, that in asking us to give, God is trying our hearts, to see whether we be upright before him or not.

Shall we doubt and falter here? Shall we set our own pressing needs against the far more pressing needs of this cause? and like

The coward stand aside,
Doubting in our abject spirits till our Lord is crucified.
And the multitude make virtue of the faith they had denied?"

Give, and trust God to look after your needs.

A woman from her sex and character, has a claim to many things beside shelter, food, and clothing. She is not less a woman for being wedded; and the man who is fit to be trusted with a good wife recollects all which this implies, and shows himself perpetually chivalrous, sweet-spoken, considerate, and deferential.

We celebrate nobler obsequies to those we love drying the tears of others than by shedding our own; and the fairest funeral wreath we can hang on their tomb is not so fair as a fruit-offering of good deeds.

No man who has reached the age of three score years and ten would, upon reflection, be willing to rub out from his experience in life the sorrows which have softened his character, the mistakes which have taught him wisdom, or the wrong-doings which he has ever regretted, and which, by their influences, have made the golden threads which it is reasonable to suppose have been formed in the texture of his moral character.

A beautiful person is the natural form of a beautiful soul. The mind builds its own house. A vacant mind takes all the meaning out of the fairest face. A sensual disposition deforms the handsomest features. A cold selfish heart shrivels and distorts the best looks. A groveling spirit takes all the dignity out of the figure and all the character out of the countenance. A cherished hatred transforms the most beautiful lineaments into an image of ugliness.

Quarrels

There is nothing which enters so intimately into the character of our social intercourse as the condition of the feelings. The idea that discords in the family, in the social circle, in business relations, or in party strifes proceed chiefly from diversity of opinion, difference of circumstances, inharmonious tastes, or conflicting interests is by no means correct. These things often seem to be the immediate cause of dissension; but they are no more chargeable with it than are the sun and the air chargeable with the presence of the noxious weed. There may be every shade of thought, every variety of belief, every divergence of preference, and every dissimilarity of disposition coexisting in harmonious and even pleasurable intercourse, if only the feelings of those who associate together do not clash discordantly. On the other hand, the nearest resemblance in external surroundings and the utmost uniformity in thought may coexist with disgraceful bickerings.

EDITORIAL

The Ohio annual meetings convenes in Cleveland, O., September 6-10 inclusive. See the program in this number of The Restitution. Come and enjoy with us this feast of good things.

"The Restitution Sunday School Leaf," published weekly in The Restitution, is also published in a four page leaflet form, for use in Sunday School work. Let us quit teaching our children from Orthodox literature, which has more or less error in it at the best, and use our own, which we shall take special pains to see is absolutely pure and wholesome. Where "The Restitution Sunday School Leaf" is wanted for private and individual study, the price is one cent the copy; where twenty-five copies are wanted weekly for Sunday School use, Brother Goss will be glad to send them for $1.00 the month. We urge the brethren and sisters to consider this matter seriously.

Lamb.—A lamb in the Apocalypse does not represent a lamb, but a man whose name comprehends the attributes of innocence and sacrifice for sin. "A lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth," represents that same Man as once dead, but alive again; and henceforth the depostary of the unmeasured Spirit of God, by which (in the time of the vision,) he is Almighty and seeing over all.—Her. of the King. and Age to Come.

"LIKE A TREE"

Of the "blessed" man, (Psa. 1:1) whose "delight is in the law of the Lord" (vs. 2), David says: "And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." God frequently compares people, especially his people, to trees. He called Israel "a green olive tree, fair, and of goodly fruit" (Jer. 11:16). In prophecy they are spoken of "as cedar trees beside the waters" Numb. 24:5, 6). As long as Israel was fair and yielded goodly fruit, God spoke of them as a "green olive tree," and as a cedar; but when they became a "dry tree" (Isa. 56:3) the axman felled them to the earth (Matt. 3:10). They had enough sap in them (Psa. 104:16) to live in a comatose slumber; they even yielded leaves, but they were a barren fig tree—cursed by the Lord. Repeated efforts were made to produce fruit on it. As no fruit was borne by this tree in God's well-kept forest, the decree went forth, "Cut it down" (Luke 13:6-10). However, in the restitution age, Israel is to be planted in the "garden of the Lord." Grafted back into the "good olive tree" by faith, they will take on the beauty and "fatness of the olive tree' and have the smell of Lebanon (Hos. 14:5, 6; Rom. 11). As the Lord's people, they will then be "called trees" (Isa. 61:3), and "branches of the olive" (Zech. 4:12). Even Christ is spoken of under the similitude of a tree(Rev. 2:7). He is also called "a plant of renown" (Ezek. 34:29), Offspring of David, Rev. 22:16), "the Rose of Sharon" (Cant. 2:1), "a bundle of Myrrh" (vs. 13), and "a Cluster of Camphire" (vs. 14).

"Ungodly men" are also spoken of as clouds driven of wind, fluctuating stars, and "trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots" (Jude 12). While the righteous and wicked are both compared to trees, the reader will notice that different kinds of trees are used to represent them. The wicked are compared to a fig tree with leaves, but no fruit; to trees "twice dead," "without fruit," "plucked up by the roots." The righteous are likened to green olive trees, cedars, "fair," bearing "goodly fruit," "full of sap" (Psa. 104:16), etc. David (Psa. 1:3) in representing the righteous under the figure of a tree, does not select a dwarfish, unhealthy tree growing in a semi-desert with scarcely a leaf to play in the winds of heaven, but a tree that grows: 1. By "the rivers of water;" 2. An evergreen; "His leaf also shall not wither;" 3. With fruit producing qualities: "In his season;" 4. And its growth full of life, thrift, and prosperity: "Whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." A tree covered with luxurious verdure, blossoms and fruit; this is the kind of a tree the Lord expects you to be, dear reader. It is interesting and instructive to contemplate the righteous as trees

1. "Planted by the rivers of water." The righteous are uprooted from the world and "planted" (set out) near "water." They are planted by the Lord himself (Psa. 80:15; Matt. 15:13), "in the Lord's house" (Psa. 92:13). Now God is the "fountain of living (running) waters" (Jer. 2:3; 17:13). He is the reservoir which feeds all outflowing streams; he is the fountain head of life (Psa. 36:9), and the rivers and rivulets of present pleasure (Rev. 22:1, 17). In the Lord's House where he is near them to quench their thirst (Ex. 29:45; Matt. 18:20). the righteous are like trees on the river bank. Their roots are kept moist by the water running out from God, the fountain head, through the Lord's House—the house of prayer (Zech. 14:8; Luke 19:46); and thus the "trees of righteousness" are kept growing, and when the season comes for harvest, "the fruit of the spirit," which has been growing on them (Gal. 5:22) will be matured into eternal life (John 4:14; Rev. 21:6; Ezek. 47:7).

2. "Fruit in his season."

The planting, watering, etc., was with the design of getting fruit. Fruit-bearing trees are the only ones that are of any worth. Now the saints are "trees of righteousness" and are "the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified" (Isa. 61:3). The Lord plants, waters and blesses them, not in the skies, for trees do not grow there, but "they shall inherit the earth forever, the branch of my planting that I may be glorified" (Isa. 60:21). "Trees of righteousness" grow in the ground; "they shall inherit the land forever." God does not pull them out of the land and transplant them in skyana!! No, they are to inherit the land, and God's design is that his planting may "glorify" him. We are sure God would get no glory from them were he to uproot the trees and plant them in the clouds! How are we to glorify the Lord? Let us answer this question, for thousands of people do not know how to glorify him.

"I am the vine," says Jesus, "and ye (disciples) are the branches" (John 15:5). The branch on the vine is there for the purpose of bearing fruit. Jesus goes on to say: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples" (vs. 8). Fruit-bearing is not only the test of discipleship, but it is fruit and "much fruit" that glorifies the Lord. When only a boy the writer remembers attending a Holiness meeting in the South. They vociferated in a frantic way during the meeting, "Hallelujah," "Glory to God," "Amen," etc. We were much impressed by their verbose service. We thought they were glorifying the Lord in a wonderful manner. On our return home we got out the Old Book to read a little. The first text our eye fell upon was, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." We gave the leaves of our book a flirt at random, and read, "The tree is known by his fruit" (Matt. 12:33; 7:17). We looked again and read, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 7:21). Then we meditated thus: If we glorify God by "fruit;" if "doing the will of my Father which is in heaven;" if that, instead of "saying," gives us the kingdom, those Holiness people are not glorifying the Lord at all! Then we learned that as they did not know the Father's will, nor do it, they had no "fruit," and that all their "Hallelujahs," "Glory to Gods," and "Amens," and "sayings," were only the wordy outbursts of hallucination. They are modern Baalites, whose "Lord, Lord," Jehovah as completely ignores as he did the long loud prayers of the one hundred and fifty prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel (1 Kings 18).

3. "His leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper."

It is not enough for a tree to have a leaf which does not wither. A green leaf shows that there is life in the tree; but having life is not enough. Bearing fruit even is not altogether satisfactory. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." Hence the tree before David's mind is an ever-green, ever-living, ever-fruit-bearing, an ever-prosperous tree. "Whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." Dear ones, "we are God's husbandry" (1 Cor. 3:9); he has gathered out the stones, built a tower in the midst, made a wine-press, and says, "What could have been done to my vineyard more than I have not done in it?" Having done so much for us, he naturally looks for us to bring forth grapes (Isa. 5:1-5). After God had thus cared for Israel, they brought forth wild grapes; then God took away the hedge, broke down the walls, and his vineyard was trodden down (vss. 5, 6). Let us beware, lest the same evil come upon us, for the same cause. God help us to "prosper" in the work of the Lord, to glorify him by yielding "much fruit." May God add his blessing to our efforts that we may be "fruitful in every good work" (Col. 1:10).

COMMUNICATIONS

From A. B.

Dear Brethren:

My father said if I had any money to give away to give it for publishing your paper by your own hands. I am not going to give a whole lot as I know of, just a little. I was reading in your paper one ought to give a tenth. There is lots of people coming short of the tenth, to tell the truth. I was to Sunday School a week ago, and the lesson was on the resurrection. The teacher did not know whether the earth was the home of the Saints or not. Did not know whether the Kaiser was going to take the Kingdom. I told him that the kingdoms of this world were to become the Kingdom of Christ. I was thinking of those that look for Christ, that he will appear unto them who look for him without sin unto salvation, but they would twist the scriptures and say that was death. The Lord is merciful or we surely would get to the end of a slide.

I would like to see an article about the angry nations. Find enclosed three dollars for the Linotype Fund. Yours truly,

THE WAY OF TRUTH

The road leading toward God must be by the way of truth. God's word is truth, hence the more error we have the more we are out of harmony with his plans, and therefore disqualified for a co-worker with Christ in the coming Kingdom. By seeking truth we establish a closer relationship with God, and by accepting what truth comes to us we have the promise of more light, thereby we enter into or have a fuller comprehension of God's spirit. The world is full of college-made ministers who throw doctrine to the four winds and sacrifice truth for the sake of harmony, large congregations and collections. In fact, they tell us that any contention for truth is a sin. When we began our meetings at Avery last winter the Presbyterian minister made a personal plea to me that because of the diversity of opinion on baptism we must refrain from discussing it. The acceptance of Christ has been tampered with and haggled at by theologians until it does not have very much significance, looking at it through orthodox eyes. Can we accept Christ and denounce the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth with Christ as the promised King? Can we accept Christ and advocate that he went to Paradise instead of going down into the grave? When it is God's plan to restore the earth and make it the home of the righteous, and we rebel and clamor for others things, are we any better than the rebellious-children of Israel who were condemned to perish in the wilderness? If the ordinance of baptism is a commandment of God, and salvation is conditioned on compliance with it, is it God's way to leave it to us to perform it in any manner that best suits us? There can be but one answer. God's ways are specific and mandatory, from which there is no appeal. How precious and satisfying is the truth to those who find it, and how we rejoice that the vindicating day of the Lord is sure to come. When mystery, Babylon, falls God grant that we may be free from all its contaminating error.

Yours desiring to know the truth,

J. E. HAMMOND.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON LEAF

LESSON V.

The Bible

Memory Text

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path" (Ps. 119:105).

1. "For the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Heb. 5:12).

2. "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. 1:21).

3. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (2 Tim. 3:16).

4. "Whatsovere things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope" (Rom. 15:4).

5. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth" (Jno. 17:17).

6. "But he answered and said, It is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. 4:4).

7. "Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord." (Ps. 119:1).

8. "Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart" (Ps. 119:2).

Practical Truths

The lesson to-day is an important one. The Bible is a package of letters sent by God our Father to us his children. These letters are designed to teach us many things about ourselves that we could not know without them. In them are shown how we began to exist, what we should do to make our lives pleasant and where and what will be our destiny.

The Bible comes as no other book comes to us. It offers promises which no other book offers. Who but God can be its author? What other book so powerful in its influence over our hearts and actions?

Notes on the Lesson

"A Lamp to My Feet."—It is said that the people in the time of David and even up to the present time in Oriental countries, have a small lamp attached to the foot which shows where to step. God's word shows us where we must walk to avoid danger in sin.

1. "Word of God."—A term in the Bible used sometimes in reference to Jesus, sometimes it refers to the gospel, and at other times to the commandments of God in general. It here no doubt refers to the violation of God's commands to the children of Israel which they disobeyed, and hence could not enter the promised rest, then is stated the general principle that disobedience meets a quick and powerful rebuke; even looking at the thoughts that nourish disobedience.

2. "Spake as They were Moved."—Here we have the manner of inspiration. The Spirit of God or the Holy Spirit moved the prophets to speak. Inspiration seems to have given the idea and also the words to the prophets.

3. "All Scripture is given by Inspiration of God."—"All Scripture" is called "Holy Scripture" in the context.

4. "Written Aforetime."—This without doubt refers to the writings of the Law of Moses, the prophets and the Psalms, as at this time possibly very little if any of the New Testament had been written.

5. "Sanctity."—The state or quality of being sacred or holy, holiness; purity; godliness. Set apart for a purpose. "Sanctified by the word of God and prayer" (Tim. 4:5).

6. "It is Written."—Jesus has given us an example here which we do well to follow. He appeals to the written evidence. We may be sure of a doctrine when we can find a "thus saith the Lord" for it. Instead of giving opinions we should be able to give the place "where it is written."

Not live by bread alone.—We should feed upon God's word. It is the Spiritual bread (John 6:48-56).

8. "Seek Him with the Whole Heart."—Half service or service of God and mammon will not answer. We must give up all, and serve without reserve. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart," is the great commandment.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. What is the Bible?—Is the Bible a book or a bundle of books? How many books in the Old Testament? How many in the New Testament? How many books in the whole Bible? How many writers are represented? How does Jesus divide the Old Testament? Ans: The law, the prophets and the psalms. Is God the author of the Bible?

2. Given by Inspiration of God.—What is inspiration? Where are we told the Scriptures are inspired? ((2 Tim. 3:16; 2 Pet. 1:21; 1 Pet. 1:10-12: Ezek. 2:1-4. 7: Ex. 16:11; Joshua 1:1; Isa. 6:8, 9: Dan. 9:21-23: Hosea 1:1; Joel 1:1; Amos 3:1; 1 Thess. 4:15; Rev. 1:1.) Was the Holy Spirit given to any one before the day of Pentecost?

3. Power and Influence of the Bible.—What will the study of the Scriptures do for us? (2 Tim. 3:15.) Can we obtain a knowledge of God and Christ through the Bible? (John 5:39.) Can we find our duty in the Bible? Does the study and obedience of God's word make us better? How?

4. God's Word a Guide.—Recite the place in our lesson where this is taught. Read Prov. 1:4. and tell why the proverbs were written. Read Luke 1:76-79, and tell where we learn of Jesus and his plan of salvation, outside of the Bible.

5. Our Duty to Study it.—Where are we shown that it is our duty to study he Bible? (Jno. 5:39; Isa. 8:19. 20; 34:16; Acs 17:11.) What example has Paul left us of Scripture study? (Acts 28:23; 2 Pet. 1:19.)

6. A Blessing Promised.—Is there a blessing for those who study and take heed of God's word? (Ps. 119:1. 2; Rev. 1:3: Rev. 22:14: Ps. 1:1. 2.) How would you study the Bible? Can the Bible be understood? Are the different Bible subjects placed by themselves or scattered throughout the book? What errors sometimes creep in by not reading the pre-text and con-text? Is there any doctrine taught unless plainly stated? Are we allowed to draw inferences from disconnected passages? Do parables teach doctrines or illustrate them? Can children study the Scriptures with profit (2 Tim. 3:15.)

SISTER'S REPORT

On the afternoon of Thursday, August the third, the Sisters' Society of Cleveland met at the home of Sister Chappelle. In the absence of our president, Sister Huggins, the meeting was called to order by one appointed for the afternoon. The meeting was opened by the customary repeating of the Lord's Prayer.

The business of the afternoon showed that calls had been made on those who were ill and that sisterly letters of kindly greetings had been written and received. The roll call showed a presence of thirteen members and one visitor, the visitor being our young sister, Fred Blyth. Sister McKinley, who has been unable to actively take part because of illness was gladly welcomed among us again. Upon the completion of the business the meeting was spiritually uplifted by the following lesson, conducted by Sister Klingenstein.

At the close of the meeting we all repeated that wonderful verse in Phil. 4:8, and the meeting was closed with prayer by Sister Lang.

Our sister chose to speak if the dew, that beautiful force of nature whose very glittering drops can cling to the web which the rain only destroys.

The Dew

Dear Sisters: Dew is one of the quiet reviving forces on the earth. The Lord could have refreshed the earth in many other ways, but he has chosen to distil the dew upon each leaf and blade of grass thus forming a beautiful picture for one who will rise early enough in the day to behold it. Each tiny blade of grass seems decked with jewels, glistening in the sunshine. Did we ever stop to think, as we looked upon the innumerable dew drops, that each drop comes by the knowledge and direction of God? In that list of questions God asked Job which caused him to abhor himself and repent in dust and ashes (Job 42:6), we find the following, "Who hath begotten the drops of dew?" It is beyond the power of man to form one drop of dew. None but the Infinite God hath begotten those drops. Dew is taken to illustrate the special blessings of God. "God give thee of the dew of heaven" was the first sentence of Isaac's blessings upon Jacob. It was also mentioned in the blessings pronounced by Moses upon Joseph.

The dew is connected with some very striking incidents in Bibe history. During the forty years of wandering when the dew was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing as small as the hoar frost on the ground. And when the children of Israel saw it they said, one to another, "It is manna." In Judges we read when Gideon, that "mighty man of valor," asked a pledge from God for a victory, he requested that the fleece might be wet with dew, and all the earth dry. Gideon wrung a bowlful of water out of the fleece. He then, no doubt, remembered that it was natural for fleece to gather the dew so he asked that the fleece might be dry and all the earth wet with dew, and his request was granted.

Faith is a mighty thing when it lays hold of the arm of an Infinite God. It is a light thing for the God of Heaven who weighs the rain and has knowledge of each dewdrop, to cause the dew to form where he decrees, but it is wonderful that God will issue those decrees according to the request of man.

Elijah was a man subject of like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly, and that prayer locked heaven, not a drop of dew came upon the earth for three and a half years; and he prayed again, and the rain descended and the dew came upon the earth in answer to prayer (James 5:17, 18; 1 Kings 18:1; 1 Kings 18:41-42-45).

In Genesis we read how Jacob struggled with the angel of the Lord and persisted until he obtained the blessing from God. We are like trees of the Lord's planting. If we pray earnestly and without weariness, God will send the dews of heaven upon us and we shall grow and prosper; but if we faint through lack of faith and cease to call upon God, the dews of his grace will no longer fall upon us and we will wither away and our spirits will die within us.

There is no noise or tumult with the gentle dew, yet the tiny drops revive the drooping vegetation. God says, "I will be as the dew unto Israel." God can and will revive his people as the dew revives the vegetation. He will revive us through the power of his word. To the one who will harken to his word God says, "My speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass." The blessings given by the Lord to his people he expects us in turn to give to others. In Micah 5:7 we read, "And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people as a dew from the Lord, and as the shower upon the grass." In Zechariah 8:11 God says: "But now I will not be unto the residue of the people as in the former days, for the seed shall be prosperous, the vine shall give her fruit and the ground shall give her increase and the heaven shall give them dew, and I will cause the remnant of this people to possess all these things; and it shall come to pass as ye were a curse among the heathen, O house of Judah and house of Israel, so will I save you and so shall ye be a blessing. Fear not, but let your hands be strong."

And now, my dear sisters, let us also have our hands strong in the Lord and work for our Master while it is yet day, and do whatsoever our hands findeth to do with all our might. Let us be as the dew, bringing blessings and comforts wherever we go. Then, when the Savior shall make up his jewels, and the bright crowns of rejoicing are won, then shall his weary and faithful disciples all be remembered by what they have done.

MARY KLINGENSTEIN.

THE MEANING OF WORDS

God's law is expressed in the words found in the Bible. To get the exact import of the commands we must find the meaning of the words at the time the command was given. Human language is subject to constant change. While all words have a literal or base meaning we often derive another meaning by the use we make of them. Ordinarily this derived use or meaning is traceable to the base or true meaning, but sometimes the word has traveled so far that we lose sight of the literal meaning altogether. From this fact it will be seen that we cannot always determine the exact thought in God's law by the present current use made of Bible terms. Modern religious use may give Bible words an entirely different meaning to what they actually mean in the Bible. To accept the modern use as correct would be entirely wrong.

"Prevent"

For example the word "prevent," in 1 Thessalonians 4:15, literally means to go before or precede. When the common version was made three hundred years ago it was used in that sense; hence, correctly used in this passage. But now it means, or rather is used, in the sense, to hinder. Since one would go before another to hinder him, the change in this word came about easily. Still the original and true meaning is lost. To make it signify "hinder" in this passage would not be good sense. The Revised Version has therefore translated it "precede," which is the exact thought of the passage.

Baptism

The word "baptize" is another splendid example. When defined by standard, unabridged English dictionaries, it is said to be "the application of water to a person, as a sacrament, or religious ceremony," and is "performed by immersion, sprinkling or pouring." This is exactly what people now do and what they call baptism. It is the purpose of those who make dictionaries to define words as they are used at the time the book is made. While this is the present use made of the word baptize, it is not the use made of it at the time the New Testament was written. This is easily seen by a careful reading of the passages where the word occurs. The word is borrowed from the Greek language, being spelled out with English letters, but is a Greek word in spite of that fact. To find its true meaning, or what English word will correctly translate it, we must go to the Greek dictionaries, those that define the Greek terms at the time the New Testament was made. When this is done, they declare with one voice that it means dip or immerse. Standard English dictionaries before giving its present use will give its derivation from the Greek, and its literal meaning to dip. Since this word is Greek, and we must have its meaning at the time the New Testament was written in order to get God's will in the case, the matter is settled when we go to the proper source, and sprinkling and pouring are out of the question entirely. But if we ignore dictionaries entirely, and go straight to the passages where the word is found we reach the same conclusion. In fact, the definition found in Greek dictionaries is based upon the use of the word at that time. This is final, of course, with those who respect competent testimony.—Sel.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3:16, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26); the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 3[illegible]); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25), the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-5[illegible]); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16; Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17) and belief in the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13: 3), and obedience by baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1; 3:[illegible]); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31). THE "SOUL" ACCORDING TO SCRIPTURES

How does it compare with Orthodoxy?

The Hebrew word Nephesh (soul) occurs in 754 places in the Hebrew text of the old Testament Scriptures. In the Greek version of these scriptures, commonly called the Septuagint, it is translated. Psukee in 689 places. The Hebrew word Nephesh (soul) is translated in the most ancient Hebrew Lexicons and Latin Bibles by the word Aneina (life), and includes all beings that have life (hence they are called souls). Whether they be man or the lower animals, both being called Nephesh (soul) in the Hebrew scriptures, including all the faculties and powers of life in a living state. When applied to man it has reference to him as a person, his self, his body (living or dead), being called Nephesh (soul). It includes his breath, mind, and the spirit of his mind, as expressed in his thought, desires, will and pleasure, and in his acts.

In all these senses in the Old Testament Scriptures as the resultant of breath and blood in a living organism or body; the blood being called the Nephesh (soul) of man and of all flesh, and when breath and blood cease, there is the natural cessation of all life, and of every faculty and power of mind and body until a resurrection.

In the 754 places where the Hebrew word Nephesh (soul) occurs in the Old Testament; it is said in 326 places to be subject to death. In 203 out of these it is said to be in danger of death, and in the remaining 123 it is said to be delivered from death, implying its liability to death.

When therefore it was prophesied of the Messiah that "his soul" was to be made "an offering for sin;" that "his soul" was to be "poured out . . . unto death," that he was to "see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied," it was clearly implied that a reconcilation for sin could only be brought about through the death of soul and body, as typified by the sacrifices under the law; and therefore unless the soul were mortal, and capable of death, the foundation of the doctrine of the atonement would be destroyed, and that even by those who uphold it.

Here surely it proof of the divinity, or rather divine inspiration of the scriptures: A collection of the books written by men widely scattered as to point of time, and living under the most varied conditions, yet, contrast their unhesitating agreement and uniformity of expression regarding such a subject as the above, with the vague, indefinite opinions of the so-called leaders and teachers of to-day.

R. H. JUDD.

THE WORD

Tom: The subject of our lesson to-night is, "What will God's Word do for Those Who Believe and Obey It?" In 2 Tim. 3:16, 17 Paul says: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the Man of God may be perfect throughly furnished unto all good works."

Now, John, you see that Paul held that the word of God would prepare one for all good works. In that word you will find the pure doctrine as it flows from the great fountain of truth; there we find all the reproof that we need; there we find how to correct our lives, instruction in righteousness; and by following its teachings we shall reach perfection in the age to come.

John: Well, if the word will do all that, I don't see that we need any guide except the word.

Tom: No; we need no other guide. David says: Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path. The entrance of thy words giveth light; is giveth understanding unto the simple" (Psa. 119:105, 130). John declares that Christ is the light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, and that the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not" (Jno. 1:5-9). And in John 1:4 we find that life was light. So if we would have the light that brings life we must receive it through the word of God.

John: But how can a poor unclean mortal man ever reach the high standard set by God's word?

Tom: He can only do so through the word, which makes him wise unto salvation, and testifies of the Savior. "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you" (Jno. 15:3). "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth (word), through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently. Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever. But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you" (1 Pet. 1:22, 23, 25). By following the word we become clean and are born again (resurrected); and this through the word we reach perfection. Jesus says: "It is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. 4:4). Now, John, if we would live we must have every want that comes from God.

John: If our salvation depends upon our receiving the pure word of God, which Peter declares is preached unto us by the gospel, it seems to me that there is a great responsibility placed upon those who preach.

Tom: Yes. Paul says: But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." And John says: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds" (2 Jno. 10, 11).

John: It seems that those who assist the preacher in preaching "another gospel" will be held responsible as well as the preacher.

Tom: Yes; we should help those who are teaching God's word, but we should not in any way assist those who are proclaiming a false doctrine.

John: I see in 2 Tim. 4:1-4 that Paul charged Timothy to "Preach the word," and warns him that "the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap unto themselves teachers having itching ears, and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."

Tom: I am glad that we have a few ministers who are standing by the word and who are not afraid to teach it, and we ought to hold up their hands while they are proclaiming the gospel message; for we must believe the word if we would have Christ as our advocate. He says: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word" (Jno. 17: 20).

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word.
What more can he say than to you he hath said?"

J. H. ANDERSON.

AT HOME IN THE NARROW WAY; ILL AT EASE IN THE BROAD WAY

"Abstain from all appearance of evil" (1 Thess. 5:22). Do nothing; that is classed with evil. All sin is evil in the sight of God. "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. But exhort one another daily, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin" (Heb. 3:12). In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works. In fact, live such a life that no one will have any evil thing to say of you (Titus. 2:7, 8).

All unrighteousness is sin (1 John 5:17). Whatsoever is not of faith is sin (Rom. 14:23). He that doeth good is of God, but he that doeth evil hath not seen God (3 John 11). Paul exhorted the brethren to do nothing that would wound the weak conscience of a brother, for then ye sin against Christ (1 Cor. 8:10-13). Christ says: "Strive to enter in at the straight gate. Because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it" (Matt. 7:13, 14; Luke 13:24).

Does the narrow way lead to the dance hall, the card table, the saloon, the house of ill fame, theater, etc.? We think not. The narrow way leads to life eternal; and all these evils are in the broad way. If the dance hall is a sin, then dancing has the appearance of sin. If the public card table is a sin, then playing cards is a sin. If the saloon is a sin, then it is a sin to go there.

We read that David danced before the Lord with all his might, and David was God's servant. But when David danced he did not dance to music with his arm around his neighbor's wife. When the daughters of Shiloh danced, and men caught them for their wives, they were not dancing with men (Judges 21:21). The daughter of Herodias danced, and pleased Herod, and through the intrigue of her mother, was the cause of the beheading of John the Baptist. We have no account of Paul's going to any place of amusement; he did go by a river side where prayer was want to be made, and taught the ones there (Acts 16:13). A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches (Prov. 22:1). Evil communications corrupt good manners (1 Cor. 15:33). If we follow the advice of Paul we will not do things that offend the brethren. And Peter says, "Eschew evil, and do good" (1 Pet. 3:11). Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven (Matt. 5:16).

From the scriptural evidence above submitted, we could not feel at home at the dance, the card table, the saloon, the theater, nor with any assembly in the Broad Way.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE GOSPEL

No. 4

In my three preceding articles I traced the gospel from the time that Adam was given dominion until the call of Abram, showing that it was and still is Jehovah's purpose that the earth shall have a righteous ruler, and that the preaching of this gospel is to call out those who will assist this righteous ruler in filling the earth with the glory of the Lord.

When Adam failed Jehovah promised that the woman's seed should bruise the head of the serpent's seed. Since then men have been counted under the dominion of sin. It was God's purpose that men could change their relationship to the Deity by offering of a sacrifice through faith. In writing to the Hebrews (11:4) Paul says: "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh" (Marg. "is yet spoken of"). It is not the amount of service that one renders, but the character of the service. Without faith it is impossible to please God. Again, whatsoever is not of faith is sin. Faith cometh by hearing the word of Jehovah. It must have its beginning with the promise to the woman (Gen. 3:15). Without that promise the human family would have been like the animal creation—without the promise of a future. Solomon says of the sons of men. that they have (in death) no preeminence over the beasts. As one dieth so dieth the other. Yea they all have one breath (spirit). The gospel, or good news to the sons of God, is that they have the promise of a future life through a resurrection out from among the dead.

A few hundred years after the flood there seemed to be a falling away again. The race had again relapsed into idolatry. There was one character whom Jehovah knew would obey him. That one was Abram, the son of Terah. While living in Ur of the Chaldees Abram refused to engage in the religious worship of his father. For this cause Jehovah sent a messenger and said unto him: "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee. I will make of thee great nation, and I will bless thee and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing. I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee, and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:1-4). It is further recorded that Abram departed as the Lord had spoken unto him. He came into the land of Canaan. "The Lord appeared unto Abram and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land." Note that the promise was first to Abram, then to his seed. It is recorded that Abram builded an altar unto the Lord and called upon the name of the Lord (Young," preacheth in the name of the Lord").

It is to be noticed that God did not give the whole promise to Abram at once, but at different times and under different circumstances he increased this promise during his whole trial period. After that he and Lot separated the Lord said: "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, southward, eastward and westward: for all the land which thou seest to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered." Abram was directed to walk through the land in the length of it and in the bredth of it;" for I will give it unto thee." Three times the Lord has repeated this promise. The promise each time was the land of Canaan.

The duration was "for ever." "To thee will I give this land, and to thy seed forever." It is evident from the above and future proof that Abram could not inherit this land during his natural life. The promise was not only the land forever, but a future life that he might possess it forever. Again, the Lord promised him a numerous seed, which could not have been produced during his natural life. Stephen said (Acts 7:5): "God gave him (Abraham) none inheritance in it; no, not so much as to set his foot upon." Paul says, Heb. 11:9: "By faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise." When Sarah died it is written that "Abraham stood up from before his dead and spake unto the sons of Heth saying, I am a stranger and a sojourner with you: give me a possession of a burying place with you that I may bury my dead out of my sight." Abraham was unwilling to receive any portion of the land without a purchase price. He weighed to Ephron four hundred shekels of silver, current money with the merchants. Though Jehovah gave it to Abraham by promise, he was unwilling to accept as a gift so much as a burial place for himself and family. Abraham received a deed covering the whole of the land from the river of Egypt unto the great river Euphrates. The record of this deed may be found in Gen. 15:18. All nations who have ever held this land have been usurpers. It has passed under the dominion of the government of the past, but each have been dispossesed. It is now held by the Turk, but it will soon pass to the rightful owner, Jesus the Christ, and the seed of Abraham Then this land will blossom as the rose. This land will constitute the territory of the mustard seed kingdom, which will destroy all these kingdoms. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly, is our prayer.

"OCCUPY 'TILL I COME"

By S. Roxana Wince

"Occupy until I come!" That is the order that is trumpeted down to us from the lips of our king. "Keep on working! Do not desert my vineyard, the fields are white for the harvest." The call for reapers is heard on every hand. "O where are the reapers? O who will come, To gather the sheaves for the harvest home?" "Occupy until I come!" 'Keep on giving. Pour out your treasures, I have still lost sheep out on the mountains wild and bare;" "I gave, I gave my life for thee."

What hast thou given to me? "Occupy until I come!" "I will be with you even unto the end of the age. You know not the hour of my coming; let me find you at the post of duty. "Occupy until I come!" "Get that Linotype; I need it for my work. Hasten! The time is short. Men and women are perishing. Sacrifice everything—ease, pleasure, comfort and wealth, that the story of my grace may be told."

That is the way Jesus, seems to be talking to me, and I am working: marching on under his orders, for I feel sure that the day of his coming is near. To give up all is easy in view of that day. Then the "laid up treasures," will be given back; the ease, the pleasure, the comfort we have denied ourselves here, for Jesus, will be ours forever. "Occupy," dear brethren and sisters, "until he comes!"

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON LEAF

Lesson VI

Subject, The Gospel

Memory Text

"For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth: to the Jew first and also to the Greek" (Rom. 1:16).

1. "And the Scripture forseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed" (Gal. 3:8).

2. "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent and believe the gospel" (Mark 1:14, 15).

3. "And Jesus went about all Galilee teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people" (Matt. 4:23).

4. "And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick" (Luke 9:2).

5. "And they departed and went through the towns preaching the gospel, and healing the sick everywhere" (Luke 9:6):

6. "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come" (Matt. 24:14).

7. "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved: but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16: 15, 16).

8. "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word. Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria and preached Christ unto them" (Acts 8:4, 5).

9. "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women" (Acts 8:12).

10. "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel:

11. "Which is not another; but there be some that trouble you and would pervert the gospel of Christ.

12. "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

13. "As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed" (Gal. 1:6-9).

Practical Thoughts

God designs through the gospel to save men. Christ preached the gospel, hence it is called the gospel of Christ. He preached the good news of the coming kingdom, hence it is called the gospel of the kingdom. His disciples were sent out to preach the same gospel. Faith in the gospel of the kingdom—the gospel of Christ, is required, and baptism into his name and in his name, in order to salvation. There is but one gospel. One faith resulting from it, and one baptism. No other gospel will do. We must believe the gospel. This is God's plan and power of salvation. The prediction of Jews is that this gospel of the kingdom must reach all nations before it can be a witness against them if they reject it.

Notes on the Lesson

Not Ashamed.—The gospel is something to be proud of. It is a scheme worthy of God our Father.

Gospel of Christ.—It includes Christ in its message as through him alone can the kingdom be set up. He was anointed to preach it (Isa. 60:1).

Power of God.—God's means of saving men. There is a power in the gospel which transforms men's lives from wickedness to lives of sanctification and holiness, and will save them at last.

1. Preached to Abraham.—This same good news was announced to Abraham that the nations of the world would be blessed through Jesus.

2. Preaching.—Giving discourses. Teaching the people.

The Gospel of the Kingdom of God.—The good news of the coming kingdom. The government of God.

3. Synagogues.—Places where the Jews met for the reading of the scriptures on the Sabbath days.

Healing all Manner of Sickness.—Jesus not only forgave sins but he also healed sickness. He had compassion on the poor and distressed at all times.

4. He Sent Them to Preach the Kingdom of God.—To preach the kingdom of God is to preach the gospel, as we learn from the next verse, "And they departed and went through the towns preaching the gospel."

6. This Gospel of the Kingdom.—How definite these statements are! No other gospel could be meant than the one taught by Jesus when he first began his mission.

For a Witness.—This gospel will be a witness to us all, if we hear it and do not obey it, because, it is a savor of life unto life, or death unto death. Our responsibility begins with the light. Let us walk in the light.

7. Preach the Gospel to Every Creature.—Do not slight any, for life depends upon the issue.

Believeth and is Baptized.—Faith in the gospel must be exercised, and then follows obedience. No substitute will answer the demands of God. The obedience must be from the heart.

8. Preaching the Word.—To preach the word is to preach the gospel of the kingdom of God. (Compare Acts 10:36, 37 with Mark 1:14).

Preached Christ Unto Them.—The Apostles always connected the preaching of Christ with the kingdom of God (Acts 8:12, 28:23, 31). Through Jesus Christ the earth will be subdued by the reign of righteousness and peace.

10. Another Gospel.—Although the Apostle uses this phrase he immediately corrects it by saying, "Which is not another," but is a perversion of the gospel.

12. Accursed.—We ought to be careful not to preach another gospel, or preach anything that would pervert the gospel of our Lord Jesus the Christ.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. A Means of Salvation.—Why was not Paul ashamed of the gospel of Christ (Rom. 1:16)? In what sense is it the power of God unto salvation? What power resides in the gospel? What is meant by salvation? What are the conditions of salvation? Does it make any difference with God what we believe? Does it make any difference with God what we do?

2. What the Gospel Is.—What does the word "gospel" mean (Isa. 61:1; Luke 4:18)? If it is good news, what is the news about (Luke 9:2, 4)? How do you account for the two phrases, "Gospel of the Kingdom" and "Gospel of Christ," if there is but one gospel? Does the preaching of the kingdom include Christ as the king (Jno. 18:33-37)? Does the gospel include Christ's death and resurrection (1 Cor. 15:1-4)? Did Jesus preach the gospel of the kingdom after his resurrection (Acts 1:3)?

3. The Gospel of Christ and the Gospel of the Kingdom the Same.—Did Paul preach the gospel of Christ at Ephesus (Eph. 1:12, 13; 3:6)? Did he preach two gospels there (Acts 20:17, 25; Gal. 2:2)?

4. Faith in the Gospel Necessary.—How does faith come (Rom. 10:16, 17)? Is it necessary that we should have faith in the gospel? How many faiths are there (Eph. 4:5)? What does Jude say we should contend for (Jude 3)?

5. But One Gospel.—What gospel did Jesus preach (Matt. 4:23)? Did he ever preach any other gospel? What gospel did the Apostles preach while Jesus was on earth? What gospel were they commissioned to preach after his ascension? What does Paul say of those who preach any other gospel (Gal. 1:6-9)?

6. Faith in the Gospel Must Be Accompanied by a Godly Life.—Does faith always lead to repentance? Should it? What are to add to our faith (2 Pet. 1:5-9)? What is said of faith without works? To what does Jesus liken a man who hears his sayings yet refuses to do them (Matt. 7:26)?

7. The Gospel a Series of Promises.—What are some of the things promised in the gospel? 1, Remission of sins (Acts 10:43); 2, Salvation (Mark 16:15, 16; Acts 16:30, 31); 3, A blessing to the nations of the earth (Gal. 3:6-8); 4, An inheritance in the earth (Rom. 4:13; Matt. 5:5; Psa. 37:29, 34); 5, Position in the kingdom (Rev. 2:26; 3:21; Matt. 19:28); 6, Immortality (Rev. 2:10; Jas. 1:12; Jno. 6:40; Rom. 2:7; 2 Tim. 1:10; 1 Cor. 15:53, 54).

"ALONG THIS LINE"

The young minister's address was good. He gave expression to several stimulating ideas, and his manner had a proper combination of energy and gracefulness. But the effort was marred by the use of certain set phrases which were wholly unnecessary and necessarily offensive. He declared "I am here to say," as many as a dozen times in his opening paragraphs. No one doubted he was there, or that he was there to say just what he did say. Then why did he not say his say without repeatedly reminding us that this was his particular purpose in being present? But this was not so bad. This was; in exactly fourteen minutes the brother used the expression "Along this line," forty-three times. He first informed us that he had never spoken "along this line," but that more discussions "along this line," would be beneficial. Then he reminded us of the great men who had spoken "along this line," and declared that if more of our ministers would speak "along this line," there would be greater faithfulness in the church "along this line." If the church ever comes up to its high privilege "along this line," there must be more devotion "along this line." And so on.

We are sure the young brother was totally unconscious of the repetition, for we spoke to him kindly about it later in the day. He thanked us for calling his attention to a habit he had been wholly unconscious of, and his manifestations of gratitude is our excuse for calling his attention in this public way—without indicating name, date or locality—to the matter. Watch yourself, young preacher, the next time you speak in public, and make sure that you are not blundering "along this line."—Epworth Herald.

THE WICKED AND CHAFF

Psalms 1:4, 5

David compares the righteous to a tree with healthful leaves and golden fruit, growing on the banks of a river (Psa. 1:3). "Winds of doctrine" may blow tempestuously among these trees of the Lord's planting (Isa. 60:21; Eph. 4:14), but they are so "rooted and grounded in love" (Eph. 3:17) that they are the more "grounded and settled" by the storm; and, like the sturdy oak, the more the wind blows, the deeper into the earth their roots go, until they get so securely fixed they cannot be "moved away" from their place at all (Col. 1:23). The terrific "winds of doctrine" pluck up a few of them, it is true; but Jude tells us that they were "without fruit," and even those which had fruit on them were so nearly dead they had "withered." The trees blown down in a storm are generally [illegible]. Hence Jude says the apostate brethren [illegible] who had been "plucked up by the roots" had been unfruitful "two seasons," and were [illegible]. See the Emphatic Diaglott on Jude 12.

The wicked man has no "root in himself" (Matt. 13:21). Hence David, by one of the strongest and most striking contrasts in the Bible, puts the righteous and wicked in juxtaposition thus: The righteous have roots like trees, when growing on the river banks near water. The tree roots, "through the scent of water" (Job. 14:9), grow and become so firmly fixed in the earth. Windstorms cannot jostle it. "The ungodly are not so." They have no roots, and this fact led David to seek for another image to represent them. He soon found it in this world that is open to our inspection and comprehension. He condescended to our simplicity, and gave us an image to represent them which we can not fail to understand: They are "like the chaff which the wind driveth away." They are "like" chaff, as the reader will notice, in this particular, "which the wind driveth away." Chaff has no adhesion; it has no roots, and cannot fasten itself to the ground. Light and lying loosely on the earth, it is moved from place to place by the wind. The wicked are to be driven away like chaff is driven before the wind-storm (Job 21:18; Psa. 35:5; Isa. 17:13; 29:5; Hos. 13:3). "Therefore," David concludes, "the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous" (vs. 5). By reading verses four and five of this Psalm together, we get the full force of the word, "therefore." The ungodly are "like chaff" which the wind drives away. Therefore, the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment. By reading the two verses consecutively, we get the idea that the driving away of the ungodly "like chaff" is to occur at the judgment. This thought is on the surface of the text, and is intimated often in the Bible with marvelous simplicity. They are to be punished at the judgment, not when they die. They are not able to "stand" (Rev. 6:17) at the judgment like the "congregation of the righteous." What becomes of them, then? They are driven away "like chaff." "As the flame consumeth the chaff" (Isa. 5:24), so it will consume them. They are to "burn up" like chaff (Matt. 3:12). They are to be "devoured as stubble fully dry" (Nahum 1:10). Would a man with ordinary intellect take these images and illustrations of Scripture to teach eternal torment? If the wicked are to "burn up" like chaff, if they are to burn like "stubble full dry," can they roast in fire throughout eternity? Do you call eternal torment burning up a man "like chaff?" If stubble is "fully dry," would it burn like a man in "infinite despair?" Can a reasonable man get eternal torture out of these Bible images? No. The dogma of endless torment is a barefaced and impudent alteration of God's word.

DO YOU REMEMBER CHRIST?

A Plea for the Breaking of Bread

We know you cannot help thinking of Christ sometimes. His story is too extraordinary to be heard once and never again remembered. There is also much which we daily see and hear, to remind us of him. Doubtless you often involuntarily remember him; but do you voluntarily, and of choice, remember him? Do you ever, by an exercise of volition, recall the memory of him? He is sometimes intruded into the society of your thoughts, but do you ever invite him there? Do you ever say, "Come now, let me think of Christ?" We doubt not you do this also. You voluntarily remember—you call to mind his incarnation, his miracles of mercy, his doctrine, his example, his resurrection; but do you particularly remember his death? His death was the main circumstance in his history. Do your thoughts, passing from the manger along the track of his sorrowful story, fasten on the cross?

May we ask, moreover, with what you remember him? Whether it is a mere intellectual operation, or one in which the heart is conjoined? There are recollections which pass across the mind without ever stirring the most easily excited emotions of the heart. Is your recollection of Christ of this kind; or do you feel while you think of him? Do your affections move in the line of your thoughts, and collect about the same centre? Jesus ought to be remembered with the heart. We should feel when we think of him. You say, perhaps, "I do not only mentally, but cordially remember Christ." But do you remember him practically? Do you do any thing in remembrance of him? It is customary not only to remember, but to commemorate great benefactors; and that not merely by speaking of their benevolent exploits, but by some appropriate acts. Do you this with respect to Christ, that greatest, best of benefactors?

Perhaps you answer, "I do many things out of regard to the memory of Christ. His precepts generally I endeavor to obey." That is all very well; but do you that which he appointed, or requested to be done in remembrance of him, on that "same night in which he was betrayed?" Some do not. Even some who profess respect, and indeed love for Christ, do not. It is strange, but so it is. They remember Christ in their own way, but not in his way. They do some things in remembrance of him, but not that which he said "DO." We wonder they do not adopt his way. We cannot help suspecting their love when we see they do not. It always appeared to us that such a benefactor as Christ ought to be remembered in his own way—that he deserved to have the privilege of saying how he would be remembered; and that sinners, whom he died to save, should remember him in that way, even though it should not seem to them the most appropriate and reasonable manner of commemorating him. We do not know how it strikes others, but so it always struck us; and we confess we take the bread and eat it, and we put the cup to our lips, primarily, because he said, "Do this."

The question about the usefulness of visible memorials, and the suitableness of these memorials, we are content that he should settle. We know very well that if there be no natural adaptation in these memorials to do us good, he can connect a blessing with them. It is our part to obey him. It is enough for us that our Savior inclined to this mode of being remembered, and expressed such a wish: the least we can do is to comply with it. He did not express a great many wishes. It is an easy yoke he calls us to take—a light burden to bear. We cannot help regarding it as unkind, that this one wish of Jesus should not be complied with; and especially when we consider what a friend he was—what a benefactor. We use the word "benefactor," but those who are acquainted with the etymology of the word, know it does not express all that Christ was. It implies doing out of good will to others; but his benevolence was not satisfied with benefaction: he suffered— he died for others. Strong as death—stronger than death was his love. And consider, too, the circumstances under which this wish was expressed —when it was, and where. All his wishes, we think, should be complied with; but this was his last. He was going to suffer—he was to die in a few hours: and such a death, too! and for them of whom he made the request, that they might die never. And the request was touching his death. He desired it might be commemorated as he signified. Oh, to think that such a wish should not be complied with—the tender request of the dying Redeemer not regarded! Who would have believed it? We wonder those words, "This is my body, broken for you," do not break the heart of every one who refuses.

Men treat no other being so. Out of their own mouths we will judge them. They know the sacred regard they pay to last wishes and dying injunctions; and that, though they are under no particular obligations to the persons expressing them, and though the things desired be often unreasonable, yet, because they are last wishes, dying requests, the individuals expresing them being about to make the awful transition to eternity, how solemnly they charge the memory with them—how punctiliously they comply with them! We feel as if persons in such circumstances had a right to command us. We never knew one such request, if it was practicable, and at all reasonable, that was not complied with. We ought to say, we never knew but one. The last request of Jesus Christ—his last solemn injunction on those whom he bled to save, forms the solitary exception! Oh, it is too bad! It were a neglect unpardonable, but for the mediation of the very being who is the object of it. Nothing but his blood can cleanse from the sin of putting away from us the offered emblem of it. We know not how to make any apology for it. Jesus pleaded for his murderers, that they knew not what they did; but those who disregard his dying injunction, know what they do!

Excuses, it is true, they make; but to what do they amount? Can any doubt that Christ said, "Do this?" Can any doubt that he meant it to be done by all who believe on him? What reason can be imagined why one redeemed sinner should partake of the emblems of the body and blood of Christ, which does not equally apply to every redeemed sinner? Should not as many as the body was broken and the blood shed for, partake of the memorials of that transaction? What propriety is there in limiting the command, "Do this," and not the declaration, "This is my body, broken for you?" If we put it on the ground of right to command, questions any one the right of Christ to issue mandates? What duty plainer—more peremptory? Do some pay respect to this, who do not obey other commands of Christ? What if it be so? Is that a reason why you should add another to your acts of disobedience?

Do you refrain because it is a solemn transaction? Far more solemn are death, judgment, and eternity, from which, nevertheless, you cannot refrain. Do you feel yourself to be too unworthy? But will this neglect make you less unworthy? A sense of unworthiness is a grand part of the qualification. Are you afraid of sinning, should you in this way remember Christ? But you are certain of sinning by not remembering him. Say you, "I cannot trust myself?" But can you not trust Christ? If there is danger that you will prove faithless, is there any danger that he will? It is because you are not to be trusted, that you should trust him who is able to keep that which is committed to him. If you trust him for strength, you are as sure of being supplied as of being pardoned, if you trust him for that. Why should not you remember Christ? He remembers you, yes, practically remembers you; nor one thing merely does in remembrance of you, but many. What if he should make excuses for not remembering you?

But perhaps you will cut short the interview by say, "I am now quite unprepared for this act; hereafter, I mean to attend to it." Be it known to you, then, that there are greater things for which you are unprepared, and they are things which you cannot evade or defer, as you can this; and as to that hereafter on which you count, who art thou that boastest of to-morrow?

COMMUNICATIONS

From Hanna M. Barber

Dear Brother Haggins:

Enclosed find order for $1.50 to renew my subscription to the paper. I am a little early, but it is better to be early in such matters than late I see sometimes where you have to urge the brethren to send in their money, as you are in need of it. Now this should not be. They are commanded to be fervent in business, and we should attend promptly to such matters. The time is short in which we may work, so let us have our work done when the call comes to go out and meet the bridegroom.

There is one thing I would like to speak of. I often read where some of the brethren will say, "We have had brother here holding meetings. Good interest," etc., but they do not say where these meetings were. I wish more of the brethren would give their addresses through the paper, as we may live near together sometimes and not know it. I am in Manitou Springs, Colo., and know of no one near here of the faith. I never attend the churches here, as they all teach the serpent's lie. They fail to see that there was no need for Christ to suffer and die for us, if we are naturally immortal and cannot die. They seem to think we get our immortality from God, instead of through Christ. When we die we are not dead. As a popular Denver preacher says, "Death is just a seperation." So people who do not know that death is the opposite to life, do not know the gospel. They do not believe Christ died, and if he did not die he was not raised and the apostle says if Christ be not risen, our hope is in vain. I am waiting to hear something about the new hymn books. Hope Brother Adams will see that they are out soon. We need them. Let us so live that we may be clothed with immortality when the Lord comes.

Yours in hope of life.

BETTER THAN SILENCE

An old Greek writer years ago counseled his followers either to be silent or say something better than silence. Some people seem under the impression that talk of any sort is to be preferred to silence. A little reflection will prove this to be a mistake.

A group of young people not long ago were engaged in conversation quite oblivious to a listener who sat near. Could he have heard their laughter and not their speech, he would have assumed that the latter was brilliantly witly. As it was, he realized that it was only ill-natured. Each of those who took part held some absentee up to redicule, and the more spiteful the comment offered, the greater the amusement of the little group. Who can doubt that those young folks were violating the precept of Pythagoras. If they had sat in absolute, unsympathetic silence, if would have been far better than speech of this sort.

Scolding is one of the commonest ways of disregarding the old Greek rule. It is true of course, that reproof is some times necessary, and even severity has its proper place, but scolding is not only useless, but is a positive harm. Even if it were only a question of correcting the wrong objected to, a dignified silence would be vastely more effective than ill-natured snarling, by the name of "scolding."

The people who complain violate the rule which bids us keep silent unless we have something better to say than silence. Talking about our troubles does not lessen them. It only undermines our power of resistance. In vain the sun shines, and in vain the flowers bloom, for those whose hearts are set on airing their grievances. Complaining people make grey weather for all who are forced to listen.

Keep silent unless what you have to say is better than silence. Test your speech for a little by this rule, and if it results in making you less voluable, then usual, so much the better for you and all the world.—Selected by W. James Storjohn.

TO THE ISOLATED

We have a nice sum in our treasury with which we can commence our work any time now. But in order to keep this organization on the move we must not forget the Isolated Fund.

We know you have not lost interest in this great work. But let us urge you to send what you can now, and not wait for what seems a more auspicious occasion, or until you can send a larger amount. Remember the smaller contributions of many are just as necessary as the larger gifts of the individual to make a complete and beautiful whole.

As soon as work is done the same will be reported through The Restitution.

TITLES AND MORE TITLES

The question of titles for names, their character and number, is getting to be confusing, and in some respects rather wearying. Some prefer "Rev." before the name, some "Eld.," and many are glad of almost anything to put after the name. The difference of opinion as to what may be proper and worth while, and over what may not be worth while at all, may be preparing us for closer sympathy with the position of the great Teacher. He swept the whole system aside, and asked his followers not to receive honor one of another, or be masters, but to cultivate simplicity and humility, and be "brethren." Our feeling is that the whole round system of titles is greatly overdone, whether in handles before names, or after names. It takes far more than "Rev." or Eld." to make a preacher, and any title after a name cannot be relied on to make a good penman, a good spelled of grammarian, or a good theologian.

In view of titles that should stand for sound scholarship and research, but that are often so cheap in very doubtful markets, we are not surprised that men in higher educational circles are sailing under bare names to-day with titles eliminated. On the morning of the writing of these lines, our mail brought a pamphlet from the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. It was an address by Nicholas Murray Butler, and though the author is head of one of our greatest universities, his name was given without title of any kind. In view of the tiresome parade of titles to-day, this example was refreshing.

A similar expression of this growing sentiment that speaks in both modesty and rebuke, comes in another experience. One of our best known laymen in writing of this question says:

"I have thought it might be well for our preachers to use the same considerations we do in our teachers' associations. Literary titles are almost wholly discarded in our programs. When I was president of our Maine Teachers' Association the executive committee voted to have no titles in the printed programs, and it met with good sanction by the profession. Modest mention of the position the speaker held as a teacher was made, and that only. All were pleased with that."

Who would think of putting on titles to such names as George Washington, Abraham Lincoln or Phillips Brooks? It would be like painting gold eagles. It may be that we need to come still closer to the Master's teaching on the general question.—F. L. Piper in World's Crisis.

THE NUMBER OF HIS NAME

"Here is wisdom," are the first words of Rev. 13:18. As much as to say, Here is something that requires more than ordinary sagacity and skill. How then shall we set to work to discover the answer to this problem? The usual way to interpret this number has been to resort to the pagan method of numbering the names of their gods. The numerical value of Thouth was 1218, of Jupiter 717, and so on. So scholars have looked for some name whose numerical value would be 666. This they have found in Lateinos; Vicarius Filu Dei; and Divinus Infallibilis Papa, which proves it is the papacy. Others have found 666, in Muhammadinoi, which proves it is Mohammedanism. Others have found this number in the Hebrew for Luther, which proves the awfulness of Protestantism. This all comes from going to heathen priests for the key to interpret God's Word. Does not God call upon us to exercise the wisdom which cometh from on high? Why then such regard for the wisdom that cometh from below?

Let us calmly and cautiously look into this last verse of the chapter and see what we can find. "Let him that hath understanding." We are on sacred ground; God's "woe" is out against him who lightly adds to, or takes from this verse. We must therefore carefully and diligently apply ourselves to "count the number of the beast." How shall we "count?" The Greek word translated "count," is not here used as in Acts 19:19, but means nearly the same as in Luke 14:28, to "compute for exact value." This suggests that metonomy is used in the number; and the number shows that it is metonomy in its sixth sense—"the sign and the thing signified" (Stand. Dict.). Had this number been one for numerical value only, the Greek would have corresponded to the English. It reads in the English: "Six hundred threescore and six;" therefore the Greek should read, "Hexakosion hexakenta hex." But the Greek text does not read so. Contrary to the usual custom this particular number is expressed in alphabetical numerals; and I am unable to find another such occurrence in the New Testament. Everywhere else cardinal, or ordinal numerals are used. This fact alone should lead us to throw our old theories to the winds, and seek for a better understanding of this subject.

First then, what are the letters used to represent these figures? Several writers have given them as Ch, X, St But there is no such letter as St. in the Greek alphabet, and I fail to find any evidence that St. ever stood for the numeral 6. Diagamma was the original letter, and was never St. The very form of the letter would forbid that. Gigamma was a letter in use in the early Greek language, but discarded about the time of Homer. It was the sixth letter of the alphabet, and had the value and sound of the Hebrew van. Digamma was the original letter from which our F came. To put the Greek letters which stand for 666, into English letters as near as possible, would be to write them Ch, X, F.

Second, "the sign and the thing signified." In prophecy "name" is usually interpreted as standing for "distinguishing characteristic" or "official designation" (Ruth 1:20; Matt. 1:21). It is also the "term by which a thing is distinguished as peculiar and distinct from others." What was the distinguishing feature of the Roman-Christian Papacy? It was its mark of distinction which separated it from all other religions. Contantine's mysterious monogram of the cross soon developed into the crucifix (the cross I fix). This is a cross with the effigy of Christ nailed upon it, and always stands in the center of the high altar in every well-appointed Roman Catholic Church The cross of the papacy is a cross on which is fastened a dead Christ. The anti-Christ has no use for a free and living Christ. We now turn back to the letters Ch, X, F, and find that Ch is a monogram, and that the other two are phonetic hieroglyphics.

In John's day (A.D. 96), Ch had been used some time by the early Christians as the monogram for Christ. The letter X was the symbol of a cross, and the Greek letter for F was the original symbol for a nail (see Phonician and Semitic symbols). So if we would read the secret to be found in these letter-numerals, we shall read as follows: Ch—"Christ;" X—"the cross;" F—"nailed." In English, "Christ nailed to the cross." This is the "number" (exact value) of the "name" (distinguishing feature), work and calling of this double, wild beast, anti-Christ. But his work is ending, and the true Christ is coming. Let us be ready to welcome our victorious King.—H. H. Brown, Berry Mills, Me., in World Crisis.

DO YOU PAY FOR A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER

I was going to ask the question in another form. "Do you read a religious newspaper?" but then I reflected that many read a religious newspaper who do not themselves subscribe for one, they being in the habit of borrowing from their neighbors, and after sending and respectfully soliciting the loan of the paper before the family have read it, not unfrequently keeping it a length of time greater than the Golden Rule will exactly justify

Then I had like to have thrown the question into this shape: "Do you subscribe for a religious newspaper?" but it struck me all at once, that some subscribe for a paper, but do not pay for it. I have heard this complaint made, and I have no doubt there is foundation enough for it. I, for my part, would advise such persons to take a moral newspaper, if they can find such a thing. That is the sort of paper they require. A religious newspaper is quite too far advanced for them. I don't know, and cannot conceive why these non-payers want to read a religious newspaper. I should suppose they would be satisfied with secular newspapers. I can imagine that they may desire, notwithstanding their delinquency, to know what is going on in the world, but why they should care to know what is going on in the church, I cannot conjecture. What do those who do not give anything for value received, want to know about the work of the truth?

Here are persons who would starve editors, publishers, printers, and papermakers—the whole concern—into a pre mature grave!—who say, "Send me your paper," implying of course that they will send the money in return, yet never send it; and yet they want to know all about the progress that is being made in converting souls to God! I not this strange, that having never learned as yet to practice the first and easiest lesson of honesty, they should wish to read everything about godliness and vital piety! So I concluded to head the article, "Do you pay for a religious newspaper?"

Do you, reader? If you do, continue to take and read, and pay for it; and be slow to withdraw your subscription. Give up many things before you give up your religious newspaper. If anyone that ought to take such a paper, does not, I hope that someone to whom the circumstance is known, will volunteer the loan of this to him, direct his attention particularly to this article. Who is he? A professor of religion? It cannot be. A professor of religion and not taking a religious newspaper! A member of the Church of God, and voluntarily without the means of information as to what is going on in the church! A follower of Christ, praying daily as taught by his Master, "Thy kingdom come," and yet not knowing nor caring to know who learns the gospel of the kingdom. Here is one of those to whom Christ said, "Go teach all nations; he bears a part of the great responsibility, and yet, so far from doing anything himself, he does not even know what others are doing in promoting this great enterprise! I am afraid this professor of religion does not love "the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob." Ah, he forgets thee, O Jerusalem!

But I must not fail to ask if this person takes a secular newspaper. Oh, certainly he does. He must know what is going on in the world; and how else is he to know it? It is pretty clear then that he takes a deeper interest in the world than he does in the church; and this being the case, it is not difficult to say where his heart is. He pays perhaps eight or ten dollars for a secular paper—a paper that tells him about the world, but for one that records Zion's conflicts and victories, he is unwilling to pay two or three! How can a professor of religion answer for this discrimination in favor of the world? how defend himself against the charge it involves? He cannot do it: and he had better not try, but go or write immediately and subscribe for some good religious paper; and to be certain of paying for it, let him pay in advance. There is a satisfaction when one is reading an interesting paper, to reflect that it is paid for. But perhaps you take a paper, and are in arrears for it. Now suppose you were the publisher, and the publisher was one of your subscribers, and he was in arrears to you, what would you think he ought to do in that case? I just ask the question. I don't care about an answer.—From "Practical Thoughts."

Which shall it be: Recede, proceed, succeed, or go to seed?—Sel.

I am not what I think I am, but what I think, I am.—Sel.

PULPIT ECHOES

A Sermon by Robt. G. Huggins, Reported by Geo. B. Alldridge

Subject: The curse upon the serpent.

Text: "And the Lord God said unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, thou are cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life; and I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his head" (Gen. 3:14, 15).

In reading the third chapter of Genesis, we are reminded of this fact, that it is part of the most ancient literature known to man. Three characters are presented to our attention: the serpent, Adam and his wife, Eve. In our day, apparently the almost universal opinion and teaching is, that the serpent is not real, but allegorical. If the serpent is not real, as presented in the narrative, neither is Adam, Eve, sin, the serpent crawling on its belly, child-bearing, thorns, thistles, etc.

When we read the great Allegorical work of John Bunyan, it never enters our mind to consider "Bye Past Meadow," "Giant Despair," "Doubting Castle" or the "Slough of Despond" are real. We know the book is an allegory, and consider it as such. A book that is fictitious in character we treat as a book of fiction. When we read the Bible we must consider it, as God wishes us so to do, as recording the history of real characters and things.

Wm. R. Nicholson in "The Homilitical Review," Vol. 22, page 225, commenting upon these verses, says: "The devil was in the serpent, and he it was who spake and reasoned with the serpent's mouth," etc. This teaching suggest that the serpent was dominated by another power. When we consider Gen. 3:1, 2 we learn that God had created the serpent, and had endowed it with greater subtility than any other beast of the field. Paul confirms Moses description in 2 Cor. 11:13: "But I fear lest by any means, as the serpent be guiled Eve through subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." This beast called "The Serpent," had the power of speech and was able to converse with Eve. An ass upon one occasion conversed with Balaam, the son of Boser (Num. 22:27, 28; 2 Pet. 2:15, 16).

The Curse Pronounced By God Upon the Serpent Had the Effect of Actually Degrading it in the Scale of Its Being

First, a change of its disposition. God said (Gen. 3:15), "I will put enmity between thee and the woman." In Gen. 1:25, 28, 31 we learn that God created beasts, cattle, and every thing that creepeth, etc. Over these he gave man dominion. "And God saw everything that he had made and behold, it was very good." "Everything," of course, included the serpent. The effect of enmity changed its disposition.

Secondly, in form and structure. As Cain among men, so the serpent among animals, was signally marked of God (Gen. 3:14, 15; 4:14, 15). Each living thing possesses distinguishing natural traits of being (Gen. 6:20).

Thirdly, the loss of beauty. The word "serpent" here used really means seraphim, that which appears as brilliant, fiery. See Num. 21:6, 8; Isa. 6:2, 6. This glorious, angelic appearance of beauty it lost.

The Effect of the Curse of the Serpent Upon the Earth Involved

1. The ground (Gen. 3:17; Rom. 8.22).
2. The air (Gen. 3:7, 8). The air up to this time was salubrious, but now chills and frosts are in the air. Man needs clothing to protect him.
3. Vegetation (Gen. 3:18).
4. The animals (Gen. 3:14).

The Curse of the Serpent had the Following Effects Upon Man

1. Physical degeneration (Gen. 3:19): "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

2. Intellectual degeneration (Gen. 2.19). Adam before this was able to name every creature God had made. The intellectual attainment of the greatest professor of zoology, or biology in any center of learning cannot perform this remarkable feat to-day.

3. Moral degeneration (Gen. 2:25; 3:8-10). The consciousness of their nakedness made them moral cowards. They became afraid, and hid themselves from the presence of God. And now in conclusion, let us briefly glance at

Some Lessons Taught by the Curse of the Serpent

1. It illustrated the deteriorating effect of man's sin upon creation (Rom. 8:18-22). This degeneration is universal. Evolution teaches that man has been evolving upwards to honor and dignity from a frog.

The second lesson we learn is the depth of the serpent's degeneration is suggestive of how far man himself has fallen, not ascended as evolution teaches (Gen. 3:14).

3. The serpent's curse demonstrates the judicial aspect of punishment. Universalism teaches that if man becomes a thief, or commits a murder, the lashings of his conscience is sufficient punishment. Why then, does our legislative bodies make and enforce laws for the shutting up of culprits who violate them if "the lashing of conscience" is sufficient punishment? Paul reasons in his epistle to Timothy that men may become so hardened in sin that their conscience will become dead "seared with a hot iron" (1 Tim. 4:1-3). God does not view sin in the same light that the Universalist does. God, as a punishment upon the serpent, even reversed the laws of the serpent's creation, as already noted in changing its form, food, disposition, etc.

4. The serpent's curse illuminates our need of a Savior (Gen. 3:15; Gal. 3:13). "Forasmuch then as the children are partaker of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death, he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil" (Heb. 2:14).

Lastly, the serpent's curse illuminates the meaning of those scriptures which speak of the final reversal of the curse. "Whom the heaven must retain until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began" (Acts 3:21). Mr. Russell and his blind followers, in reading this text, lay emphasis on "restitution of all things." But notice the "all things" are the things which God "hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets." All commentators agree that "restitution" as here used, means the culmination, the fulfillment, the completing of all that has been predicted by God's holy prophets. Hosea, the prophet, makes this plain. God says that he will make a covenant with the beasts of the field, etc. The serpent's curse resting upon them is to be removed (Hosea 2:18:19). Isa. 11 chapter reveals the fact that God will in that day remove the enmity between animals; they will lie down in peace together. How? By changing their food and disposition. Note Isa. 11:6-9. It is a physiological fact that our food to a large extent determines our habits and disposition. In Isa. 65:17 God says, "I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered nor come into mind." See also Rev. 21:1-4. What is the deadly venom that dwells in the heart of man causing sorrow and death? Listen: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed" (Gen. 3:15). God proposes to destroy this sting, this deadly venom—sin. A wonderful change it will be. Paul in vision saw this (2 Cor. 12:1-4). Hence he could write: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 15:55, 56, 57).

Now beloved, read Isa. 65: 17-25. Notice what God is soon to bring about. But to remind man of his fall and degradation, the serpent, even in the age of restitution, shall remain degraded in form, a footless creature, a lingering echo of man's fall (Isa. 65:25).

"Thus shall we best proclaim abroad
The honors of our Maker, God,
When his salvation reigns within,
And grace subdued the power of sin."

Lesson VII

Subject, The Kingdom of God

Memory Text

"But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matt. 6:33).

1. "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it shall stand forever" (Dan. 2:44).

2. "Forasmuch as thou saweth that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver and the gold, the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter, and the dream is certain and the interpretation thereof sure" (Dan. 2:45).

3. "I saw in the night visions, and behold one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him.

4. "And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed" (Dan. 7:13, 14).

5. "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most high, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. 7:27).

6. "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations.

7. "And I appoint unto you a kingdom as my Father hath appointed unto me.

8. "That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Luke 22:28-30).

8. "When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?

9. "And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power" (Acts 1:6,7).

10. "Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, (from above) he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3).

Practical Truths

In our last lesson we studied the gospel of the kingdom; and in this we want to learn something about the kingdom itself. Our maps do not at present show that any portion of the earth is occupied by, and known as "the kingdom of God." It follows therefore that either the kingdom of God is not a literal kingdom, or else that it has not yet been set up. The study of the kingdom is important as all God's children are to inherit it, and share in its glories (Matt. 25:34). God proposes to institute a system of good government among men, and enforce the principles of his laws through an organized kingdom, and thus bless all nations.

Notes on the Lesson

Seek Ye First.—We ought to learn that which is important first. What is of more importance to us than our eternal home and God's way of reaching it? We must seek his righteousness if we ever want to reach the kingdom of God.

1. Days of These Kings.—It may not be clear which kings are referred to—the four already mentioned, represented by the four sections of the image, or the subdivision into ten kingdoms represented possibly by the toes of the image or the ten horns of the beast of Dan. 7:24. In either case the kingdom will be set up near the close of the time represented by the whole image.

Set Up.—To organize, to establish.

2. The Stone.—All commentators and Bible scholars of any note are agreed on this, if on nothing else, viz: that the stone represents the kingdom of God.

Brake in Pieces.—Subdued, conquered, changed their form of government and extended the Divine kingdom so as to take their places.

3. Saw in the Night Visions.—Daniel seems to have been favored with a view, prophetically, of the coming of our Lord, and the establishing of his kingdom. This cannot by any force of construction be applied to death, but to a personal, visible coming of the Lord Jesus back to our earth.

Came with the Clouds of Heaven.—It seems from this and other portions of scripture that clouds will attend his coming (Matt. 24:30; Mark 13:26; Rev. 1:7).

4. There was given Him Dominion and Glory and a Kingdom.—From this expression it is evident, that Jesus does not receive his kingdom until he comes in power and glory (Matt. 25:31).

5. Shall be Given to the People of the Saints.—The saints are joint heirs with Jesus, and he shares his kingdom with his people.

8. Sit on Thrones.—Exercise the power of kings or rules. This position is not only promised to the twelve, but to all who will believe and obey the gospel of the kingdom and live in harmony with its teachings, previous to the second coming of the Lord. They will be a royal priesthood. Not only kings but priests also. They will be the bride and share special honors and privileges with their Divine Lord. His directions to us are full of hope and courage—"Behold, I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast that no man take thy crown."

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. Primary Elements.—Will the kingdom of God be like all other kingdoms in its main features? Will it have a king, subjects, law, territory, etc.? Name what you regard as the elements of the kingdom. Will it be a real kingdom? Is a spiritual kingdom a literal kingdom?

2. Moral Elements.—What elements does the kingdom of God possess which are not possessed by the kingdoms of the world? Will righteousness be a feature of God's kingdom (Rom. 14:17; Pas. 72:2)? Will the Lord take care of the poor (Psa. 72:4, 12)? Will the kingdom of God be a model government?

3. Its Ruler.—Who will be the ruler or king? Will Jesus reign alone (Matt. 19:28; Rev. 3:21; 20:4)? Where in our lesson do we learn that the kingdom is also shared with the saints? Is the kingdom which Jesus is to receive, the same kingdom which the disciples are promised (Luke 1:32; Matt. 19:28; Acts 1:6)?

4. Its Subjects.—Will all the subjects of God's kingdom be righteous? Who will be the subjects? Who are to obey Jesus and serve him, according to our lesson? Read Isa. 2:2-4 and tell whether it refers to the reign of Jesus after he comes? What distinction is made between the ruler and the subjects of the kingdom?

5. When Established.—When will the kingdom be set up? When will it be given to Jesus? (See Nos. 3 and 4 of lesson.) Is it possible to set up the kingdom in the heart of man? Was it set up at Pentecost?

6. Its Nature and Duration.—Where in this lesson are we taught the eternal duration of the kingdom? (See 1, 4, 5 of lesson.) What object has God in view in setting up a kingdom on the earth? Will the kingdom be the instrument of fulfilling God's promise to Abraham, to bless all the nations of the earth? Do you think the kingdom will always exist? Give the proof.

7. Conditions of Heirship, or Inheritance.—1. We must be children of God (Rom. 8:16, 17; Gal. 4:7); 2, we must believe and be baptized (Gal. 3:26-29); 3, we must be changed—born from above (See 10, lesson).

THE EVOLUTION OF THE GOSPEL

No. 5.

As Jehovah has hidden the pearls in the bottom of the ocean, and the gold and silver and the diamonds in the heart of the earth, so has he hidden the truths of the gospel in the spirit of his word. It is written that, the testimony of (or concerning) Jesus is the spirit of prophecy. As it requires diligence and labor to procure the precious things of this life, so must we have courage and diligence to glean and treasure up the glad tidings of the gospel of the kingdom of God.

We shall find in the life of Abraham, the father of us all, many useful lessons. We must not forget that he was left to choose his own way. At times he exhibited the weakness of the flesh. Again, we find him obeying the Lord, doubting nothing. His anxiety at times led him to doubt whether the Lord would fulfill his covenant. It is written that after Abram had returned from the defeat of the kings, that the Lord appeared to him in a vision saying, "Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield and thy exceeding great reward." The promise previous to this was that he was to be the father of a seed or son, who should possess the land. He was growing old and was childless, so he suggests that the stewart of his house, Eliezer of Damascus, might be counted as that seed. Up to this time there seems to be no hint as to how this seed should come, save through the natural way of generation. The Lord here tells him that he should be the father of this seed. But he who shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir. The Lord again calls his attention to the promise of a multitudinous seed, as well as the unit seed.

It is here recorded that Abram believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness. Again, the Lord says: "I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land to inherit it." How often are we reminded that Abram and his seed were promised the land of Canaan as an everlasting inheritance. Abram now desires a pledge of the Lord He said, "Lord God, whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?" Rather a strange request, but we must remember that nothing visible had taken place. The Lord said: "Take me, a heifer of three years old, and a she goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtle dove and a young pigeon." Abram took unto him all these, and divided them in the midst, and laid each piece one against another, but the birds divided he not. With his request came to Abram a trial. The fowls came to devour the sacrifice, so he was compelled to drive them away. How long he watched is not plainly stated. However, until the sun had gone down, when an horror of great darkness fell upon him. In this horror of great darkness Abram was informed that he should go to his father in peace, "thou shalt be buried in a good old age." He also beheld a smoking furnace and a burning lamp that passed between those pieces. After the darkness came the smoking furnace and the lamp (Mag. a lamp of fire). The lamp of fire is emblematic of the future life. This incident revealed to Abram the long sleep of death, after which light and life. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will be found in the kingdom of God.

Another historical event was revealed to him that his seed should be a stranger in a land not theirs, but after a reriod of time they would be brought out of that land and possess the land. "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt, unto the great river Euphrates." Heretofore the promise was, "I will give it." Now the promise is strengthened by, "I have given it." This promise is verified by the smoking furnace and the lamp of fire. Each incident in the life of Abram has for the student of the Bible a valuable lesson. There is no stronger Bible character than the patriarch Abram. He is introduced to us first as a character whom Jehovah trusted and purposed to make the father of that seed that will bless all nations. With all his better qualities he needed to be tried. He was taken from a land of pleasure and plenty and called to a country, inhabited by races that neither knew Jehovah, nor worshiped him. It is also recorded that there was a famine in the land. Yet Abram built an altar and called upon the name of the Lord.

SEEKING THE TRUTH

John: Tom, I heard a preacher say that the soul is immortal, and at the death of the body goes to either heaven, a place of happiness, or hell, a place of torment; and for proof he referred to the Rich Man and Lazar . He said Lazarus was in heaven now, and that the Rich Man was in hell begging for a drop of water to cool his tongue.

Tom: Sometime, the Lord willing, will take up the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, but as the nature of man is the foundation question, and one that must be understood in order to understand the Bible; for if the soul is immortal, then it must exist somewhere after the body dies. And this leads up to the theory of going to either heaven or hell at death: therefore I propose that we take up the nature of man, and find out what the Bible says about it.

In Psa. 8:4 and Heb. 2:6-8 we have the question, "What is man?" and the answer that he is lower than the angels. In Luke 20:35, 36 Jesus says, "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are children of God, being children of the resurrection." They are lower than the angels now because they die, and the angels do not; but in the resurrection they can die no more, hence will he equal unto the angels.

John: We all understand that the body dies, but what about the soul?

Tom: God says, "All souls are mine: as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth shall die" (Ezek. 18:4, 20).

Tom: The soul is the man. I am a soul; you are a soul. A living man is a living soul; and a dead man is a dead soul.

In Matt. 16:26 we find these words: "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man given in exchange for his soul?" And in Luke 9:25 we find Christ's words recorded thus: "For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world and lose himself?" You see that where Matthew uses the noun "soul," Luke uses the pronoun "himself." Thus we see that Christ spoke of the person. In Gen. 2:7 we read: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." And in 1 Cor. 15:45 Paul says: "And so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit."

John: These references are very clear, but in Matt. 10:28 Jesus says: "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Here we have two, the body and the soul.

Tom: But notice that God can destroy the soul. Now get the Emphatic Diaglott and let us see how the passage is translated in the Diaglott.

John: Here is the Diaglott translation of Matt. 28:10: "Be not afraid of those who kill the body, but can not destroy the future life; but rather fear him who can utterly destroy both life and body in Gehenna."

Tom: Yes, in some places the soul means life, and in this passage you see that God can utterly destroy the soul or life.

John: Then if the soul is the person and dies, the dead can not know any thing until they are made alive again by a resurrection.

Tom: That is just what the Bible teaches, as you can see by looking up the following passages: Psa. 6:5; 115:17; 146:4; Ecc. 9:4, 5, 6.

John: Taking this view I can understand Paul's arguments on the resurrection of the dead in 1 Cor. 15. But I must confess that I never did understand them before: for if we go to heaven and live when the body dies, we have not perished if there never is a resurrection.

However, there are some other passages that are not clear; for in John 14:1-3 Jesus says: "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believed in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also."

Tom: Don't you think he could bring the place with him?

John: It does say that he will come again to receive us unto himself, that where he is we may be also.

Tom: Yes, that is the hope, and if you will look at Jno. 13:33 you will see that the thought that caused their sorrow was that he was going where they could not come. So now to comfort them he says, "I will come again." In Rev. 21:2 John says: "And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as abride adorned for her husband." And in the next verse we find that God's dwelling place is with men.

John: Tom, I believe you "soul sleepers" have the truth, and it seems that "Seeking the Truth" may soon be changed to "Finding the Truth."

Tom: Yes, John, if you keep on you will find. "Knock, and it shall be opened; seek, and ye shall find."

WHAT ARE YOU RECORDING?

Not long ago in a western city a young man was induced to confess to one whom he thought was his friend, the killing of his father and mother. As the confession was being made, as he supposed to but one person, it was all being taken down by a dictagraph and when he appeared in court his own confession was used against him and it sent him to the electric chair. In the British Museum there is a piece of stone not larger than an average sized Bible that is at least 4,000 years old, in the center of which is found the mark of a bird's foot. Four thousand years ago the track was made and for 4,000 years the record has stood. Reader you cannot afford to be careless in your mode of living. Records are easily made but not easily erased. People are slower to forget than you think. Don't make the fearful mistake of justifying your carelessness and negligence on the ground that other professed Christians are equally guilty in some other respect. Remember your character is at stake and your influence will work to bless or curse others after you pass on.

EDITORIAL

With the advance in the price of paper and other printing material, many periodicals have advanced their subscription rates. We are determined, if possible, to keep The Restitution at the same old price Ever since we have been editor The Restitution has been published fifty-two times the year. All other weeklies omit issues during the vacation season. Since we have been better to our readers in the past than any other paper, and as a means of keeping The Restitution at its old price, we presumed to omit publication last week. In future we may occasionally drop an issue, as a temporary device; but we plan to enlarge the paper this fall, which will more than compensate for any omission of issues that may be made.

A letter from Sister Flora A. Wood states that the brethren have assisted her liberally in her financial distress, and she asks them not to send her any more money, as her needs have all been supplied. Her letter in full will appear next week.

We are pleased to report another addition to our number in the person of Sister Blanch Covert. Our gain in this instance comes by the removal of our Sister to this city. She has not been with us long, but already she is known and loved by us all, on account of her love and devotion to the truth.

In order to shine for God and his gospel truth in this dark world, a believer does not need great talents, or wealth, or conspicuous position. Every humble, consistent right-living son or daughter of God, is a "light shining in a dark place."

By God'sblessing, we are able to report an addition this week by the obedience to the faith of Miss Ruth Covert, formerly Presbyterian, daughter of Sister Blanch Covert. Sister Ruth is by nature inclined to be religious, but in ignorance identified herself with Presbyterianism. Blessed with strong intellectual powers, she became restive under the platitudes of this sect; she was hungering and thirsting after righteousness, but did not know what was the matter. She had practically abandoned Presbyterianism when the truth was providentially brought to her attention. She learned it rapidly, grasped it clearly, and has laid hold of it firmly. May God deal tenderly and kindly with her in leading her along the narrow way of life, make her useful in the diffusion of his truth, and give her many stars in her crown of life in the coming kingdom of God, is our prayer.

WERE ANGELS MEDIATORS?

In the July issue of Bible Truth there is an article from Bro. Jas. U. Robertson on the personality and office of angels. After Christ had obtained a more excellent name than the angels Paul said: "There is one mediator between God and man, the man Jesus Christ." We take it that Bro. Robertson understands Christ has now supplanted angelic mediation; hence the question is not, "Are angels mediators?" but "Were angels mediators?" His article is very suggestive, and whether his position after due consideration will have to be rejected as inconsistent with some parts of the truth, we gladly give it herewith to "stir up the pure minds" of our brethren.—Editor.

There was one member of the heavenly host, whom Isaiah calls "the angel of his presence;" and Moses speaks of him in the following manner (Ex. 23:20-23): "Behold, I send an angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. Beware of him, and obey his voice; provoke him not, for he will not pardon your transgressions; for my name is in him. But if thou shalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I speak, then will I be an enemy unto thine enemies and an adversary unto thine adversaries. For my angel shall go before thee." From this passage we can see that this angel was the representative of the invisible God upon the earth. He was clothed with divine majesty and power; Jehovah's name was in him. With him Moses talked face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend (Ex. 33:11). While with Moses his communications were personal and intimate, yet to the people of Israel his manifestations were in many forms. For instance, the pillar of cloud by day and fire by night was the evidence of the abiding presence of the ever-watchful God of Jesuran, whose everlasting arms were beneath the people whom he had brought out of Egypt. The terrible voice proclaiming the ten commandments from the summit of the burning and trembling Mt. Sinia was another manifestation of his presence to his people. But when the tabernacle was raised up and the furniture threof put in its holy and most holy places we read of the Name bearing angel, "Yahweh," declaring unto Moses that from between the two cherubim upon the cover of the Ark of the covenant, above the mercy seat, he would meet with the children of Israel, and commune with them there, not directly but through Moses and the Aaronic priesthood.

Here then we have a meeting place for the children of Israel with the Shepherd of Israel, with him, who led Joseph like a flock, with the eternal God, who inhabited the cherubim of glory in the Most Holy; whose shekinah was the cloud of fire enveloped with thick darkness, and who dwelt in the midst of the children of Israel until the day when the temple and the city were about to be destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar according to the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. In all this divine manifestation of power and glory it was the Angel of the Presence, and not the Eternal One himself.

To this place, into this cherubic presence, the children brought their sacrifices and gifts on the great day of atonement by and through the high priest. Here was the Mercy seat, the place of forgiveness of the sins of the people. On one hand was the high priest representing the whole congregation of Israel, and on the other was the angelic presence, the hekinah, representing the eternal and invisible God, who dwelt not upon the earth but in that high and holy place called heaven. As far as God was concerned it was all done through the disposition of angels, specially commissioned by him to attend to this matter.

We may go back to the "foundation of the world," to the day when Adam and Eve were expelled from the Garden of Eden, and we will find the same angelic arrangement for sinful man to approach unto God. We may read Genesis 3:24, in this manner: "So he drove out the man. And he inhabited (or dwelt between) the cherubim at the east of the Garden of Eden, and the fire of wrath (a fierce fire) infolding itself to preserve inviolate the way of the tree of life" (Smith's Patriarchal Age). This teaches us that in the very beginning God established among the sons of Adam a furnished sanctuary, the chief feature of which was the cherubim and the shekinah fire dwelling within them, and the whole object was to preserve or keep pure and undefiled the way of the tree of life.

The cherubim are never angels. They are always symbols. The flaming sword is the same as Ezekiel's "fire infolding itself." "The tree of life" in Eden was the symbol of that tree of life, of which the spirit said to John: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." And again: "Blessed are they who do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." To keep the way of the tree of life is to do his commandments.

The common belief is that there was a literal immortal angel placed with a flaming sword in his hand at the east of the Garden of Eden to prevent Adam having access to the tree; we do not mean to intimate that there were no angels there. The elohim and the Yahweh-elohim were angels, divine beings, deeply interested in the unfolding of the divine purpose which they saw in progress before them. They were the other actors in this human tragedy, and their offices were to help the man. The angels were ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to them who are the heirs of salvation.

When we inquire what this ministration is we find that it, in the days before Christ came, who is God over all, blessed forever, among other services, "was beholding the face of the Father, who is in heaven." Now, what can these words of Christ mean? From such passages as these undernoted we gather that the angels acted as mediators between God and man before the one great high priest, Jesus Christ, was perfected and received up into glory.

Matt 18:10: "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones (which believe in me, verse 6), for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do away behold the face of my Father, which is in heaven."

These angels can only be those of whom the writer of the Hebrews speaks, thus: "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be the heirs of salvation?" Of the same speaks the Psalmist (34:7): "The angel of the Lord encampeth around about them that fear him, and delivereth them."

Luke 15:7: "Likewise I saw unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

The deep personal interest of the angels of God in certain of the humankind upon the earth, as expressed in these passages, indicates service on their part both upon the earth and in heaven for the heirs of salvation, and that service one of mediatorship, as concerns "beholding the face of the Father in heaven."

"Worshiping angels" (Col. 2:18), which Paul condemns, seems to be a falling into a superstition that they were all powerful mediators, and had to be propitiated to secure their services with God. Hence from this passage I also gather that the angels were mediators before the manifestation of the Lord Jesus Christ. The same idea is conveyed in I Cor. 8:5, where we read: "For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth (as there be gods many and lords many), but to us there is but one God, the Father, * * * and one Lord, Jesus Christ." The gods in heaven are the angels or the elohim of the one eternal Father, doing his will, hearkening to the voice of his word.

From all of which we gather that the believers in the apostolic age had faith in the existence and immediate presence of supernatural beings, who before the appearing of Christ, were "the heavens which rule," and ministering spirits for the heirs of salvation, and as such had access to God for them. But when Christ Jesus came, and having fulfilled all that was written of him, was exalted to the right hand of the Father in the heavens, the statement is: "We have such an high priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the majesty in the heavens, a minister of the sanctuary and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." "By him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually; that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name" (Heb. 13:15). J. U. ROBERTSON.

COMMUNICATIONS

From E. J. Watkins

Dear Restitution: As there seems to be a fear of loosing you after having you a regular visitor for forty-eight years every week, I will send in the widow's mite. All I have was given to me by the Lord, and when his cause needs it, I will return what I can; for I know he will never suffer me to go hungry, nor go begging for bread. He is my sheperd; he is my strong tower in times of need; my comfort in times of sorrow. Bless his great and holy name.

BRINGING EVERY THOUGHT INTO SUBJECTION TO THE LAW OF CHRIST

By S. Roxana Wince

Every thought? Did you mean it Paul? But behind Paul, was God. God was speaking through Paul, and of course God meant just what he said, and meant that such a thing was possible.

This is what it means to have the mastery of one's self. This is what it means to overcome, for if there are no angry, envious bellious thoughts, there will be no angry, envious, rebellious word. If there is no planning in the thoughts for the committal of wicked deeds, no wicked deeds will be committed, no one will be slandered, no one become the victim of wrong judgment.

Habits of right thinking can and must be formed, for "no one can attain the heights of Christian character unless he learns the secret of absolute mastery over his thoughts," says Mr. Meade McGuire.

"Bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." It is a wonderful thing to do, but we can do it, "for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds, casting down imaginations and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God." Everything that makes us what we are, has its origin inside. Our thoughts, our wills must move in the right channel, or we are sure to fail of becoming what God designs us to be. God moves us by his word, through our thoughts, our wills, to resist the wrong and do the right.

To get rid of any polluting thought, the only way is to absolutely turn to the contemplation of pure and holy things. Follow Jesus; do not be tempted; meet the evil one with a text, or the stanza of a song. But whatever you do, get the victory. You must, you cannot be saved unless you do. Christ must dwell in you. He must take the place of all that is wrong and sinful. "He that overcometh shall inherit all things."

GOD'S WILL

What is will? Power of choosing or determining; command.

"I delight to do thy will, O my God" (Psa. 40:8). My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work (John 4:34). For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me (John 5:30, 6:38; Matt. 26:39). "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."

Who did Christ claim was his brother? "Whosoever shall do the will of God, is my brother" (Mark 3:35). How was Christ born? Not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God, (John 1:13). God said, I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfill all my will. David after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption (Acts 13:22, 26). How did David fulfill God's will? By obediance to God's commands. Noah did God's will, and was saved from death at the flood; while all those that followed their own will were drowned, which was God's mode of destroying them. And we have his promise, that all people that will not do his will, shall be destroyed. When God dealt direct with the people, he frequently destroyed them, with pestilence; with hail; with sword; with a great plague: wherein 24,000 died (Ex. 9:15; Lev. 26:29; Num. 11:33, 14:12. 25. 9; Psa. 78:50; Jer. 14:12-16). Since he has ceased to deal direct with the people, he has sent prophets to teach them the way of life, and if they do not accept of him, and obey him. Then take heed that ye be not consumed one of another (Gal. 5:15).

Now the nations of Europe, at war, are consuming one another at a rapid rate. Why this war? To fulfill prophecy, and prepare the way for the people that are striving to do God's will. There are only two classes of people: those that strive to do God's will, and those that strive to do their own will. Those that do God's will will be rewarded with "eternal life." When Christ comes with all his holy angels, those that have died will be raised to a spiritual life, and will be associate rulers with him to reign over the nations. We are inclined to think that the common people of these warring nations, the class that have to stay at home, and raise food for the soldiers, and endure the excessive taxation, to pay this great war debt: if they could be assured, that a ruler would rule over them, that would end the war, "for all time," and stop the increase of this great war debt, they would submit and welcome him. Well, we are here to say, such a ruler is being prepared, and those poor deluded people that have not dared to shout for any one but their earthly rulers, under fear of punishment by death, would welcome such a ruler.

It may take considerable teaching to make many of them understand, that in order to not have any more war, there must be only one King, and all nations must serve and obey him, for he will rule in peace and righteousness. We do not think the common people of these nations look upon each other as bitter enemies, and if their earthly rulers could be removed, they would welcome a peaceful ruler. What a blessing it is going to be to those people to have rulers that will not hurt, nor destroy them, if they only obey the laws of their King, and those laws are to be founded on justice and righteousness. The blessing of the nations is a glorious theme. And it is God's will that his only begotten Son "Christ Jesus" and his adopted sons, shall all be rulers in that grand and glorious kingdom, which will never be destroyed, and it shall stand forever. O glorious thought, O glorious hope! Can we be one of the rulers, or must we "if alive when Christ comes," find we are only subjects to be destroyed for our disobedience? If we have believed, and obeyed, and then forsaken God, by leaving the body, and joining some other organization, we will find we are not even subjects, but come under the head of "Condemned," and will have to answer for the deeds done in the body of Christ. O it is fearful for one to do any act that will have his name blotted out of the book of life! Such a one is in a worse state than one that never heard the word. For as many as have sinned without law shall perish without law. As many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law. In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my gospel (Rom. 2:12, 16). This is God's will.

GIVING FROM GOD'S VIEWPOINT

By S. Roxana Wince

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son"—the most priceless gift in his possession, that you, that I dear Ethel May and little Alvin, and all the beloved ones who, believing in him, have accepted him as their Savior, might have the endless life to come.

We are to think of this in all our giving. God gave one gift to us that through that gift, another priceless gift might come into our possession—a gift that we can get in no other possible way: "For there is no other name given under heaven among men, whereby we can be saved."

"God so loved the world" that he gave his richest treasure to save it, and he wants us to be like-minded with him, to be "coworkers with him," in seeking and saving the lost. And that is why we are giving to get the linotype, little Alvin. We love the poor perishing men and women around us. Sinful as they are, we want them to know about Jesus; we want them to hear the glad tidings of a coming kingdom; we want them to leave off their sins and take refuge in the name of Jesus, that they may not be blotted out when the day of judgment comes. But we cannot go to them all with "the old, old story of Jesus and his love:" yet if we can keep our dear paper alive, we can send it where we cannot go ourselves.

We are never to forget that we are to love the world, as God loves it, and that we are to give it the best we have, because God so gave. To give it our best, is to give it ourselves; our whole lives in the service of Christ. This is the first step. The next is to keep constantly in mind, that having given ourselves to God, all that we have and are, belongs to him, and is to be used for his glory.

I know, dear brethren and sisters, that you are remembering this from the way you give. I rejoice greatly over your faithfulness. The times are hard, the cost of living is high. I realize what self-denial it must take with many of you, to give even five dollars. And little Alvin's gift, and the gifts of our young Bereans, is like that of the poor widow's mite, because in giving, they have given their all, every penny they had. God bless every one of you. He is able, and "he will supply all your need" out of his unwasted fulness. Do not fear to trust him; do not fear to give.

I MUST PRAISE MORE

I do not know how it is with others, but I know that I have a great deal for which to be thankful and to praise God. I feel that it will not do for me to spend all my breath in prayer. I should thus, it is true, acknowledge my dependence on God; but where would be the acknowledgment of his benefits conferred upon me? I must spend a part of my breath in praise. O, to be animated from above with that life whose alternate breath prayer and praise! God has been very good to me. Yes, he has exercised goodness towards me in all its various forms of pity, forbearance, care, bounty, grace and mercy: or to express all in one word, "God is love," and he has been love to me. I do not know why he should have treated me so kindly. I have sought, but can find no reason out of himself. I conclude it is because he "delighteth in mercy." His nature being love, it it natural for him to love his creatures, and especially those whom he has called to be his children. O, the goodness of God! The thought of it sometimes comes over me with very great power, and I am overwhelmed in admiration. Nothing so easily breaks up the fountain of tears within me. Those drops, if I may judge from my own experience, were intended as much to express gratitude as grief. I think I shall be able, without weariness, to spend eternity on the topic of divine love and goodness.

Reader, can you not adopt my language as your own? Has not God been the same to you? And shall we not praise him? Shall all our devotion consist in prayer? Shall we be always thinking of our wants, and never of his benefits—always dwelling on what remains to be done, and never thinking of what has already been done for us—always uttering desire, and never expressing gratitude—expending all our voice in supplication, and none of it in song? Is this the way to treat a benefactor? No, indeed. It is not just so to treat him; neither is it wise. It is very bad policy to praise no more than Christians in general do. They would have much more success in prayer, if one-half the time they now spend in it were spent in praise. I do not mean that they pray too much, but that they praise too little. I suspect the reason why the Lord did such great things for the psalmist was, that while he was not by any means deficient in prayer, he abounded in praise. The Lord heard his psalms; and while he sung of mercy shown, showed him more. And it would be just so with us, if we abounded more in praise and thanksgiving. It displeases God that we should be always dwelling on our wants, as if he had never supplied one of them. How do we know that God is not waiting for us to praise him for a benefit he has already conferred, before he will confer on us that other which we may be now so earnestly desiring of him? It is wonderful how much more prone we are to forget the benefit received, than the benefit wanted; in other words, how much more inclined we are to offer prayer than praise. For one who offers genuine praise, there may be found ten that pray. Ten lepers lifted up their voices together in the prayer, "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us;" but only one of the ten "returned to give glory to God." The rest were satisfied with the benefit—this one only thought gratefully of the benefactor. His gratitude obtained for him, I doubt not, a greater blessing than ever his prayer had procured; and praise has often, I believe, in the experience of the people of God, been found more effectual for obtaining blessings than prayer. A person being once cast upon a desolate island, spent a day in fasting and prayer for his deliverance, but no help came. It occurred to him then to keep a day of thanksgiving and praise, and he had no sooner done it than relief was brought to him. You see, as soon as he began to sing of mercy exercised, the exercise of mercy was renewed to him. The Lord heard the voice of his praise.

Christian reader, you complain perhaps that your prayer is not heard; suppose you try the efficacy of praise. Peradventure you will find that the way to obtain new favors, is to praise the Lord for favors received. Perhaps, if you consider his goodness, he will consider your wants. It may be you are a parent, and one child is converted; but there is another, concerning whom you say, "O that he might live before thee." Go now and bless the Lord for the conversion of the first, and it is very likely he will give thee occasion to keep another day of thanksgiving for the salvation of the other. Some of us are sick. Perhaps it is because we did not praise the Lord for health. We forget that benefit. We do not forget our sickness. O no. Nor is there any lack of desire in us to get well. We pray for recovery. And so we should; but it strikes me that we might get well sooner, were we to dwell with less grief and despondency on our loss of health, and to contemplate with cheerful and grateful admiration what God has done for our souls; the great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins; and how he spared not his own Son, that he might spare us; and give us now his Spirit, to be in us the earnest of the kingdom, our eternal home. If we were to think such thoughts, to the forgetfulness of our bodily ailments, I judge it would be better for the whole man, body and soul both, than any other course we can pursue. If the affliction should still continue, we should count it "light," aye, should rejoice in it, because it is his will, and because he says he means to make it work our good.

There is nothing glorifies God like praise. Whoso offereth praise, glorifieth me" (Psa. 1:23). Prayer expresses dependence and desire; but praise, admiration and gratitude. By it, men testify and tell all abroad that God is good, and thus others are persuaded to "taste and see that the Lord is good." Praise is altogether the superior exercise of the two. Prayer may be purely selfish in its origin, but praise is ingenuous. Praise is the employment of heaven. Angels praise. The spirits of the just made perfect shall praise. We shall not always pray, but we shall ever praise. Let us anticipate the employment of the kingdom. Let us exercise ourselves unto praise. Let us learn the song now, "O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness.' But above all, "let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud upon their beds." I charge thee, my soul, to praise him, and he will never let thee want matter for praise. "While I live will I praise the Lord: I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being."—W. N.

ENOUGH FOR HIM

A gentleman accustomed to take his morning glass, stepped up to the bar of a saloon and called for whisky. A seedy individual stepped up to him and, and said:

"I say, squire, can't you ask an unfortunate fellow to join you?"

"I am not in the habit of drinking with tramps," was the answer.

The tramp replied:

"You need not be so cranky, my friend. I venture to say that I am of just as good family as you are, have just as good an education, and before I took to drink was just as respectable as you are. What is more, I always knew how to act the gentleman. Take my word for it, you stick to whisky and it will bring you to just the same place as I am."

The gentleman set down his glass and turned to look at the tramp.

His eyes were bloodshot, his face bloated, his boots mismated, his clothing filthy

"Was it drink that made you like this?"

"Yes, it was; and it will bring you to the same if you stick to it."

Picking up his untouched glass, he poured its contents upon the floor, and said, "Then it is time I quit!" and left the saloon.—Sel.

HOW DOES IT FEEL TO BE OLD?

By S. ROXANA WINCE

How does it feel to be old, I wonder?
  How does it feel to be old?
Some one surely has made a blunder,
  Counting my seventy and eight years told,
For glad of heart I go on my journey,
  Scarcely noting the flight of years,
The way is so crowded with fragrant roses,
  And thrilled with the music of holy seers.

I still have place for the little children
  Am eager still as the days go by
To find and save for the tender shepherd,
  The sheep that out in the desert cry,
And more than ever I long for knowledge,
  A worthier vessel for Christ to be.
Bearing to others the living water,
  That quenches thirst to eternity.

So little I've done in the days that are over,
  The days that went "as a tale that is told,"
Each with its song, its sorrow or laughter,
  I scarce can believe when you say I am old,
How does it feel to be old, I wonder?
  With the fountain of youth still alive in my breast,
And strength, blessed strength for the mountains up-climbing,
  While others are fainting and longing for rest?

In hearts all around me the embers are dying,
  Faces are wrinkled and wan with despair,
The laughter has gone from the musical voices,
  And steps scarce adventure to go anywhere;
While I, O my Father, can still through thy mercy,
  Keep working each day in thy vineyard for thee,
Blessing thy toilers with words that are cheering,
  And striving to help them more trustful to be.

So thankful I am for the blessings of friendship;
  For the moments thou givest love's message to send,
For rainbows of hope that are bending above me,
  And for faith that "abides and endures" to the end,
And "redeeming the time" while the days are onrushing
  And holding each moment more precious than gold,
There is whispered to me this most wonderful secret,
  That hearts that love thee can never grow old.

INDIANA CONFERENCE REPORT

The Annual Conference of the Churches of Indiana was entertained by the Hillisburg Church August 24-27. Another enjoyable and profitable meeting is past, and the memory of it will linger in our minds for many days.

The Hillisburg Church is one of our strongest in numbers, and they gave us a hearty welcome. A majority of the churches sent in reports of their year's work. Several delegates and visitors attended the meeting.

The principal business transacted before the conference was a continuation of the work of revising the constitution. At the quarterly conference April, 1916, it was voted that the old committee of three, enlarged by the addition of elders, or other representatives from the various churches, meet at this annual conference and further consider the revision of the proposed new constitution. This was done carefully and considerately on Friday and Saturday.

Following the reading of the report of this committee which report you will notice in your church paper—a motion was made that this report of the committee appointed to revise the constitution of Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith of State of Indiana be approved and accepted, and that it be recommended to the various churches for their adoption. Motion carried by unanimous vote.

A motion was made and caried that this report be submitted to The Restitution for publication, also that a sufficient supply in sheet form be printed to distribute to all the church members.

Following this was a motion that the president with David Van Vactor constitute a committee to present this matter to the churches for their consideration. Carried.

The Morning Star Church of God, located between Bourbon and Nappanee, an organization of 16 members, sent in an application for membership in the State Conference of the Churches of God of Indiana. The conference gladly accepted this church as a member of this conference.

This brought up the subject of the possibility of the organization of one or two churches at certain cities, if proper effort was put forth by the conference in that direction. So a motion was made that the president appoint a committee of one to secure funds to develope new fields of work. This was carried.

The following officers for the new years were elected:

F. A. Stilson, President.
Wm. Huffer, 1st Vice-President.
A. O. Roose, 2nd Vice-President.

Flora Prior, Secretary.
Ezra Railsback, Treasurer.

An interesting Berean Session was held Saturday evening by Emma Railsback.

The principal speaker during the conference was Brother F. L. Austin, of Fonthill, Ontario. It was indeed a great treat and privilege to again hear Brother Austin in his forceful manner impart the words of life. Brother Van Vactor is also appreciated, and is doing much good in the state. He conducted a series of meetings just before the conference, and was actively engaged in various lines during the conference at this place, all of which resulted in several additions to the church and renewed spiritual life and general interest to us all.

By request of the Secretary, Brother Van Vactor gives the following report of his labors:

Hillisburg Meeting and State Conference

The Hillisburg Church is rejoicing over the results of their meeting commenced August 25th. lasting through the State Conference from the 24th to the 27th, in which fifteen were baptized. Mabel Strawn led the way, followed by Dorothy and Mary Whitcomb on Sunday morning the 20th. Otto A. Huffer came Monday evening, and the baptism was set for Tuesday afternoon. At the water Orval E. Pruitt made confession. and these five were baptized. Brother Austin came to the work Thursday evening, and Saturday evening Robert Luther Benge. Effie M. Eikenberry, Ruth M. Thompson, and Florence B. Reed confessed. and were baptized Sunday morning at 8 o'clock. In the afternoon Alva C. Sikenberry and Hazel F Finney applied for baptism privately, and were taken to the water and baptized so they could depart for their homes. At the evening service Car L. Gregg, Ethel L. Gregg, Edith F. Plumber and Ida M. Larkee answered the gospel call, and were baptized Monday morning at 9:30. These will all unite with the Hillisburg Church, except Sister Reed, of Mishawaka, who will unite with the South Bend church. These results give new life to the church and is ground for gladness in the hearts of us all. "Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth" (Luke 15:10). May each of these precious lives run with patience the race set before them, and come off victorious through him that hath loved us.

Revision of the State Constitution

Under the head of old business, the committee on revision, consisting of the old committee of three and the elders or representatives from the several churches, as was fixed at the last quarterly conference, held at Plymouth, April, 1916, reported. This committee had met on Friday, August 2, at 1:30 p. m., and gone over the old report of the committee, section by section, and made alterations and changes, seeking to eliminate objections, and submitted the following report:

CONSTITUTION

Article 1. (Basis of Organization).

Sec. 1. The Local Organizations of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith in the State of Indiana adopt the following "Articles of Incorporation," which are on file with the Auditor of the State of Indiana, as the basis of their organization, to wit:

The amount of money to be raised shall be determined at each annual conference for the ensuing year. The executive board shall make an estimate of the needs of the conference for the coming fiscal year, ending June 30th, specifying the needs in each department of the work, and submit it to the conference with the treasurer's yearly report as a basis for calculating the amount of money needed. This may be increased or diminished, and the amount to be raised and expended is to be fixed by the conference. Each church is requested to pay their proportionate share of such contributions in four equal payments as follows: for the first quarter, September 30th; for the second quarter, December 31st; for the third quarter, March 31st; and for the fourth quarter, June 30th. Sec. 3. Necessary By-Laws may be adopted by any conference meeting for carrying out the details of the work contemplated and set forth in this constitution. But no By-Laws shall be passed contrary to the provisions of this constitution or that would in any way nullify any portion of it. The same notice shall be given for the passage of By-Laws as is required in the change of the Constitution.

Sec. 4. All rules, resolutions and By-Laws other than these are hereby repealed.

THE RESTITUTION LINOGRAPH

"Who Can Utter The Mighty Acts of the Lord? Who Can Show Forth All His Praise?"

(Psalm cxi:2).

By S. ROXANA WINCE

It is beyond me, "to utter the mighty acts of the Lord," David could not, thought he did his best to portray them. "If he would declare and speak of them," they were more he said, "Than can be numbered."

And so we feel we cannot "count our mercies:" "the wonderful works which he has done, and his thoughts which are to usward," nor can we show forth all his praise," but we can sing the new song of praise that he has put into our mouth. Few in number, yet we asked of him a wonderful gift.—a machine that would give our paper new life and power, and lend to it wings to speed on with the gospel story. We prayed him to hasten the work, for the honor and glory of his name. Some doubted, a few felt that we would not get the machine for two or three years, if at all. But we walked out in faith. "We waited patiently for the Lord, and he inclined unto us and heard our cry," and said, "Blessed is that man that maketh the Lord his trust." He is answering our prayer beyond our wildest dreams. I felt that he would when the little children came to our help.

Brother Richard Railsback, God will not send us out to buy a machine to do his work, and put but half the money into our hands to buy it with, nor does he intend that we go with borrowed money. He will give us the whole sum necessary, for "the Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth." "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God."

We thank and praise and worship him for what he has done, and look confidently to him for the rest, for "he remembers his holy promise, and Abraham his servant" down to this very day.

A beloved Cleveland brother, W. S. Tomlinson, "has prepared a beautiful office and it is now ready" for the installment of the machine. We have nearly two thirds of the needed sum, and when we reach the two thirds mark, a dear generous brother, promises to come forward with "something worth while," and others are intending to give all the way from five to twenty-five dollars. "Praise ye the Lord: O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S REPORT

On Friday evening, August 18th, the Young People's Society of Cleveland, held their two hundred and third (203) consecutive meeting at the home of Brother and Sister Gibbs. With this brother and sister and the help of their son and daughter, Brother Lawrence and Sister Marvel, our creature comforts were well taken care of.

Twenty-three young people responded to the call of the roll with a memory verse from the Bible, as is our custom. Two very welcome visitors also gave a verse, Sister Hattie Sanford, of Cleveland, and Brother Ashford Lehman, from the southern part of the state.

In conformity with our program one of the members, Miss Zeplime Brown, conducted a five-minute quiz in which she asked many worth while questions on the Book of Acts. These minutes in which our minds are tested, are very enjoyable to all of us.

There followed a five-minute talk by Sister Myrna Lang on "Business or Pleasure."

Quotations

Consciously or not, we have each a principle operating in our minds which determines the order of our actions. One would make sure of pleasure, whilst others would give business the preference and let pleasure "slide." It is possible that business may be pleasure. . . . A man makes business the one study of his life, and its success is the one pleasure he secures. . . . We have our business to atend to—but do we ever realize that "our Father's business" is our great life work? His claim of Israel was their first—born of man and beast, fllock and heard, wine and olive, wheat and barley. The first child, the first lamb, the first ripe handful of corn, the first sheaf—their substance and the first fruits of all their increase, were his property. He hears each sigh and knows each thrill of joy, that though he is invisible he is ever close at hand and careth for thee. Surely this is sufficient to glorify every business pursuit with an all-prevading happiness.

Bro. Robert Meermans, one of our younger brothers, had charge of the lesson for the evening, which was on the beginning of the travels of the children of Israel. Our last leader took us through the plagues of Egypt, which reached their climax in the death of their first born. Then Pharaoh hurriedly rushed them out of the land, only to wonder why he had let them go, and to his own destruction he followed them to the Red Sea. We often wonder why those chosen children of Israel murmured so oftern on this trip to the promised land. Perhaps we don't murmur about the food and the water as they did, but do we murmur at things as trifling when a jealous but gracious God has care of his own?

After an instructive lesson we left this race camping at the foot of the Mountain of Sinai, receiving the commands of God through Moses, accompanied by the power and majesty of thunder and lightning. Comments were made on the lesson, and an essay was read from Sister Anna Burton, of Salem. After the closing hymn Brother Ashford Lehman dismissed the meeting with prayer.

Duly applied on July order. Baptized at Moorefield, 3.

Remarks

During July we held some very interesting meetings. The brethren at all points seemed to have unusual interest. On account of so much new work we had been unable to visit the brethren at Moorefield during the year. Here we had a good meeting, as we always do. Three young people took a stand for the truth: Emerson McLaughlin, Zoe McLaughlin and Gertrude Ealy. Our prayer is they may be of the number that make up the jewels for the kingdom.

We spent one night with friends at North Star, where we always meet a heaty welcome. We then proceeded on our way to Freedom, where we spoke in the hall twice. It was decided the people were too busy to get out nights, so postponed meetings for the present.

Next we visited the new church, northwest of Holbrook, known as the Fairview Church. On Sunday afternoon and evening we had a house full of interested listeners. We then took the time to go north of Cambridge and visit Brother and Sister Gamble. Sister Gamble is quite poorly, and very deaf, and cannot enjoy the talks on the coming of the Lord as she used to. She is very much interested in this theme, as she realizes unless he comes soon she will have to go to sleep. We would rejoice if he would come just that soon.

ALMUS ADAMS.

"THEY SAY"

"They say!" That phrase has blasted more characters and wrecked more homes than any other in the language. Call a halt on the peddler who comes at you with his wares—"They say." "Who says?" That hits the spot. You can not afford to miss. The person who circulates a scandal is a vampire. He sucks life-blood. No combination of words in the language has caused more trouble, pain, and sorrow. Shadowy—it hits in the dark. It is anonymous. It has no personality. It can not suffer any reaction. It is wholly irresponsible. The phrase ought to be put under the ban. It is this way: You speak to some one of a mutual acquaintance. There is a shrug of the shoulders or a lifting of the eyebrows. Then a lowering of the voice, with the preface, "They say." Even when the gossip fails to give his authority he has put an evil idea into your mind respecting the person he speaks of. You can not rid yourself of the suggestion. The impression stays. The suspicion lurks. A great wrong is done. "They say." The ears that are eager for that always have the mouth to pass it on to other ears. The assassination of character has begun. What "they say" may sometimes be a true message. But is it a necessary message? Will it make the old world the better or worse for the telling? It is very plain that much suffering and sorrow might be prevented by cutting these ugly words out of our vocabulary.—Sel.

EDITORIAL

We spent our summer holidays this year with Sister Darrah, of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and Brother and Sister Jas. C. Thompson, of Buffalo, N. Y. Our visit in Buffalo was not one of entire repose, as we visited many other brethren and sisters there, and held a series of private meetings in the homes of brethren during the evenings, which were of a semi-public nature. Nevertheless we had a change from the "grind" of everyday labor, and feel much benefited, both physically and spiritually.

As no Restitution was published last week, copy has accumulated rapidly. This week we are confronted with the problem of putting two week's copy in one Restitution. There was but one way to do this ,and that was to "boil it down." Communications and reports have suffered the most from the blue pencil. Writers will please note this editorial, and understand why their contributions have been abbreviated.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Restitution: Just a $1.00 bill for Linotype. Maybe after a time I can give more. I read this dear paper every week. It is my meat and drink.

From One Who Is Old and Sick.

From Brother G. M. Alexander

Dear Restitution: On the evening of July 18th I received a telegram saying that my invalid brother, Homer Alexander, of Nappanee, Indiana, was "sinking rapidly." I left on first train, stopping at that place, arriving about two hours before his death. He was asleep when I got to his bedside, and he passed into the sleep of death without awaking. While we shall miss him, we know that his long sickness and suffering are past, never to be experienced again. Soon he will awake to meet father, mother and sisters on that "evergreen shore" where sickness and pain will never be known. May that time soon come.

From Brother and Sister W. E. Byers

Dear Auntie Wince:

I am going to take time to write a little this morning. Have been talking for a long time of sending a little money to help on the Linograph Fund, but just being careless have neglected to do so.

Yesterday when I was reading some pieces out of The Restitution to the children, they became much interested, and when I read about the little boy down in Texas sending money for The Restitution, they were all ready to send in their pennies they have been saving for over a year to buy a piano, as they have much desire for music. But they said they would send their pennies for the printing machine, and then they could save their money for a piano; so we went to work to count them. There was $2.65, so the children will send the $2.65 for their little help, and we will send $2.35 for our part, making $5.00. It is not so much as some can give, but maybe it will help a little, and the little help will all make a big help after while. We like The Restitution, and would miss it much if we didn't get it every week.

With Love.

Articles on Triune Immersion

Dear Restitution: I am sending one dollar for the linotype. It is a very small offering, but it will help a little. And I want to thank our Editor and all the brethren that have so ably written on triune immersion—it seems to me that anyone cannot but help see the light on that subject. Dear ones of like precious faith, although I am isolated from all of the faith, I am trying to walk in the narrow way—that our dear Savior has so plainly marked out in his word. The Restitution is a great help to me, and I hope to send more of the Lord's money soon to help the cause a little. And now will our Editor or some of the brothers or sisters answer a few questions: Is feet washing a command; and must a woman cover her head when praying? I would be very glad if some one would write on these subjects. Your sister in Christ, Clarissa Campbell.

Brother Heckman's Evangelistic Labors

Brother Huggins:

I have just arrived home from Arkansas City where three very intelligent young people obeyed "that form of doctrine' which was delivered to the church by the apostle Paul. Their names are, John Fiske, Jr., Mrs. Odessa Coulson, and Mrs. Katie Fiske, wife of Bro. Fred Fiske, who is a brother of Brother John, Jr. It may be a surprise to some to know that Brother John is the John Fiske who held the debate with J. H. Moore, a part of which was published in The Restitution some time since. He was drawn into that discussion by Elder Moore's sophistical reasoning in a Cambellite paper, of far west. Brother John, althought not having obeyed the gospel, was so in love with it that he could not stand idly by and see it abused. Such zeal should most certainly be commended. Brother Fiske is a teacher in the public schools of Oregon, and is well equipped to become a teacher in the school of Christ, which he intends to do at once. He should have the encouragement of all the brethren of the one faith, and should any of them desire the assistance of an able young man who is sound in the faith, they certainly could do no better than call on him. The brethren in the far west should compliment themselves that they are so fortunate as to have so able a defendant of the truth near them, and should do all their power to aphold his hands. Sister Coulson is a niece of brother John Fiske, and granddaughter of Brother John Fiske, Sr. So you can see they are all related to the Fiske family, and it was a cause of great rejoicing to the senior brother, John, to see the last of his children come into the truth, as the older ones had done.

During our stay we had the privilege of meeting some of the older brethren of our faith, and learning something about the struggles they had in Indiana in the early days of The Restitution movement. Our home was with Brother and Sister Jacob Reed, and it would be useless for me to say to those who have visited with them that they do all they can to make one's stay pleasant; and though old in years they are still valient soldiers in the fight for the one faith. We met many brethren and sisters whose names were new to us, and their faces strange, yet we felt as though we were at home among old acquaintances, and holding sweet communion with kindred minds.

"Blest be the tie that binds,
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above."

We hope to meet those dear brethren again soon, and assist them in holding forth the words of life.

AN EXPRESSION OF HEARTFELT THANKS

Dear Brethren:

Please do not send me any more money. I have received sufficient for my needs. I feel bad that my necessity was such as to call for aid, for I feel that the cause needs all God's people can give. Brethren, words are weak to express my gratitude to you for your words of love and sympathy and financial aid. The words of Paul to the brethren at Phillipi are in my mind: "I have all and abound: I am full, having received the things which were sent from you, an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God."

I have paid all my bills in full and have a little left. I will buy with it some wood for winter (that is always my heavy bill), and a few articles I need.

Brethren, your letters brought to me greatly needed financial help, loving words which have greatly strengthened me, and, more than all else, they brought to me the sure evidence that God has a people on the earth ready for his appearing, and who will stand on his right hand when we all appear before him to receive the reward for the things done in the body. Jesus says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least (not the great and mighty ones) of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Brethren, I truly feel that I am the least, the weakest member of Christ—body. When I thing of myself, or compared myself with those of whom the world is not worthy, I feel so unworthy of this great love and kindness. We talk of our love for one another. I wonder if we can comprehend the great love of our Lord for us? Listen to his words: "Be not afraid;" "Be of good cheer;" "Let not your heart be troubled;" "I will come again and receive you unto myself;" "Where I am you may be also:" And crowning act of all, "I lay down my life for my sheep. Greater love hath no man this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Jesus was heir to great wealth and great honor, but he laid them down freely for us his brethren. He says himself: "No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself." The angels are of a higher order than we are; they are sinless. They veil their faces and bow down in love and homage before our Lord; but even they are not as near to him as are we. Think of this sinless one honored of heaven, stooping to us and lifting us up to himself even in all our sin, and covering our uncleanness with his own righteousness! Brethren, if Jesus so loves us, we ought to love one another. Not our wisdom, not our ability to talk or write learnedly of the scriptures, witness to the world that we are the called of God, chosen elect, but, by this love one for another shall all men knew ye are my disciples.

A lady said to me, "Mrs. Wood, what can you do?" and I replied, "My brethren will help me." She said, "Oh, if you are relying upon church members to aid you, I am afraid you will be sadly disappointed." A short time ago I showed her a packet of thirty letters I had received from "church members," and Jesus words were proven true that they were his disciples because of the love for each other manifested by them.

I would like to speak to each one personally in this letter, but lack of space forbids. I hope when I get rested to answer each one. There is one I think we all turn to first for advice and sympathy, and that is our dear Sister Wince. She seems to me to be to all a "tender mother in Israel." Sister Wince, every word you wrote was a comfort to me. And Brother S. H. Thomas, we have been peculiarly associated together in the defense of truth. For years his letters have strengthened me in the Lord, and in my hour of trial he remembered me. Sister Carrie Free, Sister Wolf, and many, many others did not forget me. Only one other I have space and time now to speak of; but do not think my beloved brethren, that any are forgotten. Sister Huggins, who spake for the whole church of Cleveland, Sister Ella Knowles, of the Salem Ecclesia, all everyone are never forgotten in my prayers. May God bless and help all his elect unto that glad day when we shall see face to face, and every man's work shall be made manifest of what sort it is. Then, dear Brother Huggins, God will reward you (for I cannot) for your appeal to the brethren in my behalf.

Your Sister in the Anointed One,

FLORA A. WOOD.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON LEAF

Lesson VIII

Subject—The Throne and Kingdom of David

Memory Text

"And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee; thy throne shall be established forever" (2 Sam. 7:16).

1. "And the Lord said unto Samuel, How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, seeing I have rejected him from reigning over Israel? Fill thine horn with oil, and go, I will send thee to Jesse the Bethlehemite; for I have provided me a king among his sons" (1 Sam. 16:1).

2. "I have found David my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him" (Psa. 89:20).

3. "My mercy will I keep for him forevermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him.

4. "His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven" (Psa. 89: 28, 29).

5. "So all the elders of Israel came to the king to Hebron; and king David made a league with them in Hebron before the Lord; and they anointed David King over Israel.

6. "David was thirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years.

7. "In Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months; and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Israel and Judah" (2 Sam. 5:3, 4, 5).

8. "My covenant will I not break nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips.

9. "Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David.

10. "His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me" (Psa. 89:34, 35, 36).

11. "Thus saith the Lord God; remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same, exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high.

12. "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until be come whose right it is; and I will it him" (Ezek. 21:25, 26).

13. "Thou hast made his glory to cease, and cast his throne down to the ground" (Psa. 89:44).

14. "When they therefore were come together, they asked him saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel" (Acts 1:6)?

15. "In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that has fallen, and close up the branches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old" (Amos 9:11).

Practical Thoughts

From a shepherd boy David was raised to the throne of Israel. His reign was in righteousness and typical of the reign of the coming Messiah. God made very great promises to him of the future of his seed, of his throne and kingdom. On account of the wickedness of his posterity the kingdom was overturned and his throne is now in ruins, but the promise is that God will restore the throne of David. This will be done through Jesus the Christ who is the long promised Messiah. When he comes he will gather Israel and the nations of the earth will be subjects of his kingdom and reign.

Notes on the Lesson

Thine House.—David's house is not a building, but has reference to his family—his posterity.

Thy Kingdom.—The kingdom of Judah and Israel or the whole of the twelve tribes.

Established Forever.—This promise was not made before David came to the throne, but after he had been king a long time; and in all probability refers to the future establishing of the throne in the hands of Christ, who is the seed here promised. He was reminded that he must die, but was promised that his throne would be established before him, that it, that it would be after the resurrection of David.

1. I Have Rejected Him.—God took the kingdom out of the hands of Saul and his house, for disobedience, and placed David upon the throne.

2. Holy Oil.—An oil prepared by special direction and set apart for anointing priests and kings, typical of the Holy Spirit.

3. Covenant.—An agreement; the promise of God sometimes made upon conditions that man will perform his part.

4. His Seed.—David's posterity is undoubtedly referred to here, and includes Jesus the Christ.

5. Hebron.—A small town in the south of Palestine, famous as the place where Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are buried. It was the early seat of David's throne, as it was in Judea and near the scenes of his boyhood.

6. Forty Years.—The time of David's reign is here given in years, leaving off the months.

7. Over all Israel and Judah.—Note by this expression the extent of his reign after he moved to Jerusalem.

8. My Covenant will I not Break.—No, God will never break his covenant, neither alter what he has promised. We may rest in confidence, trusting all his promises to us.

11. Remove the Diadem and Take off the Crown.—This language was addressed to Zedekiah the last king of the house of Judah. His wickedness was notorious, and God overthrew the kingdom, removed the diadem until it could be worn by a king who should be loyal to God, namely, Jesus Christ.

12. Until He Comes Whose Right It Is.—This certainly points to a king who shall some time in the future claim and take the throne. That time and that king have not yet come.

15. Build it as in the Days of Old.—Nothing short of a future restoration of David's throne and kingdom can fulfill this promise. James quotes this prophecy in the conference at Jerusalem about the year 51 A. D., and therefore it does not refer to the restoration from Babylon.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. The Extent of David's Kingdom.—Who anointed David? For what purpose? By whom was he anointed first? Did Samuel, and the men of Judah, and the elders of Israel anoint him for the same purpose (2 Sam. 2:4; 5:3; 1 Sam. 16:1)? Over what people did David reign? Where and how long? What was the extent of his kingdom (1 Chron. 18: 1-14)?

2. The Promise of Its Eternal Duration.—Where in the lesson do we learn the David's seed and David's throne will endure forever? Will God ever break any of his promises?

3. For Disobedience its Existence is Suspended.—From whom did the Lord remove the crown (11)? Whose throne was cast down to the ground (13)? What is here referred to as having been "overturned" (12)? Is David's kingdom in existence now? What has become of the twelve tribes of Israel? Give a short history of the overthrow of the kingdom over which David once ruled.

4. Restoration Promised.—What question did the disciples ask of Jesus (Acts 1:6)? Is a restoration of the kingdom promised to Israel (Ezek. 37:21-28; Amos 9: 11)?

5. The Lawful Heir.—To whom is David's throne and kingdom promised (Isa. 9:6, 7; Luke 1:32, 33)? When will Jesus receive the throne (Matt. 25:31; Dan. 7:13, 14)?

6. Future Glory.—What is meant by the "throne of his glory?" Will the future temple exceed the one built by Solomon (Isa. 60:13; Haggai 2:6-9)? What are some of the features of Christ's reign?

7. Principal Features of the Covenant.—1, God will appoint a place for Israel; 2, he will plant them; 3, they shall move no more; 4, be afflicted no more; 5, the Lord will make David an house; 6, set up David's seed after him; 7, establish his throne and his kingdom forever, in the presence of David.

ARGOS BIBLE CONFERENCE

The church of Argos, Indiana, have just closed one of its most successful meetings in its history. The conference opened on Wednesday, August 9, and continued over Lord's day, August 13. The spirit of Christ was manifest by all, and it was a real delight to be at the services.

Evangelist C. C. Maple conducted the evening services along evangelistic lines, with the result that three came out on the Lord's side with more to follow. The evening services are being continued at this writing, and will close August 22.

Sister Clara Chaffee, of Chicago, was present during the entire session, and assisted in the devotional services, and also gave us several interesting Bible studies.

The daily children's service at 1:30 p. m. in charge of Sister Lydia Railsback, of South Bend, was a very interesting feature, and will continue all this week.

Bro. R. C. Railsback had charge of the social meetings. Bro. O. M. Railsback, of the Indiana State University, led the song service.

It was the purpose of this conference to serve the local church more than to reach people outside of Argos. Several, however, accepted the invitation, and came from a distance to meet with us. All who came to Argos find a welcome, and we invite all to return again.

We appreciate the presence and assistance of all who came to help make these meetings a success, and we trust that the lessons and sermons have been a blessing to those who came from a distance, as they have been to us. Brethren were present from South Bend, Chicago, Plymouth, South Whitley, Knox, Burr Oak, Huntington, Tyner, Whiting, Nappanee and Bourbon.

H. V. Reed was to have been in Chicago at this time, but his plans were changed, and his visit will come later.

The local atendance was good, and weather ideal. The spirit of the Lord was present, and the church has gained higher ground.

Later

Brother Maple baptized six on Lord's day afternoon, August 20. Elder Frank Day, of the Blessed Hope Church, of Chicago, assisted with the services over the last Lord's day. We raised for all purposes in connection with the meeting about $150.00. The Holy Spirit has led us on in our work at this time for which we praise the Lord. MRS. FRANK BOGGS, Sec.

TRUTH

"The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon him; to all that call upon hi min truth" (Psa. 145: 18).

What is truth? That which is opposed to falsehood. Christ said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life" (John 14:6). And he also said to the Jews which believed on him, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed. And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" (John 8:31, 32). Christ taught that he was the truth, that he was the Son of God, and should abide forever, and whosoever he made free, should be free indeed (verse 36). Paul says, "I speak the truth in Christ, and lie not" (1 Tim. 2:7; Rom. 9:1). Then if we believe the word that Paul "spake and wrote," then we believe the truth, and become a disciple of Christ, and are free indeed. Free from what? Free from sin, and are become servants to God. The fruit of the truth is holiness, and the end is everlasting life (Rom. 6:22).

If we are to obtain the fruits of truth, we must follow our leader. He died unto sin, but liveth unto God. We too must die unto sin. How can we die unto sin? By being baptized into Christ "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?". His death frees all from sin that believe and obey the truth. He was a sinless being; we are not. He died that we might be freed from sin. Our only hope is in believing that Christ died for our sins; and was raised from the dead, by the power of God, for our justification (Rom. 4:25). Meaning acquittal; as all that believe in Christ are justified from all things from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses (Acts 13:39). By favor or grace (Rom. 3:24), by faith (Rom. 3:28), by his blood (Rom. 5:9), by the name of the Lord Jesus (1 Cor. 6:11), by works (James 2:24).

Forgiveness: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him" (Isa. 55:7). John baptized for the remission of sins (Mark 1:4; Luke 24:47; Acts 2: 38).

Absolution: Deliverance from the consequences of sin. Truth is the facts in the case: clean, pure, frank, honest, true, sincere; and scriptural truth is eternal. And it is only by believing and obeying God's most holy truth, that mortal man can reap the greatest harvest ever promised to mankind—"Eternal Life."

THOUGHTS FOR SKEPTICS

If the Bible is not a good rule of life, why not provide us with a better one? We have "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself;" and "All things whatsoever ye desire that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," in the Bible. Now if you have anything better produce it, or else stop finding fault with the Bible.

The idea that nothing is to be taken on trust, is a favorite one with many, and is as absurd as other infidel arguments. Infidels talk of the Bible, but how much have they read of it? They talk of the Koran, the Shasters, and a lot of other heathenish trash, which they could not read a page of to save their lives. They argue about astronomy, when they do not know enough to calculate an eclipse of the moon; they disprove the Bible by geology, of which they know nothing except what some one of a dozen wrangling geologists has told them; they say the New Testament was compiled by the council of Nice, when all history shows that that council never had anything whatever to do with the matter; they quote learnedly from authors which they never saw, and could not read if they should see them; and then they pretend that they cannot be humbugged by pious cant, and that they receive nothing without due investigation.

By this rule they would not ride in a steamboat till they could build an engine; would not believe the time shown by a watch, until they knew how to make one; would not call a doctor to a croupy child till they had explored the whole domain of medicine with its "ologies" and "pathies;" would not send a telegram until they understood telegraphy; would not do anything till they knew everything.

On a thousand occasions in common life we are forced to consult those who are honest, truthful, and experienced in matters with which we are unacquainted. We do not surrender our judgment to them, but our judgment tells us that their opinion and their experience is worth our careful consideration. In nine-tenths of the affairs of life, we depend for guidance at the first, upon those who are better informed than ourselves. To do otherwise would be accounted folly in business; why is it less foolish in matters of religion? Surely prejudice is a poor guide; and a candid weighing of the facts in common life would silence many of the arguments of which infidelity boasts.—Sel.

The Restitution

FOUNDED IN A. D. 1852

A WEEKLY PAPER DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF

The inspiration of the Bible (2 Tim. 3.16, 16) and the restitution of all things foretold by the spirit-guided prophets (2 Pet. 1:21; Acts 3:21). As a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27) at the return of Christ (Luke 19:12-15), who will be King of kings (Rev. 19:16), and the saints coadjutors with Him in the government of the nations (Rev. 2:26), the restoration of Israel as a nation (Ezek. 37); the literal resurrection of the dead (John 11:23, 25); the immortalization of the righteous (1 Cor. 15:52-58); the final destruction of the wicked (Psa. 37:10, 20); and eternal life only through Christ, the Life-Giver (John 3:16, Rom. 6:23). Also an understanding of (Rom. 10:14-17) and belief in the gospel (Rom. 1:16), repentance (Luke 13: 3), and obedience by baptism into the name of Jesus Christ, as prerequisites to the remission of sins (Acts 2:38), followed by a life of growth in knowledge, grace and holiness, in order to final salvation (2 Pet. 1: 3:18); and all other truths of "the things concerning the Kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12; 28:23, 31). GIRD ON THE WHOLE ARMOR

By S. ROXANA WINCE

Know we not that we are traitors,
  Who go out against the foe,
With God's sword not in our scabbard,
  And no arrow strung to bow?

God goes with us into battle,
  When we take with us his Word,
Never else consents to lead us,
  Over Jordan's swollen flood.

Never gives the ripened harvest,
  To the sickle left at home,
Never slays the proud Goliaths,
  If we put Saul's armor on.

SEEKING THE TRUTH

John: Tom, I would like to know how to become a citizen of God's kingdom; for I have decided that the kingdom will be a government set up by Christ when he comes.

Tom: Very well. You knew that we have a law that when an alien comes to this country that to become a citizen he must reside here for a number of years, take out naturalization papers, prove a good character, renounce his allegance to his former government, etc. This is the way by which an alien may become a citizen of the United States. Now, in the Bible we find a way by which we may become citizens of God's kingdom, and no one can change that way. In John 3:5 Jesus says: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." Here you see we must be born of water. This life begins with the fleshy birth; the Christian life with the birth of water, and eternal life with the birth of the Spirit. The following references will show that the water birth is preceded by a belief of the gospel, the things concerning the kingdom of God and name of Jesus Christ: Mar. 16:15, 16; Math. 28:19; Acts 8:12. Thus qualified, baptism makes us children of God. In Gal. 3:26-29 we read: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." In this passage Paul says, "If ye are Christ's," that is, Christ's disciples, ye are heirs, etc. Thus we see that by faith and baptism (birth of water) we become Christ's disciples. Now turning to Matt. 5.1, 2 we learn that the sermon on the mount was given to his disciples, those who had started this race. And in Matt. 5.20 he says to them: "For I say unto you, that except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kindom of heaven." So you see we must do better than they did, although they boasted of their righteousness. In Matt. 23: 23 we find these words: Woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrits; for ye pay tithe of mint and arise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

Now, if we would exceed them in righteousness we too must pay our dues and then not neglect judgment, mercy and faith. In Matt. 16:19 we learn that Christ gave the keys of the kingdom to Peter, and in 2 Pet. 1:5-11 we find how he uses them: "And beside this, giving all diligence add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience Godliness; and to Godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness love. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall. For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." These are the steps we must take to reach the kingdom.

Now, coming back to John 3:5 we learn that we must be born of Spirit. In Genesis we find that God's law is that everything after its own kind, so in order to be born of the Spirit we must first be begotten of the Spirit. James says: "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth." And in Jno. 6:63 we learn that the word is spirit. And in Luke 8:11 we learn that the word is the good seed, the seed that brings the Spirit birth. Turning to Rom. 8:11 we find these words: "But if the Spirit (Word, Seed) of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies (bring to Spirit birth) by his Spirit (Word, Seed) that dwelleth in you."

Now, John, we should be very careful that we have the pure word, seed, so that in the morning of the first resurrection we may be born of the Spirit. In Col. 1:15, 18, we learn that Christ was the first to be born of the Spirit, raised from the dead. And in I Cor. 15 we learn that we, the body of Christ, will in due time be born, and bear the image of the life-giving Spirit. This is the only way that I can find in the Bible to get into the kingdom of God. J. H. ANDERSON.

"I DON'T LIKE PROFESSIONS"

This is the reason which many give for not acknowledging Christ. They say, when urged upon the point, that they "don't like professions." A strange reason this for not obeying the express command of the divine Savior. What if they do not like professions, do they equally dislike obeying commands? If so, they had better say, "I don't like obedience to the commands of God." But they profess to be well disposed to obey; it is only to professing that they object. Well, then, let them obey all the precepts which they find in the Bible, and we will not trouble them about a profession. Why should we? In that case, they will obey the precept which enjoins a profession; they will do the thing appointed "in remembrance" of Christ.

But "I don't like professions." And who does like mere professions? Who ever contended in favor of a man's professing to have what he has not? Professions are very different from mere professions. Suppose a person has what he professes to have, what then? What is the objection to a profession in that case? I see none. If a man loves the Lord Jesus, I can see no harm in professing or declaring his attachment to him. It is very natural to declare it. We profess attachment to others—to relatives, friends, benefactors, pastors, civil rulers—why not to Christ? How does his being the subject of the profession constitute such an objection to it? Is he the only being to whom we may not profess attachment?

"Don't like professions?" Why, yes, they do. Professions of friendship, of patriotism, and of loyalty, they like. Why not of religion? Why should not religion be professed as well as other things? Are attachment to the gospel, love to Christ, regard for the authority of Jehovah, and adherence to his government, the only things never to be professed?

I do not see any objection to professions, but I see propriety and utility in them, even if it were optional with us to make them or not. If it were left to our choice, it strikes me we ought to choose to profess love and obedience to Christ. But suppose it is required, does not that alter the case? Will these persons say they do not like what God requires? And does he not require a profession? His inspired apostle twice exhorts Christians to "hold fast their profession." Does not that imply that it is made, and ought to be made? How is a person to hold on to that of which he has never taken hold? Is not the public confession of Christ required when it is made a condition of salvation? "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved" (Rom. 10:9). Does not divine authority require it, when to the doing of it is made one of the most precious promises in the whole Bible? "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven." Is not that duty, against the omission of which such a threatening lies as this: "But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 10:32, 33). It is very plain that God requires professions, though some men do not like them.

"You don't like professions." Then Joshua, a man that followed the Lord fully, falls under your censure, for he professed the service of God. "As for me and my house," said he, "we will serve the Lord." Are we to think the worse of him for this? Some ask what is the use of a profession. If they will observe what followed Joshua's profession, they will see the use of it. They will see that it brought out all Israel. "We will also serve the Lord," said they; and they entered that day into a covenant to serve him. Nor did their practice belie their profession; for it is recorded that "Israel served the Lord all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that overlived Joshua." So much for a profession. It is agreed on all hands that that professing generation, in piety and devotion to God, surpassed any other during the national existence of Israel.

We read in 1 Tim. 2:10, of certain things which are said to become "women professing godliness." It would seem from this, to be the duty of women to profess godliness. And if of women, of men also, I suppose. What case of real subjection to the gospel of Christ do we read of, which was not also a case of "professed subjection" to it? Paul, in 2 Cor. 9:13, speaks of some who glorified God for the "professed subjection" of others unto the gospel of Christ. It appears then that God is glorified by these professions. And I should presume, from certain passages in the Bible, that he is not glorified when a profession is withheld. There were, in primitive times, some who did not like professions. It is no new thing not to like professions. In John 12:42, 43, we read, that "among the chief rulers many believed on him, but," as they did not like professions, "because of the Pharisees they did not confess him; for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." It is no honorable mention which is intended to be made of another, of whom it is said that he was "a disciple of Jesus, but secretly, for fear of the Jews" (John 19:38). Fear made him decline a profession for a time; but at length he came out openly on the side of Christ, and besought Pilate for the body of Jesus.

If they who say they do not like professions, mean that they do not like false, or loud, or ostentatious, or barely verbal professions, let them say so, and we will agree with them; but let them not mean this and say, without qualification, they "don't like professions." It is truly strange, because some now, as in apostolic times, "profess that they know God, but in works deny him," that others will never profess to know him. Because men have professed friendship, and have proved no friends, therefore they will not only not profess friendship, but they will abstain from certain acts and expressions of friendship because they involve a profession of it. It is a pity that men who are going to give an account of themselves to God, should reason and act thus.

Well, they must do as they please; but of one thing I am sure. The hour is coming when, however they may now dislike professions, they will like them. They may not now like to confess Christ before men, but they will then like to have Christ confess them before his Father. They may not like to call him now the beloved of their souls, but they will like to have him call them, on that day, the blessed of his Father.—W. N.

TWO EXTREMES REFUTED

No. 1

It is an old saying, that extreme begets extreme; and in our day it would seem to the observer to be the fact. The people called Second Adventists believe and teach that there are to be none in the kingdom of God, but those who have in this and preceding ages been true servants of God; while those who accept the teaching of Mr. Charles T. Russell teach that the great mass of the human family will be admitted into the kingdom for a trial that they may gain eternal life, and an eternal inheritance in that kingdom. The Adventists teach that all who have ever lived will be resurrected from death, and the righteous separated from the wicked to go into everlasting life; while the wicked are all destroyed. Mr. Russell also teaches a universal resurrection, but draws from John 5:28, 29 the idea that those who have done evil are raised for judgment, and that the judgment is a trial. Mr. Russell argues that the word translated "damnation" in our version means judgment. The Greek word is Kriseos (Jno. 5:29), and we find it has various shades of meaning, one being judgment, another condemnation. We give a few examples:

Rom. 14:2: "Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation."

1 Cor. 11:29: "For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself."

1 Tim. 5:12: "The younger widows have damnation, because they have lost their first love."

Matt. 23:33: "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell."

These and many other texts which could be quoted show very clearly that the word krisis does not always mean trial; for God will not give those who resist his power, eat and drink the communion unworthily, have lost their first love, and cannot escape the damnation of Gehenna, a future trial or probation; but if he did then he would also give Judas the same chance, and pastor Russell says he will not do that.

John 5:28, 29 only speaks of those who have done evil as being raised to damnation, and if that is proof that one evil doer will have a trial that he may gain eternal life, it also proves the same for all of them, and that gives Judas with every other reprobate, a chance. The passages which speak of the resurrections of wicked people are so given that they show their doom is sealed at their resurrection.

Dan. 12:2: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

Acts 24:15: "And have hope toward God, which they, themselves allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."

Rev. 20:12-15: "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God: and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

To recapitulate: "shame and everlasting contempt" would be strange language to express the eternal condition of any who are eternally held in favor! That the "unjust" will only be punished at the day of judgment is declared by Peter (2 Epis. 2:9); for his hope perisheth, and he is an abomination to the just (God) as well as to the just man (Prov. 11:7; 29:27). "The dead" of Rev. 20 are judged by "books" that were in existence at their resurrection, and they must therefore have been written before they died, or while they were in death, and records their past life. Those whose names were not found in the book of life were cast into the lake of fire, which we are told "is the second death." It would be even worse than folly to assert that second death is an opportunity to gain eternal life. The advocates of post-resurrection probation cannot give one text that says any will be raised to trial, or future probation, because it is not in the Bible. There are only two classes raised according to the word, "those who have done good, and those who have done evil," "the just and unjust," and "those whose names are in the book of life, those whose names are not there. If, as some quote Paul, God "will have all men to be saved, (from Adamic death) and come unto a knowledge of the truth, that salvation will be not for probation, but "damnation,' "second death," and "everlasting contempt." If, as some say, God is the Savior of all men (from Adamic death); he has not the special salvation for any but believers: for all others are doomed to "second death," "damnation," and "everlasting contempt." Again, if God is to have the ransom testified in due time to all, as some teach, and the due time is after resurrection, it will be of no benefit to them; for they are raised to "condemnation," "second death," and "everlasting contempt." Then Mr. Russell's theory is not a Bible doctrine, but mere speculation and guess work.

But some one may ask, "Why bring all men to a knowledge of the truth, by the testimony of the ransom, if it will do them no good?" That is a sensible question, and we believe is to the point. But does the Bible teach that God will have all men to be saved from Adamic death, and come unto a knowledge of the truth? It does not say it. Bible faith should be stated in Bible language, that belief cannot be so stated; therefore it is not a Bible doctrine. Lexicons and most translations make Paul say, "God desires that all men should be saved, and come unto a knowledge of the truth," and "Jesus gave himself a ransom for all; a testimony in its season." But some one may ask, "If God desires that all men should be saved, will he not save them?" He willeth (desireth) not that any should perish; yet he says the wicked shall perish. Those who perish will not be saved, therefore all men will not be saved. Will all men come into a knowledge of the truth? "For as many as have sinned without law shall perish without law" (Rom. 2:12). If they perish without law, will they ever know of the law under which they lived? And if they should be brought to a knowledge of the law of their dispensation, would they perish without law? Not a bit of it; for they would have law given them, and must be judged by it. Then none will be resurrected to a future trial, or probation; and if there is a future probation after Jesus comes, it must be for others than resurrected people.

Lesson IX.

The Coming of Jesus

Memory Text

"Behold, I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown" (Rev. 3:11).

1. "Oh, that my words were now written! Oh, that they were printed in a book!

2. "That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever!

3. "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth.

4. "And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God" (Job 19:23-26).

5. "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works" (Matt. 16:27).

6. "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's and of the holy angels" (Luke 9:26).

7. "But I would not have you ignorant brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope.

8. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

9. "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep.

10. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first.

11. "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thess. 4:13-17).

12. "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory" (Matt. 23:30).

13. "Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh" (Matt. 24:44).

14. "And behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22:12).

15. "He will come again" (Jno. 14:3).

Practical Truths

The greatest event and the one of the most importance in the history of the whole world is the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. The resurrection, the setting up of the kingdom, the realization of our hope and the blessing of the nations of the world, all depend upon his coming. Whether we sleep in the grave or are alive when he comes is not of so much moment to us, as to be prepared. All the rewards will be given then (Matt. 16:27). Let us strive to be ready. In the study of every subject let our faith and hope be expressed in Bible language.

Notes on the Lesson

I Come Quickly.—These are the words of Jesus and admonish us to be ready, for he will come before many are ready.

1. Printed in a Book.—It is probable Job had reference to printing upon parchment with a pen. Job lived about the time of Abraham Writing was therefore in use at an early date. Note also how far in the past man has cherished the hope of the coming Redeemer. Jude tells us that even Enoch, the seventh from Adam, predicted the coming of Christ with all his saints.

3. He Shall Stand at the Latter Day Upon the Earth.—The earth and not heaven is the place upon which Jesus or the Redeemer is to stand, when he returns.

5. Then He Shall Reward Every Man.—Jesus has not forgotten his people, but assures us that the reward will be given when he comes.

6. Be Ashamed.—Jesus intends that his followers shall own and bear his name. His commendation of the church at Philadelphia was that they had kept his word and not denied his name. Paul tells us he is not ashamed of the gospel, also that he took pleasure in reproaches for Christ's sake (2 Cor. 1:16).

Glory.—When Jesus comes there will be a glory the world has never witnessed before. It will be a triple glory—that of God, angels and Jesus. This glory seems to indicate a brightness, as was shown by Jesus on the mount of transfiguration. Compare Matt. 16:2, with 2 Pet. 1:16-18.

8. Sleep in Jesus.—Those who have died in the Lord are represented as asleep, from which sleep they will be wakened by the voice of the chief angel and the sounding of the seventh trump.

9. Alive and Remain.—There will be some of God's children alive when Jesus comes; others will be asleep or dead; both classes will be called to meet him.

11. To Meet the Lord.—Happy are those who will be among that number (Zech. 14:4, 5). They shall inherit the kingdom forever (Dan. 7:27).

12. The Sign of the Son of Man.—There has been much speculation as to what this sign will be, and although we may not now know, yet all who look upon it will certainly understand it when it appears.

13. Be Ye Also Ready.—What an important command! Our knowledge, our professions, and our theories will amount to nothing unless we carry out in our lives the principles of righteousness and thus be ready when he comes.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. The Promised Return.—Did Jesus ever promise to return to the earth? Where may such promises be found (John 14:3, 18, 28; Acts 1:11; 3:20)? Did Jesus come at the destruction of Jerusalem? Does he come to us at death?

2. Rewards Given Then.—Where in our lesson are we taught that the rewards are to be given when Jesus comes? Which paragraph teaches that the dead will then be raised? What is the meaning of the word "recompense?" When does Jesus say we shall be recompensed (Luke 14:14)? Where in our lesson do we learn that Jesus brings his reward with him? What is his reward (Jno. 6:27, 33)?

3. The Manner of His Coming.—Will his coming be personal; i. e.: in his own person, or will he send a representative? Will his coming be visible? Will there be a secret coming and an open coming? Are there two comings or two stages of one coming indicated by coming "with" and coming "for" his people? Will his coming be attended with brightness or glory? Will his coming be sudden or gradual? What is said about clouds in connection with his coming? Fire? (2 Thess. 1:7, 8).

4. Mention some of the signs that indicate that his coming is near. (See Matt. 24:29-34; 2 Tim. 3:1-5; Dan. 12:4, 10; Nahum 2:3-5; Jas. 5:1-7).

5. Object of His Coming.—Why should Jesus return to the earth? Where do we learn that he will raise the dead when he comes? When will he take his kingdom? After his return will he always remain on the earth? Over whom will Jesus reign? Is the object of the coming of Jesus, and the seeting up of his kingdom, to bless all nations?

6. Prominence of this Doctrine.—Is the coming of Messiah taught in the Old Testament? Do we find frequent mention of the second coming of Jesus in the New Testament? Note—It is said one word in every thirty in the New Testament refers to this subject.

7. Necessary Preparation.—Inthe 13th paragraph of our lesson what does Jesus say to us? Have we made the necessary preparation to meet him? What must we do to be saved? Can we join with John (Rev. 22:20) in saying from the heart "Even so, come Lord Jesus?"

By S. ROXANA WINCE

"He that believeth on me, the works that I do, shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do" (John 14:12).

To what "works" did Jesus refer, if not to the preaching of the glad tidings of the kingdom? Surely there is no other work than this, in which they could do greater things than even Jesus had done. The time allotted to him for his ministry was very brief—some writers making it but a single year, because, as the anti-typical Lamb, his life of service must accord in length with the life of the Lamb offered in type.

But even if it were three years, as others claim, how much less he could do, than one who has three score years at his disposal. Then the territory in which he worked was circumscribed. He could not go to the ends of the world as we can. There was no printing presses then, no tracts, no printed Bibles, no good papers to carry the glad tidings of the kingdom into foreign lands. His disciples must do all this themselves. So the Lord went away and "left to every man his work."

The miracle of the multiplication of the barley leaves and the fishes was only a prophecy, of what the followers of Jesus would do in the multiplication of the bread of life. Follow them. They had forsaken Jesus, in his last hours. They had gone back to their nets when they imagined that all their hopes for the redemption of Israel had perished with the buried Christ. But after his resurrection and ascension, what then?

A shout tof triumph! "The Lord is coming back again! Let us away to our work!" There was the gathering at pentecost, the choosing of Mathias, the miraculous endowment of each with power to speak languages they had never learned, the eloquent sermon of Peter, their imprisonment, the conversion and baptism of thousands, a common sharing of goods, death to the liars, multitudes more added to the church, another imprisonment and escape, sermons by Peter and Stephen, the death of Stephen and the conversion of Paul, Missions into Asia, Africa, Greece, Rome, Spain and the British Isles, the founding of churches everywhere, bitter persecuting, and the giving up of the lives of nearly every one of the apostles for Jesus' sake, and also of the lives of many of their immediate followers. And yet they hold fast to their faith, just as you hold fast to it now, dear Ettie Fry! The converts of Paul at Rome fled to the fastnesses of the Alps, and stood up there for the truth, for a thousand years, hurling defiance against the papal anti-Christ, and speeding on the gospel story through all parts of Europe, though at times nearly annihilated. Then the reformation came, and with it the printing press and an open, unchained Bible and with these, other days of awful persecution. But the loaves of truth were multiplying fast and were being handed just as fast to the eager, waiting multitudes. And better and better grew the world. Knowledge increased and invention went on. Happy in having the word of God, the people, whom John saw standing on the glassy sea, began to sing of their victory over Rome. And what a victory it was for England!

Translations of the Bible had become so frequent that even little children could sometimes manage to get a copy. Missionary effort began, Bible societies were formed, Moffat went to Africa and William Munson to China, but what were their loaves among so many millions? Yet the loaves were broken and thousands were fed.

William Carey was only an ignorant shoemaker, but like the little lad of Galilee, he had something in his basket that God could use, and that "greater work to do, that Jesus bequeathed to his followers. He must go to India. He must found schools, he must teach the people new trades, and a God-given code of morals, he must translate the Bible into twenty-four languages and dialects of India.

And so that "greater work,'" that Jesus dreamed of, has come down to us, we have been chosen of him to proclaim the nearness of his advent. He has set us as watchers on the walls of time. We must not forget our mission, the blood of men will cry out against us if we do. They must be warned. And to warn them our paper must live, and to keep it alive we must keep on giving. We must not relax our efforts until the linotype is really ours, and, handed over to God, and not even then: after that comes our part of that "greater work." The Restitution must be filled to the brim with the bread of life and must go into thousands of homes.

I shall not stop writing when these linotype articles are no longer needed, for if Ethel, 11 years old, Alvin Ezell, 8; Madeline Byers, 8; Francis Byers, 6; Evelyn Byers, 5; Dora, 4; and Everett, 2; can cheerfully give their much priced savings to Jesus, why should we falter? Glad are we that there are boys close at hand with their baskets, when hungry ones are to be fed, and little girls, too. It stirs us up to keep our baskets full. God bless the boys and girls!

NEBRASKA CONFERENCE REPORT

A goodly number of the brethren in Nebraska met in annual conference at Moorefield, August 26 to September 5. In all there was an enrollment of about 70, which includes those who came for a part of the time only. Brother Adams was our only speaker. Bro. J. H. Anderson's services could have been obtained, but at the last we found circumstances would prevent his reaching us until Tuesday. As he is so far away and expenses very high, we decided we would deny ourselves the pleasure of his being with us, and put the money in the work some other way. It was not long before an opening for such use presented itself. A contribution for a sister was taken up from the brethren, the amount was doubled from the conference fund, and forwarded to her. While we regret not having the benefit of Brother Anderson's sermons we feel our use of some of the money has God's blessing.

Having but one speaker the conference developed itself into a conference more nearly fitting the Bible example of such a meeting than any we have atended. Many of the meetings were a true conferring together of those interested in the cause of truth and personal development. We pray that the lessons learned may bring forth their fruitage of better men and women, who shall be worthy of personal association with the Savior and King when he comes.

In the business meetings organization was discussed at some length, and we feel sure that we understand this subject better than ever before. The following motions were carried regarding this subject:

Motion made by Brother Newell and seconded by Brother Adams, to repeal the constitution and by-laws of the conference.

Remarks as follows:

Brother Newell gave as his reason for the motion, that we have not lived up to the constitution.

Brother Adams gave a talk to the effect that the conferences, as they are organized are unscriptural. He outlined what a true conference is and its purposes as follows:

A conference is not an organization but a conferring together of the membership of the church. The purposes, first, to renew and keep alive fellowship, and second, to arrange the work and plan for its direction during the year. Sister Le Crone suggested that we vote the constitution and bylaws away and make new as we need them from year to year.

Brother Adams declared that making a constitution was going back to Rome. Also that when the meeting came to an end there was no conference in existence. The officers simply carry out the work given them to do.

Vote was taken on Brother Newell's motion, which was carried. Motion made and carried that each local congregation vote their preference for officers to be elected at each annual conference, which are President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, and the State Secretary cast their vote at conference.

Motion made and carried that each congregation shall choose its own collector.

Motion made and carried that each collector collect a portion of the Evangelist money each month and send it to the state treasurer.

Motion made and carried that each collector collect not less than 10c from each member and send it to the state treasurer for the emergency fund.

Motion made and carried that the treasurer keep an itemized account of monies received and payed out, and make a quarterly report to the President.

Motion made and carried that each collector make a list of subscriptions immediately after conference and send it to the President and at the end of the year make a final report to the conference.

Motion made and carried that we adopt the rule that it shall be the duty of each collector to collect from each man $1.00 and from each woman 50c to be used in paying the expenses of the conference meeting.

The following were chosen to carry on the work of spreading the gospel during the coming year:

M. D. Newell, Blair Nebr., President.
P. E. Brown, Dannebrough, Nebr., Vice-President.
Alla King, Palmer, Nebr., Secretary.
Carrie Free, Blair, Nebr., Treasurer.

Almus Adams was chosen evangelist. Motion made and carried that Brother Adams be paid $1,00 and expenses for the following year's work.

The Berean work was organized by choosing the following officers:

Russell Zeller, Palmer, Nebr., President.
Alla King, Palmer, Nebr., Vice-President.
Lulu Pickering, Freedom, Nebr., Secretary.
Esther Larson, Avery, Nebr., Treasurer.

Brother Adams reported his work for the year as follows.

Sermons, 250.
Baptisms, 44.
Churches set in order, 2.
Funerals conducted, 1.

Salary	$840.00
Expenses	122.18
Total due	$962.18

At the close of the meeting it was found that enough money was on hand to pay off all indebtedness and we begin the new year clear of all debts. Thus closes another year in the Master's service. May the good we have done rebound more and more to his honor and glory, and the mistakes we have made be nullified in their results that the cause of truth be not hindered, and may we cling closer to his word in the future, is our prayer.

ALLA KING.

SPIRITUAL BLESSINGS

What is a worldly blessing? Anything that makes one happy, or prosperous; to praise; to wish good to come to you. What is a "Spiritual blessing?" Divine favor: to consecrate, to glorify, to adore, to magnify. God said that Abram should be a blessing (Gen. 12:2). How was Abram to be a blessing? He should be the means of conveying blessedness.

First, To his posterity, who should be blessed for his sake?

Second, To his friends and servants, who should be blessed by his instruction, and example.

Third, To all the world, by being the one through whom the seed should be a pattern of faith and holiness. When God made his "Covenant Promise" to Abram, he changed his name to Abraham, which means, "father of a great multitude," and said to him: "A father of many nations have I made thee. And I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee" (Gen. 17:5, 8). Abraham believed God, and he counted it to him for righteousness, and he was called the "Friend of God" (Gen. 15:6; Rom. 4:3; Gal. 3:6; Jam. 2:23).

This blessing of Abraham came from God, and was a "spiritual blessing," for mankind cannot receive such a blessing only through God. Man in this present life is not born of the spirit; therefore he is unable to grant a "spiritual blessing" to anyone. But if he becomes worthy of a resurrection; then he will be born of the spirit, become a spiritual being, and can then give a spiritual blessing for he will have the same power conferred on him that Christ now has.

Does God grant us any "spiritual blessings" in this life? Yes. If we get out from under the law, and are led by the spirit, we will do the works of the spirit; and receive the fruit of the spirit, which is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law (Gal. 5:22). If we follow the works of the flesh, we cannot do the works of the spirit; and therefore cannot receive any "spiritual blessing." But if we crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts, and live and walk in the Spirit, we will of the spirit reap life everlasting. This is the "spiritual blessing" that we receive at the resurrection birth (Gal. 5:24, 25, 6:8).

Love is:

First, a natural passion, inclining us to delight in an object.

Second, that which causes us to enjoy an interest in God's favor, and communion with him as our chief good, and happiness; and disposes us to do good to all, especially to such as we esteem to be the brethren in Christ. God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Who has this eternal life? Those that believe in the only begotten Son of God. The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord (John 3:16, 36; Rom. 6:23; 1 John 5:11, 12, 13). This class receives a "spiritual blessing." What of those that do not believe? They will not accept of God's love and are lost forever.

Joy is gladness: to be very happy. O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth (Psa. 67:4). This, when it comes to pass, will be an actual "spiritual blessing." But to those that believe, it is now a "joyful blessing." Jesus, for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despised the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God (Heb. 12:2).

Peace is quiet. The Lord will bless his people with peace, and he shall speak peace unto the heathen; and his dominion shall be from the river even to the ends of the earth (Psa. 29:11; Zech. 9:10). We have peace with God through Christ. To be spiritually minded is life and peace (Rom. 5:1, 8:6, 14-17). Let the peace of God rule in your hearts (Col. 3:15). Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord (Heb. 12:14).

Long suffering. The long suffering of the Lord is salvation to us. The long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah while the ark was a preparing (2 Pet. 3:15; Pet. 3:20).

Gentleness. Softness of manners. Thy gentleness hath made me great (Psa. 18:35). The servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach: patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves (2 Tim. 2:24).

Goodness. Virtue, kind acts, pious. Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men (Psa. 107:8, 15, 21, 31. The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance. Behold the goodness, and severity of God; on them which fell, severity: but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness: otherwise thou also shalt be cut off (Rom. 2:4; 11:22).

Faith. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen (Heb. 11:1). Trust is called faith; because it relies upon the truth of a promise. We are justified by faith. The just shall live by faith (Rom. 5:1; Gal. 2:20; 3:11, 24).

Meekness. Mild and gentle of temper; a temper of mind that is not easily provoked, and suffers injuries without desire of revenge, and quietly submits to the will of God. Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness (1 Cor. 4:20)? I, Paul, myself, bessch you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ (2 Cor. 10:1). Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear (1 Pet. 3:15; Gal. 6:1; Eph. 4:2; Col. 3:12; Tim. 6:11).

Temperance. Moderation, in the indulgence of the natural appetites and passions, calm, cool, mild. "Paul, before Felix, reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come." Felix trembled (Acts 24:25). Peter in his lesson in addition has temperance the fourth in the list of the fruitful things that make one not barren in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ (2 Pet. 1:6).

All these things, that are the fruit of the Spirit, are essential, to place one in relation to God, in such a way and manner, that he may receive a blessing in doing these things, by a greater knowledge of God's plan of salvation; and it brings such a peace to the mind, that the works of the flesh are very unpleasant to the one striving for righteousness. And what joy it brings to the one that has obeyed! For it purifies the soul through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren. See that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently (1 Pet. 1:22). And it brings one in close relation to the "Life-giver" who suffered and became the Author of eternal salvation unto all of them that obey him (Heb. 5:9). "All that obey him" will come forth at the resurrection in an immortal state, having received the greatest "spiritual blessing," that man can receive.

INSTRUCTIONS IN THE DEVOTIONAL LIFE

Need of Systematic Devotion

Whatever books may be used in private devotion, the soul must do a great deal of work for itself. My object, in these "Instructions," is to show you how to do this work.

Devotional books are useful in their way. (1) As a help in beginning prayer, when we feel cold and dry. (2) As a test of our own state of heart. For instance: when we read of holy men—not David only—saying: "My sins have taken such hold upon me, that I am not able to look up; yea, they are more in number than the hairs of my head," it may lead us to ask, if we have ever felt sin in this way; and if not, whether there is not something wrong in our religion. Or again, as we read the prayers of holy men who seem, like John, to be "lying on Jesus' bosom," and we know that there is no such joy and peace in our hearts, it may make us think, what deficiency is there in our religion?

But if any books, however good, come to be the whole of your private devotions, you will go wrong. When our Lord had raised Jairus' daughter, "He commanded that something should be given her to eat." And thus he commits the young Communicant to the Church, to be fed and nourished. Your soul needs feeding, if it has been quickened into life. But this cannot be done by mere reading of devotional books. You must learn to read the Bible for yourself; to pray for yourself. In these days, when so many beautiful "Meditations" are published, there is great danger of using them, instead of going through the hard, tough work of prayer and meditation and Bible-reading, for ourselves. None of them, however beautiful, will do instead of our own efforts, however poor those efforts may be. "In all labor. there is profit." Our souls want bracing.

It is better to run the risk of making mistakes, than to depend on classes, lectures, and the devotional books, and never bring your own spirit to bear on your Bible-reading, meditation, etc., which is the habit of the present day. Religious books are cramping, if we depend too much upon them. There is danger of becoming unreal—of saying what this or that holy man felt—not what we ourselves feel. You must fight your own battle. No lectures or books will do instead of individual grappling with difficulties.

Begin by making a plan of devotion for yourself. You may be able to throw it aside, some day; but is is essential at first. Write it down.

You will never fully understand Christian liberty, unless you have learnt something of Christian bondage. You may learn the liberty first, and the bondage afterwards: but you must learn both. "So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty" (James 2:12. The day is near, when this life's opportunities will be over; when, as we have sown, we shall reap; as we have trained ourselves, we shall appear before God, one by one (Rom. 14:10-12).

The exact plan, in itself, may be of little importance. No plan, however perfect, will take you into the kingdom, if your heart is not given to God. No plan, however bad, will ruin you, if your heart is right with God. But it is infinitely important to keep in mind the grand principle of life: "Seek first the kingdom of God." And this you cannot do, unless—to some extent—you live by rule.

All our life long, we must honor God, by giving him the first place in our arrangements for every day: and in order to do this—at least in the earlier stages of the Christian life, until habits of devotion are thoroughly formed—we need the help of rules in detail.

"Seek first the kingdom of God." This is to be our guiding principle. And this, in its application to daily life, will be: so far as possible, in arranging our occupations and pleasures, (for both may be committed to God), to consider first: What portion of the day can be, and ought to be, given to God, that we may speak to him, and listen to him?

We may fail, again and again, in trying to carry out this principle: but we must never give it up. When we have failed, we must honestly confess it, bring it to him at once, ask him to wash away the sin, and then begin the next day in a better,holier, more humble spirit.

In all your plans, then, remember the great principle on which they must be formed and carried out: "Seek first the kingdom of God."

Half our troubles come from not doing this. For instance: you go out to stay with friends, or to spend the day, and you leave it all to chance, as to what is to become of your prayers! And so—if you have learnt the value of prayer—you are miserable: you do not find the pleasure you expected, and you think you have lost your hold of God.

Now if you were just to take five minutes overnight, quietly to think: "To-morrow, I shall be called at such an hour. My train (if you are going to travel) will start at such an hour. Could I get five minutes beforehand? Yes.—Could I not get ten minutes? Yes, I think I could.—And then, at night? I shall be tired. But could I not find a few minutes for God on my journey, quietly, without anyone observing it?"

There is so much want of commonsense and planning, in our religion! Five minutes reverently spent in this way, over-night, will save you much disquiet and misery: it will often spare you the pain of wondering if you are among those who are Christians at home, and sinners elsewhere. We must be like the man of business who says: "I must hurry through this and that, to-morrow morning,—I must arrange my whole day—so as to be free at night, for that important meeting."

The same principle can be applied, with obvious modifications, to the cases of those who are obliged to be much in society, and return home late; those who are nursing sick persons, etc.

Let me now try to help you, by giving you a sketch of plans for daily devotion.

I have pressed upon you the importance of making a plan for yourself, in the devotional life. But it is difficult, just because it is so important: the world and the flesh, will hinder you; and you may be tempted to give it up in despair.

Take the plan which I suggest to you, if you have none of your own. If it suits you, use it to begin with, like corks for the swimmer. If not, alter it, seeking the help of God in doing it.

Each of you has a certain time—more or less—that you could give to prayer. Say, half an hour, here; a quarter of an hour, there; no two of you alike. How shall you divide it? How use it?

Always leave a margin, to allow for variations, for thoughts drawn out especially on some one point, etc. For instance: if you have half an hour, call it twenty-five minutes, before deciding how to divide it.

Now, what do you want to do, in this time? You want to pray; to read your Bible; to meditate. Each of these is important; each is separate.

Suppose, then, that when you rise in the morning, you at once kneel down, and yield your heart and the day before you, to God. Say to yourself: "God lives! God is giving me another day, in which to serve and love him; another day, for which I must give account!" And then—with a "Glory be to the Father," give yourself up to do, and to bear, and to learn, all that he may ask of you during the day.

If possible, there should always be three times in the day, set apart for God; not including, of course, this short act of prayer on first rising. "Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray" (Psa. 45:17)

God knows what time you have. He divides to every man severally, as he will. He gives hours to one of his children: minutes, to another; and he accepts accordingly (2 Cor. 8:12). As children in the presence of a Father, let us arrange the time at our disposal as best we can.

You will have already found out how much time you can give to God—morning, noon, and night. Write it in your note-book. Kneel down, and ask God to accept it.

In the morning, say, you have an hour; or half an hour; or twenty minutes. Divide that time between prayer and meditation, and—if you have the whole hour—Bible-reading.

At mid-day, you have half an hour; or only five minutes. Let this be given to intercession.

In the evening, you have an hour; or half an hour; or a quarter of an hour. Spend it in Bible-reading, prayer, with self-examination; and—if you have the whole hour—reading some devotional book.—G. H. W.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 68 CLEVELAND, O., OCTOBER 3, 1916. NUMBER 12

BE CAREFUL WHAT YOU SAY

In speaking of a person's faults,
Pray don't forget your own;
Remember those with homes of glass
Should seldom throw a stone.
If we have nothing else to do
Than talk of those who sin,
'Tis better to commence at home,
And from that point begin.

We have no right to judge a man
Until he's fairly tried,
Should we not like his company,
We know the world is wide.
Some may have faults—and who have not,
The old as well as young?
Perhaps we may, for aught we know,
Have fifty to their one.

I'll tell you of a better plan,
And find it works full well
To try my own defects to cure
Ere others' faults to tell;
And though I sometimes hope to be
No worse than some I know,
My own shortcomings bid me let
The faults of others go.

Then let us all, when we begin
To slander friend or foe,
Think of the harm one word may do
To those we little know;
Remember curses sometimes like
Our chickens, "roost at home;"
Don't speak of others' faults until
We have none of our own.

PLATFORM ECHOES

A Sermon by Robt. G. Huggins, Reported by George B. Alldridge

Subject: The Nature of the Coming Age.

Text: "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord" (Num. 14:21)

An unprejudiced reader of the Bible, a mind open and ready to be influenced only by what the Bible really teaches, must be impressed with the remarkable similarity existing between the first three chapters of Genesis and the last three chapters of Revelations. The Bible begins with the narrative of the formation of the earth and its preparation for the occupancy of the first Adam and his family; it closes with a vivid description of the reformation of the earth and its preparation for the occupancy of the second Adam and his family (Gen. 1; 2; Rev. 21; 22). The text declares that God's purpose is to fill the earth with his glory. To impress this fact upon the mind of men, the immutability and certainty of the fulfillment of God's divine plan of the Ages, (Eph. 1:9,10), this promise is made in the form of an oath—"As truly as I live," or "As truly as my life depends upon it." This promise will be consummated, for God swears by his own life to do it. Marvelous as this may seem, to the eye of faith it is tangible and real.

Two things are suggested to us in the text, viz.,The earth now lacks the glory of God; but the new earth when reformed will be filled with it. Our experience and observation teaches us that

The Earth Under Its Present Constitution is Not Adapted for the Abode of Immortal Beings

There are many defects apparent to all, that must necessarily be corrected before a condition will exist that will result in God's will being done on earth as it is done in heaven.

1. Its heavens—to us known as the atmosphere. Everywhere men are preaching that to enjoy good health we must have pure air. Where can we find air that is absolutely pure? All around us the air is impregnated with impurities: gaseous and poisonous odors prevail. Hence we readily see some great change in the heavens must occur before we can have pure air.

2. Pure water. A large portion of the water covering the earth's surface today is brackish, undrinkable and repugnant to our taste. The waters considered fresh hold in solution large amounts of animal, mineral and vegetable matter, which physicians declare are destructive to human life.

3. Its Climate. Now we suffer the extremes of heat and cold, sometimes ever during a few hours: only those possessing a vigorous constitution may become "acclimated," and thus be able to endure for awhile the extremes of climate. How many today can endure the heat of equatorial Africa or the terrible blizzard of an Arctic winter? Very few places today people live in an equable climate.

4. Terra firma itself is misarranged. How unproductive is the earth. Three-fourth of its surface is covered with water; vast ranges of barren mountains lift up their hoary heads, bleak, cold and barren; sterile deserts cover thousands of square miles, which constitute nearly one fourth of the entire earth surface. Again, how many inhabitants are found living in the regions of the Arctic and Anarctic zones within a radius of 300 miles from the poles? Think of the long dreary silent and dark winter night of these latitudes, lasting for six months of the year!

5. That which nearly all living things appreciate the most light is equally faulty. We experience the alternations of day and night, of relative duration. At present, being mortal, man needs rest; light is therefore regularly withdrawn that his response may not be disturbed. "Sweet balmy sleep, nature's sweet restorer."

But how can all these defective things be made perfect? Simply in the way that God has said he wouldwould change them, for God has promised a New Heaven and New Earth.

Listen to these wonderful scriptures, the words of the Living God. "For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind" (Isa. 65:17). Read carefully 2 Pet. 3:7,10-13; Rev. 21:1; Isa. 66:22; Gen. 1:1. If you read the whole of Peter's epistle, you will see that Peter's language is litered and should be taken as such. Throughout the epistle he is comparing the old earth and its destruction by a flood, to the present earth by fire, followed with a new heaven and new earth,evolved from the old. There were scoffers in Peter's day,as there are today. So Peter goes into detals, revealing the manner in which God will bring into being the new heavens and earth. God has only to suspend one law—that of chemical attraction and the atmosphere would become a seething furnace, enveloping the earth in flames. And please notice Peter says that men's work are to be "burned up," but the earth is to be "melted with fervent heat." Iron and other metals may be changed in their formation by the process of melting; so God will change the earth's present formation through the mighty force of heat, as he formed it in the beginning.

The New Earth in the Next Age will be under a Constitution Adapted for the Abode of the Saints. who will be Immortal Beings.

1. New Heavens, a pure atmosphere. God was able to do this in the beginning (Gen. 1:6-8), before man sinned, and God will do it again after man is brought out from under the penalty of sin, which is death.

2. Its waters are to be healed (Ezek. 47:1-12: Zech. 14:8; Rev. 22:1,2,3). Waters are to issue out from the temple, imparting life and purity in its wake, both during the winter and summer, imparting life to the sea now dead. The trees will become so fruitful that they will bear fruit every month of the year: even their leaves will possess medicinal qualities.

3. The Climate must necessarily become more balmy and equatable to ensure this (Rev. 22:2,3)

4. The earth will then blossom as the rose; productiveness will everywhere prevail (Isa. 65:-17-25; Psa. 67). Read all of Psalm 67, especially note verse 6. "Then shall the earth yield her increase, and God, ever our own God shall bless us."

6. Light abundantantly shall be shed abroad. God himself is light; where God is light prevails. In God there is no darkness at all (1 John 1:5). God dwells in light (1 Tim. 6:16; Psa 104:2). To Israel God was a pillar of fire (Ex 10:22.23; 14:19,-20; 34:29,30). Moses' face shone with light after leaving the presence of God. Jesus on the mount reflected something of the illuminating power of an immortal being (Matt. 17:2). Paul suffered impairment of vision from beholding it—a light above the brightness of the sun (Acts 9:3). To all this will be added increased brilliancy of the sun and moon sevenfold (Isa. 30:26; 60:19,20). And then the climax is reached as we read in Rev. 21:-18,21-26; 22:3-5) the description of the city, the holy Jerusalem, the throne of the Lamb, the place that God's presence will make glorious. Beloved, the glories of the coming kingdom the new heavens and the new earth! It is written: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his spirit; for the spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God" (1 Cor. 2:9,10).

Earth, what a future lies before thee!
Unlike it is the shadowy past.
The greatest throes that ever tore thee,
Even though the briefest and the last.
I can see the shadow of the sunset,
I can see the avenger's form
I see the Armageddon Onset!
But I shall be above the storm.
There comes the moaning and the sighing,
There comes the hot tear's heavy fall;
The thousand agonies of dying,
But I shall be beyond them all!

In conclusion, beloved brethren, as we think on these things, we feel ourselves lifted up: we seem to take hold upon God, and with the poet sing:

O glorious hour, O blessed abode,
When I shall be near and like my God,
And flesh and sin no more control,
The sacred pleasures of my soul.
There is a fount that soon will stream,
There is an age, that soon will beam,
There is a midnight darkness turning into day.
Ye men of faith, ye men of action,
Arise and clear the way!
Ever so come Lord Jesus, come quickly.
Amen.

LOVE

Flora A. Wood

Reading in "Last Days", brother Thomas Wilson's earnest words to the household of God, I thought how long a time it has been since I have written for the dear old Restitution. Brother Wilson says: "Do not be discouraged because you cannot fill a preacher's place, or an editor's chair. Jesus has given to each one his work. All are included, and have a work of some kind to do."

I think some of us feel sometimes that there is nothing we can do for the Master. We certainly cannot go out and preach the Gospel. What then can each and everyone of his servants do for him? I will tell you, dearly beloved in Christ. We can each one of us love—and the Spirit says: "Love is the fulfilling of (all) the law of God." Jesus says the only way that all men may know we are his disciples, is by loving one another. How does this show that we belong to Christ? Why simply this: No one ever loved another that he did not find something to do for the one beloved. How did God manifest his love for us? Even before the world was he made a way of salvation for us: he foreordained our Lord, and with him freely gave us all things.

Does not a mother manifest her love by constant care for her little one? Thus if we love oneanother, we will manifest our love in our case one for another. We will speak loving helpful words; we will talk one to another of our absent Lord, of his love, his infinite tenderness, the life he is holding for us, the glory to be revealed when he calls for us—and the bliss unspeakable to be forever with the Lord. We will visit the widow and the fatherelss, we will weep with those who weep, and rejoice with those who rejoice. If a brother or a sister is in need, we will share our substance with them, because we are all members of one family This is just as surely working for our Lord as if "we occupied a preacher's place or an editor's chair." The very humblest of the Master's servants can do this work for him. Without this work all other things are as nothing in his sight. Paul says if he understood all mysteries, and had not love, that all his knowledge would be as nothing. Love always brings action. If we say, "I love my brother," and then do nothing to manifest that love, our words are only an empty sound; like sounding brass or a tinkling symbal. Love suffers long and is kind; love is not puffed up; love enviath not; love thinketh no evil. If we work the works of the Master we will love not in word only, but in deed and in truth. To receive eternal life one must know, believe and obey the Gospel—coming into Christ by baptism in water. But will this alone give us a place at Christ's right hand? Read Matthew 25:35,36. It is our works of love which bring us to reign with the Lord. He that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off to the end of probation, when he is called to stand before Christ and receive the reward for the things done in the body. I know God has a people on earth who are doing these works of love. May he hasten the day when our Lord shall say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world," (because) inasmuch as ye have done these things unto the least of my brethren, ye have done them unto me. Let us not be discouraged because we cannot do some great thing—but meekly and humbly follow our Lord's example by doing good to all men, as we have opportunity, but especially to the household of faith. If we do this we are doing the work Jesus gave us to do.

I wish to quote from a sermon I read today on this subject. The speaker said: "The world is good only because Christ and Christian love. The incarnation is an incursion of love into our humanity. Paul calls it the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. We are more than conquerors through that love of Christ which cherishes us. Christ's love is indeed the forgiving love of the cross, but it is as well the love that works by faith till we all attain unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. Everywhere love is the one creative force. The two worst things in the world are: first, to be unloving; and second, to be unloved. The unloved man is as useless as the unloving man is worthless. No man can really live except in an atmosphere of love. And I am thinking, not only of an affectionate love, but also of an appreciating love. The failures of life are the defulcation of love. We are more than conquerer when we know that God and Christ and good men care. Only love can lighten labor. Christ's standard is not preachers and churches that draw, but preachers and churches that draw men together in love."

To give up prayer because we are often distracted at it is to allow the devil to gain his cause—St. Alphonsus.

He who does that which is displeasing to himself has discovered the secret of pleasing God.—St. Anselm.

OHIO ANNUAL MEETING REPORT.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ." So wrote Paul centuries ago, and so say we who were permitted to meet together at this annual gathering at Cleveland, September 6 to 10, 1916. One of the visiting brethren, who did our hearts good with his exhortations, said that the positiveness of the sermons and talks, was something to be carried away, and made note of, especially in this age of vanity; and, as one explained, in a time when the ministers used so much sugar coating over the tiny grain of truth that it was lost to those who swallowed it.

On Wednesday evening our Bro. Huggins started the ball of exceptional sermons rolling which we received from him and our Bro. Anderson, of the southern part of the state. He offered to us the plausibility of common sense in the preaching of the truth as well as every day secular and business life. One of his many instances: The Bible says to be immersed in baptism is to signify death and burial and a planting (Rom. 6:4,5). Our modern preacher comes along and calls sprinkling a few drops on a person a baptism, or immersion. Let that same man go out to the cemetery and sprinkle a few particles of earth on a body to be buried by him, and in a few days the health department would be at his doorstep.

The Bible school conducted by Bro. Tomlinson on the immutability of God's purpose concerning the earth and man, the abiding quality of the earth, those who should inherit it, and the desert blooming like the garden of the Lord, made those who participated in the lesson realize what Isaiah meant when he said: "Joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody."

Bro. Cooke took us to the realm of nature and the lessons learned there were profitable. God is picking characters, not some individuals, as one said: "My wife and I, son John and his wife, us four and no more." Once there was a lady who while sitting in church always said: "Only to lie at the feet of Jesus." Our forceful brother said that his idea would be that Christ would tell her to get up and go to work. It is workers that are wanted.

Bro. Anderson's sermons on God's witnesses (the twelve apostles and the revelations) were monuments of glorious gospel truths. Perhaps many shall recall the good things given to us and be blessed in the recalling. How it went to our hearts when we were asked what we did with our Bibles. Perhaps in most homes where a Bible is found it lays upon the shelf, and the good wife comes along and dusts it once in awhile; and yet in it only is found that which can not be found in any other book, the words of eternal life. Strong is he who, when asked what his private opinion was, exclaimed that in the pulpit or the fireside his private opinion was his public one. How vain now is flesh and how frail the institutions of man! "When they say peace and safety, then sudden destruction shall come upon them." "And I believe it, I believe it," says Bro. Anderson. Did not one go about the country preaching on the "Mistakes of Moses?" What did he do at the final hour of his life? He died, proving what Moses had said, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

The last day, Sunday, was surely blessed. Our Bro. Haggins gave a kindly and loving exhortation on that passage, "Fear not, little flock." The gentle and solicitious care for the future of a just God warmed our hearers. As we partook of the emblems, which are to us the representatives of the body and blood of Christ, our minds looked forward to that supper with the beloved in the Kingdom, and there at the head in the chair of honor sets our longed for Lord.

In the evening Bro. Anderson presented new beauties to us in his sermon on the types and antitypes of the wanderings of the children of Israel. Just as the manna, the bread of everlasting life, was put in the ark, so those who would gain the glories of the future age must come to Christ, the ark of our Salvation. May God bless their efforts and let "all, as we have opportunity, do good unto all men, especially unto them who are the household of faith."

It will be of interest to know who our visitors were that helped make the meetings a pleasure: Sisters Daisy Guest, of New York; Maude Darrah, of Mt. Vernon, O.; Ella Knowles and McCave, of Salem; Eidemiller and Pearson, of Troy; McMillian and daughter Florence of Buffalo; Bro. and Sister Thompson, of Buffalo; Buckman, of Salem and son Carey; Coy of Salem; Hodson, of Indiana; Anderson, of Troy; Brethren Robertson and Cooke, of Buffalo; Young Bro. Miller, of Maryland; Alfred, Newman, Mary and Bro. Smith of Monroeville; and Mrs. Hilda Trover Moore, of Struthers, O.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON LEAF.

Lesson X

Subject, The Resurrection of the Dead

Memory Text

"Marvel not at this: for the hour cometh, in the which all that are in the tombs shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they have done ill, unto the resurrection of judgment" (R. V. John 5:28.29).

1. "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead" (Isa. 26:19).

2. "If a man die shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thy hands" (Job 14:14,15).

3. "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt" (Dan. 12:2).

4. "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses shewed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not the God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him" (Luke 20:37,38).

5. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction; repentance shall be hid from mine eyes" (Hosea 13:14).

6. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept" (1 Cor. 15:20).

7. "And I saw the dead, small and great stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works.

8. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works" (Re 20:12,13).

Practical Thoughts

Our lesson for today is one of thrilling interest. Will we live again? The denial of the literal resurrection of dead men is so wide spread, that we pause to inquire, Is the doctrine taught in the Bible? Has any one in the past after having once been dead, really, literally, physically, been made to live again? And will those who are now dead, dead perhaps for centuries, live again as truly, as literally as they did before? Will the same person who died, have a resurrection? Or will a new creation be the resurrection? Very grave points, and vital too, hinge upon this question. Jesus says, "I am he that liveth and was dead," and Paul says, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again," we shall be remembered when the voice of the Archangel awakens the dead (1 Thess. 4:14). And he concludes in another place that "If the dead rise not then is not Christ raised." Let us study the subject carefully and with a desire to learn the truth. If there are seeming difficulties, rest assured it is because of our limited knowledge, and not an error of inspiration.

Notes on the Lesson

The Resurrection of Life. None come forth to this resurrection but those having done good. There are two classes in the resurrection here spoken of.

1. Thy Dead men shall live. Here men are represented as being dead, and promised a resurrection.

2. Thou shalt call.—Job perhaps refers to the "voice of the archangel and the trump of God," or as in our memory text, the voice of the Son of Man calling to the dead as at Nain or at Bethany, "Come forth." It is a little remarkable that in the case of Lazarus, Jesus spoke in a loud voice, but the dead man heard the call. Job will hear when the Master calls, and will answer by coming to life again.

3. Everlasting Life. Age-lasting life. The life Jesus gives to his people.

4. The dead are raised.—Although the past tense is here used, Jesus evidently was arguing a future resurrection. The Diaglott renders thus. "But that the dead rise," etc. That this is correct is evident from Paul who many years after declared that Hymenaeus and Philetus erred concerning the truth, and overthrew the faith by preaching that the resurrection was already past (2 Tim. 2:17,18).

All live unto him.—All live in the purpose of God. Death will never defeat God's purposes. The fathers here specially spoken of are so interested in the plan of human redemption, that to leave them in death without a resurrection would be to forfeit God's oath and promise.

5. Ransom, Redeem. Ransom is in all probability a variation of redeem. Redeem is a term of general application, ransom is employed only on particular occasions; we redeem persons and things, but we ransom persons only. We may redeem by labor or by money, we ransom properly with money only. We may redeem a watch, our character, our honor or our life; we ransom a captive and ransom restores bodily liberty. In this latter sense the dead are ransomed from the grave where they are held captive, but when they are ransomed they will be free. They are both ransomed and redeemed and the place (the grave) of their captivity destroyed.

6. First fruits.—"The growing of grain from the earth where it was buried, is an exact image of the resurrection of the dead; for, as the one is sown, so is the other and neither is quickened except it first die and be buried. Then the whole harvest, from its relation to the first fruits, explains and ensures the order of our resurrection. For, is the sheaf of the first fruits reaped? Then is the whole harvest ready. Is Christ risen from the dead? Then shall all rise in like manner."

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. What is, Resurrection?—What does the word "resurrection" mean as used in the Bible? Does the word "resurrection" mean the same as that statement concerning Lazaras, in John 12:1?

2. Examples of Resurrection. Can you give an example of resurrection from the Old Testament (2 Kings 4:32-37)? Give other examples from the Old Testament. How many cases of resurrection are recorded in the New Testament (Mark 5:35-43; Luke 7:11-16; Acts 9:36-41; John 11:14,43,44; Matt. 27:51-53; Matt. 28:2-7)? Are there any other besides these given? Were these persons really dead? Did they really live again?

3. Special Resurrection Promised.—Are there two resurrections spoken of (John 5:28,29; Acts 24:15)? When will the "Better Resurrection" take place (1 Cor. 15:51,52, also vs. 23)? Who will be raised in this resurrection (Luke 20:35.36)?

4. Conditions of Resurrection.—What will be the conditions of those who come up in the first resurrection? Do you desire the better resurrection? How are we to live to secure a part in the first resurrection?

5. Will all the dead live again?—Are we taught in the Bible that all who have died will live again? Examine carefully John 5:28,29; Luke 20:37,38; Rev. 20:12,13; 1 Cor. 15:22, and tell us your conclusion. Are our minds open to receive truth that seems to conflict with our opinions? Ask your teacher any question upon this subject that may give you light.

Note to Teachers.—It is expected of you that you will ask additional questions, whenever necessary to bring out the subject more fully; also to simplify the lesson by easy questions and illustrations for the smaller children. All that your editor can do is to select the subject, give an outline and a few general questions leaving it to the teacher to fill out the lesson.

6. General Questions.—What is meant by the word "marvel" in our memory text? What does Isaiah mean by asking the dead to awake and sing? Where did Job expect to wait? (2d paragraph). Why are the dead spoken of as asleep? Who was the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob that appeared in the bush to Moses (Acts 7:35)? What is meant in paragraph 7 by the dead "small and great?" Does the 8th paragraph include all the dead?

REVIVED INTEREST IN THE SECOND ADVENT

Whilst there is no indication that the Great War is forcing upon the people generally the necessity for a national turning unto God, there is abundant evidence that within the church it is having the effect of compelling attention to the word of prophecy. Much is being said and written on the subject with which we have but little sympathy, but we are unfeignedly glad that a move in this direction has been made.

Since the struggle began the doctrine of the Second Advent of Christ has come into greater prominence, and we note that preachers and writers are devoting attention to it. We venture to say that never before in the history of preaching has so much been said upon the subject. For this we are profoundly thankful. Good must come of a sincere desire to know and to teach what the Word has said on this matter. It is [illegible] indication that a heavy blow has been struck at the hitherto popular belief in man's ability to convert the world and to inaugurate the Millennium by progress in civilisation and ethics.

At the same time, we think it necessary to say that it seems too sadly evident that the doctrine is being expounded as merely a doctrine. Seldom is there any indication that its real importance is seen. To preach it without showing its place in the great purpose of God is to ignore the facts that make it necessary. It should be seen and preached in that relation to the plan of God which the Word assigns to it. It is necessary, and it is potent, because God intends to establish his kingdom on the earth. Were it not so, there would be no necessity for a Second Return of Christ. His saints could be caught away to him without his Personal Return, and the wicked could be destroyed without it.

He must return because of the foredeclared purpose and its provisions, as outlined in the oath-bound covenants. Apart from these, what sufficiently valid reason for his return can be found? Certainly, believe in his Second Coming, and preach it faithfully, but make the endeavour to know why that is necessary, and the doctrine will then become a matter of vital importance and not a thing in which interest may hold for a little while, to be replaced by some other topic for the times. —Geo. Alldridge, in Bible Standard.

WASTED TALENT

One-third of the fools in the country think they can beat a lawyer expounding the laws. One-half think they can beat the doctor healing the sick. Two-thirds of them think they can put the minister in the hole expounding the gospel, and all of them think they can beat the editor running a paper.—Salina (Kan.) Union.

EDITORIAL

We have enjoyed a protracted visit from Brother Miller, of Hagerstown, Md.

For a year at least we lose the presence and fellowship of Sister A. Roberta Lang, who goes to New York City to study art. Sister Roberta's absence will be felt and regretted by all, as she was President of the Young People's Society, and her pew was never vacant without adaquate cause. She contemplates meeting with the brethren in Brooklyn, to whom we heartily commend her, as active in the truth, and beloved of the Lord.

In the Restitution dated September 19, page 4, in "Linograph Fund," "A Brother and Sister" were credited for $2.00, whereas they should have been credited for $200.00.

With this issue we have made several points of decided improvement. We call special attention to "A Bright Page for Young People" on page 11, where the reader will find "Tidbits of Pleasant and Useful Information Gathered from Everywhere." And this added page of reading matter will hereafter be a permanent feature in The Restitution. A whole page weekly of clear gain in reading matter, is an item of considerable consequence during a year. If the Lord wills, we hope soon to make another and greater enlargement.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brothers. Enclosed find check for $50.00 to pay on "Linograph Fund." Hope you will soon have the amount necessary.

Yours,
Lewis and Adaline Weaver.

From Mrs. C. Seely

Dear Brother Huggins: Enclosed you will find $5.00 postoffice order, which you may apply on the Linograph Fund. I wish it were more. I hope I may be able to send some more later. The paper grows better all the time. It is such a comfort to me in my loneliness—I would not know how to do without it. May God bless you in your good work, is my prayer.

Your Sister in the faith.

Dear Brother Huggins: Notice enclosed for publication in "The Restitution," with the hope that some brother or sister living near, but outside of our acquaintance, or with whom we have been unable to communicate, may read the invitation and respond. We have no set speakers. Any brother with love in his heart and a feeling that he is able to benefit or instruct his hearers, is welcome to exhort, providing he is willing to speak to the subject. We endeavor to feed heart, mind and body, and as a rule, succeed.

We wish you and your enterprise success, and with full christian love, we are,

Alexander D. Donaldson.

From Sister Flora A. Wood

Dear Brother Huggins: Will you permit me to say to the brethren through the paper, that I have answered every letter I have received from them, with these exceptions: two dear sisters gave no name or address—simply saying from "A Sister." One dear brother said, "you need not answer"—so I could not write to them personally. But my dear sisters and brothers, my heart is full of gratitude and love for the care for me you manifested, and I pray daily that God will reward you and keep you blameless unto that glorious day when we shall meet with all the Israel of God to be forever with the Lord. Oh day of joy, of perfect bliss! God hasten it is my prayer.

Brethren, pray for me that I may overcome from day to day. My heart goes out to you, dear brethren, in Christ. I wish you could visit me. God comforted Paul by sending a disciple to him. I pray he may open the way for some one to visit Chico. I do so long for some of my Lord's brethren to visit and comfort me with the comfort wherewith God has comforted them. The dear old paper and the loving letters of my brethren do comfort me—but I am far from home, and I long for the house of many mansions.

Your Sister in our Blessed Lord.

THE LINOGRAPH AND GIVING BECAUSE OF LOSSES.

BY S ROXANA WINCE

Is this a new point to you, dear ones? It is to me. I had resolved to give just as aforetime, despite the failure of the corn crop for three consecutive years and grievous losses, through thieves; but the idea of making a thankoffering to God because of what was left, had not occurred to me until I saw this item in the life of George Muller.

A well known business house had become suddenly insolved. They knew not which way to turn for help. Mr. Muller stepped in "If I were you gentlemen," he said, "I should express my gratitude to the Lord by a thank offering to him, that the calamity has not swept away the whole of your property."

His advice was taken. They gave $500 to the Lord and saw that $500 repaid far more than a thousand fold in after years.

Then another item fell under my eager eyes: A Christian worker came to a wealthy man asking for help. The man wrote out a check for a generous amount, and handed it over. Just at this moment a messenger boy came in with a letter. The wealthy man read it, sat wrapped in thought for a few moments and then, turning to the Christian worker said, "Give me back that check!"

Astonished, he obeyed, saw it torn into fragments and a new one written, calling for twice the amount of the first one.

"You must have had good news," said the worker.

"I have just learned through this letter of the loss of a ship in the far east on board of which was a large lot of goods for which I had paid. It made me think how frail is our hold upon wealth, and how needful it is that we hasten to give while we have the means in our hands."

A poor woman gave $300 recently to some good cause, and when asked "If that was not too much?" replied: "Jesus, gave every drop of his blood for me, how can I give too much?"

Take these practical little sermons from real life home to your hearts, dear ones. Give God thank offerings because, though losses have come, you have something left.

Lay up your treasures where thieves cannot break through and steal. I exult because my treasures are in a bank that even the devil, cunning as he is, cannot break into. And let us hasten in our giving, lest what we have, "take wings and fly away."

"God is best when soonest wrought" because the sooner we give, the more speedily will our money be set to work for the Lord, and due preparation be made for his coming. Better that the Lord have our money than that thieves have it to spend for whiskey. Jesus gave all that he had for us: wealth, pleasure, ease, fame, reputation, "every drop of his blood"; love and gratitude impel us to give ours all in return.

The election of officers was then taken and resulted as follows: President, Emma Railsback; Vice president, Lulu Stilson; Recording secretary, Florence Reed; Corresponding secretary, Mabel Strawn; Treasurer, Leora Roose. Adjournment.

FUTURE PUNISHMENT A PENAL INFLICTION.

"Is God Unrighteous Who Taketh Vengeance?"

(Rom. iii:5).

It is a popular belief that punishment after death and resurrection will not be a direct infliction of God, but simply the natural fruit of sin (the inevitable consequence of a man's folly), which will produce misery of conscience and a state of separation from God which is called "spiritual death." Thus to the ungodly the life to come is merely a continuance of this life, a natural outgrowth of the present, undisturbed by any act or manifestation of God. Sin will not have any other or greater punishment than its own consequence, which is not arbitrary, but simply the fruit of the seed we sow.

Sin, it is said, is a trangression of law; and broken law avenges itself on the transgressor. Witness the drunkard, who brings on himself delirium tremens. Or consider the diseases brought on by other vices. The man who transgresses physical laws suffers as the result in his own body. Beyond doubt in this world, pain, loss and destruction work a natural retribution on the sinner. But this truth does do away with the fact that in every earthly government there is a judicial system of pains and penalties for the due punishment of offenders. Justice is not content with a mere working of the natural laws. It insists upon the infliction of a positive punishment. Who would say,"Let thieves and murderers alone;they will make themselves sufficiently uncomfortable by their own doings!" No one would advocate such "letting alone" of the wicked, but rather insist that the offender must be brought before the tribunal of intelligent personal judges, whose voice will denounce his crime as well as doom him to punishment. And have we not reason to suppose that God has reserved to His own hands the dealing out of adequate punishment to all unrepentant sinners, who will find themselves after resurrection face to face, not only with broken laws, but with an offended Lawgiver, a personal, moral Governor and Judge, who will denounce and rebuke their sin as well as assign to it its due and condign punishment?

Kings and judges and judicial procedure are not mere clumsy human inventions for keeping society straight; nor are they earthly realities to which God is merely likened in figure; but they are rather earthly images of what God does and is. Himself the great Reality, he lends them their dignity and sacredness, as miniature representations of him and his dealings.

The Old Testament is confessedly vague with regard to the future state. But it asserts the great principle. "Vengeance is Mine, I will repay, saith the Lord" (Deut. xxxii. 35), and it ever represents God as the great Agent and Power in the punishment of the ungodly, even though the threat of the consuming and destroying the wicked may frequently relate to events which are to take place on this earth, though some of them undoubtedly have an outlook beyond. For instance, Israel's captivity in Babylon was the punishment for Israel's idolatry. The fire from heaven fell upon Sodom for its sins. Such passages as these tell their own tale: "All the wicked will he destroy" (Ps. cxlv: 10); "The Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity" (Is. xxvi. 21).

The New Testament revelations of a future state are more explicit. It has several strong passages speaking of the great subsequent Judgment, its awful personal Judge, the sentence he pronounces and its execution. "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God" (Rev. xx. 11); "Punished with everlasting destruction from (proceeding form) the presence of the Lord" (2 Thes. i. 7-9): "Christ Jesus, who shall judge the quick and the dead" (2 Tim. iv. 1). And it is remarkable that in the solemn descriptions of the Judgment scene the doom of the condemned is to be cast into fire —Old and New Testament alike fire is represented as receiving or seizing upon the objects of God's wrath. "Fear him who after he hath killed hath power to cast into Gehenna (fire)" (Luke xii. 5; Matt. xviii. 8,9); "The day cometh that shall burn them up" (Mal. iv. 1).

All this does not look as if the wicked will be left alone by God merely to be the victims of a remorseful conscience, and that sin is to punish itself. Those who advocate this view speak as if there is to be no resurrection, no judgment, no sentence, no execution, only a dark, miserable condition of spirit, into which state a man passes at the time of death.

But thereu is a serious consideration. If there is no judicial punishment threatened to sinners there was no need of a Saviour to save us from such punishment; there cannot be any remission of such penalty by the sacrifice of Christ, and therefore the death of Jesus was uncalled for and unnecessary. What, then, was the occasion or value of "his agony, and bloody sweat, and death on Calvary?" We answer, that by submitting himself to the earthly forms of suffering and death, so far as they could be incurred without personal sin, our Lord has solemnly bowed to these penalties on behalf of mankind, and God has honoured his surrender by granting an arrest of all further execution of them in the case of all who are connected by faith with him. So now for his people, as for himself earthly pain and sorrow but fit them for glory and earthly physical death is the end of pain and sorrow, to be followed by a glorious resurrection to immortality and eternal life.

After the resurrection and solemn judgment and sentence of the ungodly comes the ultimate execution of the complete death penalty—which will overtake all those who have not obtained salvation—in a fiery destruction of both soul and body (Matt. x. 28) in the lake of fire called the second death (Rev. xx. 14). In the process of this destruction there will probably be great pain to both soul and body; but when both are completely dead neither can feel any more. Though, however, it follows that, when both soul and body are destroyed, all pain ceases, yet this final death punishment may well be called eternal, for, being succeeded by no resurrection or restoration, it is an eternal privation of that life and bliss which is to be eternally enjoyed by the people of Christ.

While recognising to the full that sin bears some natural but irregular fruits, which have to be eaten by the sinner himself or by those whom he injures, yet we believe that Scripture clearly reveals that committed sin has incurred under the law of God a judicial penalty, which is more than its natural fruit, which penalty will most certainly be executed on the sinner by God's authority after resurrection and judgment. It is the atoning sacrifice of Christ which alone can procure remission for all who in this life repent of their sins and are forgiven.—Bible Standard.

OBITUARIES

Isaac Newton Masterman was born at Rodgersville, Steuben county, New York, August 25, 1833, and departed this life September 16, 1916, aged 83 years, and 21 days. He was the youngest of five children, and the last to be taken.

He united in marriage July 5, 1855, with Zerada Woodward who with eight children, survive him. Mrs. William Bunch, their oldest daughter, preceded her father in death April 18, 1913. The children who survive are: George, of Ashtabula, Ohio, Mrs. Frank Reed, Bert, Miss Marmara, Mart, Hoyt and Marshall, of Walkerton Ind., and Mrs. H. C. Breece, of Garrett, Indiana.

He was a member of no local church but was a very firm believer in the teachings of the Bible. He was baptized in New York state, about fifty years ago, and has been a constant student of the Bible as the source of his spiritual sustenance and growth. He was a kind and loving father, a good neighbor, and a man who never forgot the man who did him a kind deed in time of need. He will be missed not only by the family and close friends, but by the community in general. He had lived forty years in the same neighborhood; every one knew "Father Masterman."

Funeral services were held from the late residence at 2:30 p.m. September 18, 1916. His children, except George, and many other relatives besides friends and neighbors, were present to bear testimony of the love and regard they had for the departed brother. Burial was made in the Walkerton cemetery, where we laid him to rest to await the call of the Master in the morning of the resurrection.

John Perry Burget, son of Wm. M. and Hester J. Burget, was born in the neighborhood of Kempton, Indiana, October 16, 1884, and died at the home of his parents in Kempton, September 23 1916, aged 31 years, 11 moonths, and 7 days.

All his life was lived in this vicinity. He was brought up in a good home by good parents and educated in the local schools. He followed the profession of teaching for eight years with success and honor. For the last three years he has been superintendent of The Citizens Telephone company, of Kempton. His efficiency in this position won the full confidence of the Board of Directors, while his just and kind treatment of the men under his control secured their love and respect. Because of his sterling worth the company had committed great responsibilities to his care, and were not disappointed.

His father and mother were members of the Church of God, and he also held to the truths of the Bible as thus taught. He was a member of the fraternal orders of his home town, and was held in high esteem among these brethren.

He was confined to his bed but two short weeks with typhoid fever, and was cut off in the prime of his manhood when his noble ambition for usefulness in life was being realized in real achievement. A tower of strength to his parents, a companion of his brothers and sisters a favorite with the young people of his acquaintane, faithful in his fraternal relations, honorable and efficient in business, a friend to religion, the whole community is shocked by his sudden death.

Funeral services were held from the M. E. church at Kempton, Tuesday, September 26, 1916, at 10 o'clock a.m., conducted by the writer, and assisted by the local M. E. minister. Many beautiful floral offerings expressed the love and esteem in which he was held. The Masonic and I. O. O. F. lodges attended in a body with a very large assemblage of relatives, friends and neighbors many not being able to get into the house. We spoke words of comfort from Heb. 2:6. Burial was made in the country in the vicinity of the father's old homestead. At the grave the Masonic order gave their committal service, and we laid the beloved to rest to await the voice of Jesus and his resurrection power.

BAPTISMAL SERVICE

Sister Mary A. Thomas was baptized Sunday morning, Sept. 24, 1916, at the Plymouth church baptistry, and received into the church at the close of the morning service. She is the foster daughter of Sr. Rebecca Myers, of Plymouth, and has been taught the Gospel for years, and now comes to yield obedience to its call.

We are glad to welcome Sr. Thomas into the church and bid her God-speed in the race that is set before her. Thus one by one the Body and Bride of Christ is being taken out from the world in preparation for that great day of the Marriage of the Lamb. May each and everyone espoused weave the fabric of life of fine linen, the righteousness ot saints, and be ready.

THE SKEPTIC ANSWERED

"I don't belive in a personal God," remarked a skeptic to Rev. R. F. Jones, a Welsh Presbyterian minister, in a railroad train between Toledo and Cleveland some time ago, as related by a writer in "The Presbyterian."

"Why not?" asked the minister.

"Because I can't see him. His existence is not demonstrable, capable of proof like facts of science."

The minister asked, "Don't you believe that you are alive, and that I am alive?"

"Yes," he answered.

"Why do you believe it?"

"Because I can see you move."

"Well," said the minister, "the locomotive that is drawing this train also moves—is it alive?"

"No," he answered, "but the engineer who runs it is alive."

"Please tell me," said the minister, "whether the engineer is a part of the machinery of a living person?"

"He is a living person," replied the skeptic.

"Now, sir," retorted the minister, "consistency is a jewel—please tell me why you attribute the movement of the locomotive to a living person, but deny that God, who sets the universe in motion, is a living person?"

Unable to answer, he branched off into another objection against Christianity.

"What I hate," said he, "in orthodoxy is this eternal talk about creed, creed, creed, everywhere and at all times."

"What do you mean by a man's creed?" asked his opponent.

"I understand by a creed that which a man believes."

"Well, sir," rejoined the minister, "you have just as much creed as I have. I believe there is a personal God; you believe the opposite doctrine. I believe in the incarnation of the Son of God for our redemption; you believe the opposite. I believe in the ruined estate of man; you believe the opposite. What difference is there in the bulk of our creed, only that I believe one side of the question and you believe the other? Now, sir, when we come to that point you have just as much creed on your side as I have on mine; but you want the right to advocate your sentiments, but wish to deny me the same right."

"But," said the skeptic, resuming the attack, "Christianity is not capable of scientific demonstration. When we take the sciences all truths are capable of demonstration by experiments which prove them. You can put them to the test. I take peculiar pleasure in the study of chemistry. Its propositions are plain and capable of proof by facts and experiments which appeal to the senses."

"You have studied chemistry, have you?" inquired the minister.

"Yes, sir," he answered.

"Well," resumed the minister, "if you are a student of chemistry you are acquainted with the fact that charcoal, coal and the diamond are the same by their molecules—namely, carbon. Now can you take a molecule out of the charcoal and put it into the diamond and get a perfect thing of it?"

He acknowledged he could not.

"Where, then," said the minister, "is your demonstration in chemistry? But so far as Christianity is concerned your objection is not valid, for it is capable of spiritual demonstration. You can try it and find it all that God has presented it to be. God says to all, 'Oh, taste and see.' Try it and experience will attest its truth. Millions have put it to the test of their experience, and have found it 'the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth'" (Rom. 1:16).—Sel.

Says Dr. Adam Clarke, in his commentary: "The doctrine of the resurrection appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive Christians than it is now. How is this? The apostles were continually insisting on it, and exciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness through it. And their successors in the present day seldom mention it. So apostles preached, and so primitive Christians believed: so we preach, and so our hearers believe. There is not a doctrine in the gospel on which more stress is laid; and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect."

Brush aside all picayune troubles and forget them. Be sweet, happy and cheerful. When petty irritations pop out at you on the road of life, do not let them climb onto you, and ride on your back. Shake them off. Christ has suffered all the ills of life through which you are passing, and he has sent back to you breezy words of cheer from the throne of victory: "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world" (Jno. xvi. 33).

HAS YOUR AUTOMOBILE JOINED THE CHURCH

The automobile that fails to join the church will almost inevitably lead its owner astray from the church! The automobile that joins the church becomes the instrument by which three great achievements may be wrought:

1. It will always convey its Christian owner to the place of worship, and will prove itself the best vehicle of the ages for getting the entire household there thus helping to realize the truth that the family is the unit of the Church of Christ.
2. It will become the long-prayed-for opportunity by which the aged, the halt, the lame, the blind, and all the shut-ins of the community can enjoy, occasionally at least, the privileges of the sanctuary.
3. It can be made a symbol and a vehicle of the church's spiritual hospitality, by conveying to the sanctuary those who are strangers in the community.—Methodist Recorder.

"THE OLD MAN"

Boy, when you speak of your father don't call him "the old man." Of course you are older now than when you were taught to call him father. You are much smarter than you were then, your clothes fit you better, your hat has a modern shape and your hair is combed differently. In short, "flyer" than you were then. Your father has a last year's coat a two-year-old hat and a vest of still older pattern. He can't write such an elegant note as you can and all that, but don't call him "the old man." Call him father. For years he has been rustling around to get things together, he has been held to the thorny path of uphill industry, and the brightest half of life has gone from him forever. But he loves you, though he goes along without saying much about it, therefore be not so ungrateful.—Ex.

THE CHURCH'S CALL

1 Tim. iv. 6-16

1. Many causes appeal today for recruits. Politics, social reform, science, trade, arts—these and others like them compete with one another in the market of manhood. They seek the enthusiasm, the time the brains of the rising generation. They aim at enlisting life in their great interests. And among all these voices another is heard. It is not so loud perhaps, but as insistent and appealing It is the voice of the church.

(i.) The cultivation of a healthy physique through cleanliness, exercise, moderation in eating and drinking, and abstinence from every injurious pleasure. It is unnecessary, however, to say very much on this head, or the culture of physical fitness is nowadays so generally advocated that there actually arises the danger of devoting too much time and energy to athletics and the like. We should avoid making a fetish of games and sports.

(ii.) The cultivation of the mind. One thing wanted today is a more complete consecration of thought to the church. We should not be afraid of asking questions, of provoking discussion, and even of encountering criticism. We claim for Christ that he can solve all the deepest problems mankind has to face. That claim is a challenge to the world, and if we make the claim we must be able to maintain it. It is not enough to say that the Bible is the true guide of the soul and that Christ is the one great spiritual authority. We must be able to back assertion with argument, and so give a reason for the faith that is in us. We should gain the reputation of being pious and prayerful, alert, alive, and intellectually keen. One thing to help in this direction would be the formation of study circles at which some first-rate book on Christian evidences would be studied and discussed.—N. H. M.

A word of kindness is seldom spoken in vain. It is a seed dropped by the wayside from which may spring a flower.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

Lesson I.

INTRODUCTION: THE IMPORTANCE OF BIBLE STUDY.

I. "Troubled" at His Ignorance, Daniel "Set His Heart" to Study God's Word, and He Became Enlightened and "Beloved of God."

"Daniel the prophet," as Christ calls him (Matt. 24:15), was both "grieved" and "troubled" because he did not understand the visions which God gave to him (Dan. 7:15). Nevertheless he "kept the matter in his heart" (Dan. 7:28) as tenderly and affectionately as a mother keeps in her heart and ponders in her mind the incidents of her first born (Luke 2:19). However, when he "sought for the meaning," and like Peter, "thought on the vision" (Acts 10:19), then God said to Gabriel, "make this man understand the vision" (Dan. 8:15,16). Jehovah then issued a commandment and dispatched Gabriel to make him "understand the matter" (Dan. 9:23); and from the twentieth and twentyfirst verses it appears that God issued this angelic mandate "whiles he was yet speaking." At the time this "commandment" was published among the angelic hosts, Daniel was in ignorance and perplexity as to the meaning of God's word, yet God gave to him these words of encouragement and consolation: "Fear not, Daniel; for from the first day that thou didst set thy heart to understand . . . . thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words" (Dan. 10:12). Like John on the isle of Patmos, who "wept much" at his ignorance of the book of God (Rev. 5:4), Daniel was "grieved" and troubled" at his ignorance of his own visions. But when he "sought for the meaning" and "enquired diligently" into the significance of his prophecies, which the spirit of Christ through him revealed (Pet.1:10,11), he became "greatly beloved of God" (Dan. 9:23), and was divinely and providentially shown "that which is noted in the Scriptures of truth" (Dan 10:21). He was thus made "wise unto salvation" by faith in the Holy Scriptures (2 Tim. 3:15), as he declares himself in Dan. 9:2: "I Daniel understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolation of Jerusalem."

II. The Wicked are Ignorant of the Bible Because They Love Darkness; the Righteous Understand It Because They Love the Light.

To understand the Bible we must have a right state of mind and heart. There are conditions of knowledge which we must obey before we can be illuminated by the truth. An admirable exemplification of this remark is found in Dan. 12:10: "None of the wicked shall understand, but the wise (righteous) shall understand." "None of the wicked shall understand." Why? "There is a reason." "They will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned into fables" (2 Tim. 4:3,4). "They love darkness rather than light. They hate the light, neither cometh to light" (John 3:19,20.). To "love darkness" is to set the affection upon it; to "hate the light" is to detest it. Therefore refusal to come to the light has a moral rather than an intellectual cause. On the other hand, "the wise shall understand," because they "love the truth" (2 Thess. 2:10), and are willing to buy it (Prov. 23:23), cost what it will (Matt. 13:44). "He that doeth truth, cometh to the light, that his deeds may be manifest, that they are wrought in God" (John 3:21).

III. How God Communicates Understanding, Knowledge, Wisdom and Truth to Man.

The following quotation sets forth briefly but clearly and scripturally how God communicates wisdom and knowledge to man, and indicates the only way an understanding of the Bible can come to us. Ponder it diligently and prayerfully:

> "The Scriptural way of getting understanding is sane and rational. "Thou through thy commandments has made me wiser than mine enemies; for they are ever with me. I have more understanding than all my teachers; for thy testimonies are my meditation. I understand more than the ancients because I keep thy precepts" (Psa. 119:98-100). The Psalmist got his understanding and wisdom from God's Word, from his "commandments" and "testimonies." God gives wisdom truly, but "thou through thy commandments hast made me wiser than mine enemies." "Through thy precepts I get understanding" (vs. 104). In exactly the same way Daniel was made wise. He set his heart to get understanding (Dan. 10:12), and he obtained it through information supplied by books (Dan. 9:2). Since understanding is attained by using means to get it, the New Testament exhorts believers to attain it (1 Cor. 14:20; Eph. 5:17). Christ imparted understanding to people by giving them instruction (Matt. 15:10), and complained when his disciples did not understand what he said (Matt. 15:16,17). Now it is true that God gives understanding as well as faith; but it is by supplying the means to enlighten the mind, namely, his Word. And men get what he supplies by giving their minds to attain it, like Daniel; by meditating upon it, like David. We attain to the understanding of any question by giving our minds to it, by studying it, by meditating upon it; and if it refers to the performance of duty, by having a disposition to practice it. The testimony of God—his Word—"enlightens the eyes" and makes "wise"—imparts understanding and wisdom (Psa. 19:7,8)." ("The Bible: Its Principles and Texts," pages 28,29).

IV. Why Many "Good People" Seek the Truth in Vain

God gave Daniel knowledge and wisdom (Dan. 1:17; Jas. 1:5), but he went to school three years to procure these blessings of God (Dan. 1:4,5). "I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth : I said not unto the seed of Jacob, Seek ye me in vain" (Isa. 45:19). In view of these words from Jehovah, it perplexes many, after they have learned the truth themselves, why so many 'good people" are ignorant of it. They reason that since God has not "spoken in secret," and no one asks without receiving, knocks without response, and seeks without finding (Matt. 7:7,8), therefore that "good religious people" are in total darkness as regards gospel truth, is to them inexplicable. But that many would seek God's word and not find it, is clearly foretold in the Scriptures: " . . . . . I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord: and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it" (Amos 8:11,12). And the Savior solemnly declares: "Many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able" (Luke 13:24). Strenuous seekers, but not finders! And why are they not able to find God's truth? Why is it hidden from them (Matt.11:25), and hidden so effectually, that with all their wandering and running to and fro and seeking, they cannot find it? Why with all their "goodness" are they left in outer darkness? A divine explanation is given why they do not learn the gospel. God has written great things in his law, but as they are ignorant of the scriptures (Mark 12:24). these "great things" are "strange things" to them (Hos. 8:12; Acts 17:20). They say "Lord, Lord,"but do not the things which he says ; they preach in his name, cast out devils, and boast of being divine healers; they send missionaries to China, abound in works of philanthropy, are devoted to humanitarianism; they do "many wonderful works;" but they do not the will of the Father in heaven: for they are so busy doing "wonderful works;" they have no time to read and find out what the "will" of the Father is (Matt. 7:21-29). "He hath showed thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord doth require of thee" (Micah 6:8). Having "showed us his requirements, it is folly to devote ourselves to works of supererogation and to labor at "mighty works" which he has not required (Isa. 1: 12). He has put a yoke upon us. admitted: but"his yoke is easy, andhis burden is light" (Matt.11:28-30): he has imposed commandments upon us, granted; but "his commandments are not grievous" (1 John 5:3). He has required neither thousands of rams, nor ten thousands of rivers of oil, "great thing" (2 Kings 5:13; Jer. 45:5);but he has nor the first born (Micah 6:7), nor any other authoritatively commanded and solemnly avowed that we cannot be brothers and sisters of Christ unless we do the will of the Father in heaven (Matt.12:50). O reader, cease from thine own works (Heb. 4:10); abandon all "dead works" (Heb. 6:1), and enter into the service of the living God (Heb. 9:14). To be found among the blessed at last, and have a right into the city depends, not upon "mighty works" of your own fabrication and invention, but upon keeping "his commandments" (Rev. 22:14). God has caused his will to be "written in the volume of the book" (Heb. 10:7), but instead of reading and seeking out "the book of the Lord" (Isa. 34:16), people spend their leisure time in pouring over political newspapers and secular magazines. Good as these people may be morally, they know not the voice of Christ (John 10:4), nor the voices of the prophets (Acts 13:27). They strive in a thousand ways to serve the Lord, but they do not strive lawfully, and therefore God cannot crown them (2 Tim. 2:5). These unlawful strivers are the ones we mistake for "good men." Remember that Christ, the sinless Son of God, refused to be saluted as "good master." on the ground that God alone is "good" (Matt. 19:15,17). Christ's repudiation of the title "good" should make us ashamed to use it in reference to men of which it is said: "There is none righteous, no not one: . . . . there is none that doeth good, no, not one" (Rom. 3:10, 12). Christ emphatically affirms that harlots go into the kingdom of God before these "good people," publicans before pharisees (Matt. 21:28-31; Luke 18:10,14). Readar, these are serious declarations of truth from the lips of the Son of Man; consider then well.

V. "Bible Lessons on First Principles" Present a Rare Opportunity for Students to Learn the Fundamental Teachings of the Bible, Upon an Understanding and Belief of which the Validity of Baptism Depends.

The writer has been actively engaged in the ministry of the gospel for twenty-four years. During that time he has taught multiplied hundreds "the first principles of the oracles of God" (Heb.5:12). These "principles of the doctrine of Christ" (Heb. 6:1) are called "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" in Acts 8:12; and the statement is clearly and forcefully made that these "things" were "believed" before baptism. In obedience to this plainly stated principle, the writer has, from the beginning. invariably taught these "principles" and "things" to all whom he has baptised, previous to their baptism. "He that believeth (the gospel) and is baptised, shall be saved" (Mark 16: 15,16). Belief of the gospel, then, must precede baptism; and hearing the word of God must precede faith (Rom. 10:17). There can be no washing of water by the word where the word is absent (Eph. 5:26); there can be no "obedience of faith" where there is no faith (Rom. 16:26); there cannot be a buriel in baptism, "wherein also ye are risen with him through faith", if there be no faith (Col. 2:12). Immersion cannot be valid baptism in unbelief. The importance of this subject has moved the writer to propose the publication, if the Lord will, of a series of "Bible Lessons on First Principles," to which this is an "Introduction," giving the lessons which he has always taught his pupils previous to their baptism, and which have been remarkably blessed of God in abundant fruitage. He now proposes to publish these lessons for his own use in instructing and preparing candidates for baptism; he also indulges the hope that they will be useful to many others in conducting Bible classes and studies; and he ardently prays that they may be helpful to both ministers and teachers everywhere in preparing catechumen for the sacred ordinance of baptism.

VI. To Become an Imitator of the Prophets, Angels, the Son of God, and All the Children of God, You Must Become a Bible Student. The Author's Personal Tutorage, Unincumbered with Financial and Ecclesiastical Obligations, May be Obtained by "Pressing the Button."

If the reader of this "Introduction" has a contrite spirit and trembles at God's word (Isa. 66:2): if he desires to exercise himself in godliness by giving attention to reading, exhortation and doctrine, and thus save himself (1 Tim. 4:13-16); if he now sees that he must grow in knowledge if he grows in grace (2 Pet. 3:18), and that he must be taught of God before he can come to Christ (John 6:44,45), then we entreat him to take up the study of this lesson and all the subsequent lessons of this series entitled "Bible Lessons on First Principles." The old prophets "enquired and searched diligently" the sacred pages of prophecy; even the angels "desired to look into" them (1 Pet. 1:10,11), while the Son of God was a student of the Scriptures (Luke 4:16). "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord" (Isa. 54:13). Reader, wilt thou be one of God's "children"? Then you must be taught (Acts 8:30,31). Wilt thou be an imitator of the prophets, angels, the Son of God, and all the children of God? Then "search the Scriptures" (John 5:39) "daily" (Acts 17:11). "Study" and "consider" what God has said and this promise is yours: "The Lord will give thee understanding in all things" (2 Tim.2: 15,7). We give these lessons in private Bible classes daily and nightly to interested ones who live in Cleveland and its environs, unincumbered with financial and ecclesiastical obligations. If the reader desires to take them under our private and personal tutorage, if he will "press the button" by phone, letter or visit, we are his servant.

STAINS

Every thrifty housekeeper regards stains as among her most troublesome experiences. Clothing, table-linen carpets, wallpaper, and many other things gathered together under the household roof are liable, by contact with certain substances, to become disfigured with stains which cannot be wholly removed, and which will only fade gradually with the age and decay of the article in question. Could a fabric be invented with some element in it which made it stain proof, how eagerly would it be sought for, and how high a price would it command! Somewhat in the same way the moral nature, appearing in early childhood to be pure and innocent, contracts stains, one after another, more or less vivid which destroy the freshness and bloom that seemed so great a charm. A spot of untruthfulness here, of cruelty there, of scorn where there was once reverence, of hard selfishness where there was once gentle affection, of knowledge of things evil and a degree of complacency in them that were once impossible—over all these stains anxious parents have sighed and wept as their children emerged from the nursery to the schoolroom, and from the schoolroom to the world, and wished that they could have kept them from the impurity that has touched and soiled them.

You can not do your duty to the poor by a society. Your life must touch their life.—Phillips Brooks.

IS CHRIST LIVING TODAY? CAN YOU PROVE IT?

"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good"

No 5

These are indeed "wonderful days". Knowledge is increasing in the earth, and inventive genius is making such rapid progress that it is almost questioned if any achievement is impossible to mankind. Yet amid all this, which stands out as a monument to the patience, perseverance and mental activity of the great minds who brought these things into being, we are continually meeting with a class of people who take little trouble to investigate the foundation of the various phenomena which surrounds them. To them the occult and mysterious appeal much more strongly than the real and substantial, and more often than not they are greatly shocked if some person more energetic than themselves endeavours to make searching enquiry There will be no denying the statement, when we make bold to affirm that this class is by far the most numerous, probably because no great strain of ence among men and women of today, is notice- no great strain of activity is required through this difference among men and women of today, is noticeable in all that appeals to their mental make up, it is indisputably more apparent when viewed in relation to religion. So habituated have men and women become in this matter,of quickly accepting the statements of others, and so confused have their minds become as a consequence, that it is rarely a person is to be met with who takes delight in being able to give a sound reason of the hope and belief that spring up within him. As pointed out in previous articles, the fundamental difference between christianity and every other system of religion known to man, is that Jesus Christ is a living Savior, all others, such as dead: and that resurrection from the power of the Virgin Mary, Mohammed, Confucius, etc., are dead: and that resurrection from the power of the grave to "life everlasting" in which they "cannot die anymore", is promised to the faithful believers and followers of Christ.

But, the very reasonable question may be asked : "Can you give any substantial proof that Jesus Christ is living now? We are willing to admit his resurrection to be a tacitly acknowledged fact in history, as also the resurrection of others; and we are also willing to admit that the story of his holy life, and of his death and resurrection, has been and still is the means of turning many to righteosness; but, can we give genuine and certain proof of his being in actutl living existtence today?" How many of the proffessing followers of Christ could answer that question? The witness in your own heart and life may be sufficient proof to you, and rightly so; but it is not of necessity proof to another. Have you ever noticed how even God himself does not leave his own word without witness? Have you noticed how invariably (in his dealings with mankind) gives evidence of a substantial nature where, such is reasonably demanded? Surely then it behoves us to do the same when desired. If Jesus Christ is truly living today such fact can be proved, and the faith and testimony of his followers cannot but be strengthened thereby.

This then is the object of this little paper, viz: To prove Jesus Christ is actually alive. How thrilling the task! It rivals the keenest romance ever written. Its effects are important and far reaching to individuals and to the world. Think of it!! How many ways will it affect you and yours to know this fact of a certainty? My purpose is to adopt a line of evidence, which though perhaps unique, cannot I believe be gain said. even by the most rigid sceptic, and the most dogged searcher after facts.

History, human history, may be said to be the unbiased and truthful record of events regarding mankind. As such the evidence of history is considered a final arbiter of disputed points. History, as is well known to all students, is nominally divided into "secular" and "sacred," but as sacred history is the record of a nation that has existed on the earth some several thousand years, and for at least the last 3,000 years has been linked in one way or another, with almost every nation of note, events affecting either are much interlocked. Sacred history, it is true, has for its object the recording of events and circumstances relating to the "chosen people," and only touches the secular where they commingle, in as brief a manner as possible. It was at one time considered a mark of learning to disparage the sacred writings, but today they are considered a valuable corroborative and the accuracy of the statements beyond question.

The fact that the Hebrew scriptures repeatedly promise the people of Israel a "Messiah" to whom eventually the "Kingdom of Israel" should be given in perpetuity, and through whom ultimately, peace and righteousness should encircle the earth, is one of the outstanding features of its pages. That the Messiah should suffer, and bear the sins of his people and of the world, is also attested.

Jesus Christ claimed to be the fulfillment of these promises, and nearly 2,000 years have not sufficed to disprove his claim. As a farther result of the fulfillment of prophecy, Israel has been scattered to the end of the earth, and for many hudreds of years have been marvellously preserved as a distinct people, without a king, and without a kingdom, hated by all peoples. This condition is according to scripture, to continue "until he come whose right it is, and I will give it to him" (Ez. xxi:25-27). According to God's promise to David, the Messiah was to be of the lineage of David and to sit on his throne. Briefly then, notice how at the birth of Jesus it was announced that "God should give unto him the throne of his father David," and that he should "reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there should be no end."

That Jesus was born of the house and lineage of David is amply attested—that he claimed to be king of the Jews, and that such was the official charge against him, is a matter of historic fact. His resurrection from the grave, was the united verdict of many witnesses, and is the tacit testimony of history and the world.

Now briefly let us sum up our points:

First—The Jews were to be scattered and the Kingdom to be overturned "until he come whose right it is." Notice the word "until."

Second—Had the period of dispersion been brief miraculous power would have been denied. Covering, as it does, thousands of years, and the nation still preserved, clearly proves design and purpose at the hand of an overruling God.

Third—The Messiah was prophesied of by direct prophecy and by type in two main aspects: First, as a sin bearer (see Isa. 53); and second, as ultimately to sit on the throne of David (Isa. 1:26; 2 Sam. vii:12-16; Luke 1:31-33).

Fourth—The facts of his death, burial and resurrection are all in accordance with prophecy.

Fifth—The many promises by God in sacred history of the return of the Jews to the land promised to them and to their fathers, when they shall be one people, and have one king reign over them (Ez. 37:21; Isa. 23:5, 6; Amos 9:14:15).

Sixth—The undisputed fact that these promises are now literally working out in actual history at the present time. The return of the Jews to their own land, after an absence of 2000 years, is no sinecure; for it is acknowledged to be one of the platforms in settlement of the present terrible war.

Seventh—We have the land preserved for the people, and the people preserved for the land, which surely is no haphazard coincidence. In this connection it is well to notice how even the prophecy of Joel as to the wealth of the land, and the promise of the return of the early and latter rain, is literally in course of fulfillment this day; for rain is steadily on the increase each succeeding year. All these things being so, what sane man can fail to see the definite working out of a supreme plan by a supreme being, and that the only logical conclusion to which we can come is that God has the king ready; also according to promise, that king is the Lord Jesus Christ whom he raised from the dead for that purpose (Acts 2), and who by prophecy and by type, and by historical fact is so linked to the wonderful purposes of God which have been and are unfolding step by step, as to be inseparable from the whole. Surely in the light of such evidence of events now occuring, ample proof is contained that Jesus Christ lives, for he is necessary for their complete fulfilment. And how will it affect this earth of ours which has for thousands of years been steeped in misery? We cannot begin to tell, for Paul says: "Where sin abounded, grace shall much more abound." Isaiah says, "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord." Peter says, "We look for a new heavens and earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Truly "He shall appear a second time apart from sin unto salvation"—and what a salvation it will be!

"Behold a king shall reign in righteousness." "Of the increase of his government and peace, there shall be no end." "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree . . and the earth shall yield her increase: and every man shall dwell securely."

How we long to make you realize something of the wonderful things God Almighty has in store! How wonderfully they are suited to the evident needs of mankind and how beautifully they harmonize with and satisfy the natural desires of his God-given nature! All the problems which have for so long baffled humanity will then find solution forever.

Yours in living hope,

R. H. Judd.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LEAF

LESSON XI.

Memory Text.

"He hath showed thee, O man, what is good: and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God" (Micah. 6:8).

1, "And brought them out and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved?

2. "And they said ,Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house.

3 "And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house.

4 "And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptised, he and all his, straightway" (Acts 16:30-33).

5. "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.

5. "He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:15,16).

7. "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ they were baptised both men and women "(Acts 8:12).

8. "I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have showed you and taught you publicly, and from house to house.

9. "Testifying both to the Jews and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ"(Acts 20:20,21).

10. "But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them.

11. "And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Jesus Christ "(Tim. 3:14,15).

Practical Thoughts

This is the most important subject in the Bible and should be studied with care. Faith and works cannot be separated in relation to salvation What must I believe and what must I do?

Abraham's faith was counted for righteousness,and it is said of him that he believed God. God has made very precious promises in the gospel and he requires that we accept them and do what he has commanded. There are three things promised in the gospel:

1. An inheritance in the earth:
2. A position in the kingdom of God as kings and priests;
3. Incorruptibility and immortality; and all these blessings are conditional, that is to say, dependent on faith in the gospel and obedience to the same. With these points before us it will not be difficult to see that God requires implicit faith and ready obedience. The gospel of Christ, the gospel of the kingdom, the word of faith, the word of the kingdom, the word of the Lord, are all of them phrases which relate to the glad tidings of salvation through Christ, and are generally included in the term"the gospel," and this is God's power of saving men. Let us believe and obey.

Notes on the Lesson

Brought them out. Paul and Silas had been cast into prison and the jailor asks of them the important question, "what must I do to be saved?"

2. Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ.

How much is there in this statement! It includes more than simply believing that there exists such a person: it includes the doctrines he taught, the promises he made, and his ability to make them good.

3. Word of the Lord. Signifies the same as "the gospel" (Acts 10:36,37; Mark 1:14; 1 Pet.1:25).

5. World. Gr. Kosmos.

Every Creature. The whole creation, or more literally, to all the creation.

6. Baptised. Dipped, immersed, or plunged into water.

7. Both Men and Women. There is no prohibition on account of sex. The women as well as the men were baptised. Paul writes we are all one in Christ Jesus.

9. Repentance toward God. Repentance is necessary. Jesus says: "EXCEPT ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." "Peter said, "REPENT and be baptised."

10. Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned. Jesus says. "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." To believe is necessary, to repent is necessary, to be baptised is necessary, yet these are not enougn: we are to continue faithful unto the end. A holy life is indispensible to happiness even in this life, and it certainly is for the life to come.

11 Holy Scriptures. The Old Testament Scriptures were no doubt here referred to, as the New Scriptures were not yet written, or at least collected together.

Through faith. Observe salvation comes through faith in Jesus Christ and a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures.

The gospel has but a forced alliance with war. Its doctrines of human brotherhood would ring strangely between the opposed ranks. The bellowing speech of cannon and the baptism of blood mock its liturgies and sacraments. —Chapin

These words of President Wilson we commend to all thoughtful readers: "The example of America must be a special example, and must be an example not merely of peace because it will not fight, but because peace is a healing and elevating influence of the world, and strife is not."

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

In this number appears the first lesson of a series entitled "Bible Lessons on First Principles." We have long felt the need of Bible lessons which would explain forcefully, elaborately and plainly the vital elements of the gospel of the kingdom of God. Among the many reasons which have prompted us to begin this series of lessons, are the following:

1. Sinners are ignorant of the truth, and therefore have no interest in it. They cannot have an interest in something which they do not understand. The lessons are written to awaken their interest.

2. Even after their interest is aroused, they cannot understand the Scriptures without the guidance of a teacher (Acts 8:30,31). We need the lessons to teach sinners the truth, even after they are seeking to learn it themselves.

3. Many brethren live in isolation. They are deprived of the blessings and benefits of meeting with those of like faith. They never hear a sermon in which the kingdom of God is expounded and explained. Often they have children, and without Sunday school advantages, they never learn the truth as they should learn it. The lessons proposed are intended to help such parents communicate the truth to their children.

4. Many reports of brethren and sisters being re-baptized come to us. They are baptized prematurely; afterwards they learn the gospel, and then they have no peace of conscience until they are baptized in an intelligent faith. The proposed lessons are written to destroy this evil practice of re-baptism, which is too common among us.

5. Then our own brethren need such lessons for private study. Even where there are churches, they are needed for evangelistic work among unbelievers, and for Bible classes and Bereans lessons. We get rusty on the truth very quickly unless we frequently review it. For price of the lessons, see page twelve of The Restitution.

COMMUNICATIONS

From C. H. Dresser

Dear Restitution: Please find enclosed postoffice order for the long past dues for the grand old paper, The Restitution. This delay was caused by sickness of myself and wife, mostly of my wife. I never expected her to be well again. Our doctor and nurse bills have been very heavy, but I don't see how I could live without the paper: it is such good company to me. Such loving and inspiring letters.

From Flora A. Wood

Dear Brother Huggins:

I am writing another letter, but I don't think I will write again on this subject.

Two dear brethren sent me five dollars apiece. One of them said: "Sister Wood, I intended to send this to the Linograph Fund, but have already sent five, so will send this to you." Another brother says: "I intended to send ten dollars to the Linograph Fund, but will divide with you. I send you a bank check for $4.90, and ten cents in silver to make it five dollars."

Now I feel, inasmuch as my needs are more than supplied, that I ought to send this on to the Linograph Fund, and I am writing this to say to those two brethren whom I greatly love in the Lord, Do not think I do not appreciate your loving kindness to me, for I do. But I feel that this money belongs to the Lord, and it gives me more joy to send it to him than to buy even necessities of life with it. It is a source of grief with me that I can never have a part in the great and glorious privilege of lending to the Lord, or rather returning unto him that which he has loaned to me. Jesus calls it rendering unto God "the things that are God's." I sent a letter to The Restitution just as soon as my debts were paid, but I have received many letters since; and brethren, I want to take some of that money and pay for The Restitution, which you have so generously sent me all these years. You will not feel hurt or grieved, will you? I do not feel right to keep so much for my personal use. I want to say to you all that you have made it possible for me to face the coming winter without anxiety--something I have not been able to do for years.

Brother Huggins, enclosed find postoffice order. Please put in the Linograph Fund as coming from two brethren, names unknown.

I received 105 letters from the brethren.

Your Sister desiring an entrance into the Everlasting Kingdom of God,

From Brother Martin Pavella

My Dear Brother In the Faith:

If you think the following answers to the questions of Bro. H. B. Hathaway are correct, and if you have no better ones at hand, make use of them.

Matt. 10:23: "But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of Man be come." This passage does not contain a promise of the coming of the Son of Man, except in an indirect way, for it does not say that Jesus will come before their going over all the cities of Israel, but it says that the disciples would not be able to go over the cities of Israel, even if they would live till his coming, because of the persecutions they would be subjected to by the Jews.

John 9:2: "And his disciples asked him, saying, Rabbi, who sinned, this man, or his parents, that he should be born blind?" Brother Hathaway would have done better by asking his friend to explain this question: "How could that man sin before he was born?" Because neither I, nor anybody else, who considers the bible to be the truth, can explain it for the reason; that Jesus says that he did not sin. Is it not foolish to ask; "How did he sin?" when Jesus says he did not sin? The 3rd verse says: "Wesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents; but that the works of God should be manifest in him."

Suppose Jesus would not have answered the disciples' question, what then? Exod. 20:5 gives the answer thus; "I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." Jesus said that there is not always a sin behind such a visiting.

Regarding the possibility of that man's sinning before he was born, there is but one biblical answer to it: he could not. Sin is the transgression of God' law. There is no commandment in the bible for babes before they are born, consequently they can not transgress, cannot sin. Perhaps Brother Hathaway's friend had the soul of that man in his mind? Well, there is not a word about his soul; it's all about him, the man himself.

The soul was not blind; the man was blind,

If the soul could have done the sinning, then the soul must have been made blind, not the innocent body. Can you imagine a blind soul? If you can, then why can you not imagine a dead soul ,too?

With greetings and best regards to you, to your esteemed family and the church,

I am yours with love.

THE WEEK OF AGES

Allen D. Strickler

The great week of ages is composed of seven long, and to man, incomprehensible periods of time. In the very beginning of Divine Revelation to man, commencing with the first chapter of Genesis, an account is given of each of these ages or periods of time. In connection with each of these day periods, the statement is made as per Revised Version, "there was evening and there was morning." These great ages in the first beginning started in darkness--"And the earth was waste and void; and darkness was upon the face of the waters."—darkness first, then afterward, light or morning: and so we find the order as stated, viz., "There was evening and there was morning, one day." "a second day," "a third day," "a fourth day," "a fifth day," "the sixth day;" each day having its evening and morning; each great period of time, or day, starting with comparative darkness, and ending in comparative brightness. There is a gradual progression or development to a higher state or condition from the first day until the seventh day is reached, which does not begin with an evening, and end with a morning; but it starts with the morning that ends the sixth day. This seventh day period starts with the perfection of light; its sun never sets, and shall not go down. The number seven in the Bible is used to signify perfection; and so when the work of God during the past six great days of his creative work shall have been completed and finished; when he looks upon it and sees that it is "very good," then, and not until then, will he rest from his labor. "God's eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Eph. 3:14), will then have been accomplished: that is, he will have gathered together in one all things in Christ, both which are in the heavens, and which are on the earth" (Eph. 1:10) —the new millennium heavens, and the new millennium earth, which the prophet Isaiah speaks of in the 65th chapter of the book of his prophecy, will at the end of the thousand years reign of Christ on earth, will both, be found in Christ and under him; and his reign has this purpose in view, so that as Paul says: "God may be all in all"; or as John the Revelator states it: "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." Here now, is the end of the six days of the great creative week of ages, when God finds himself "all, and in all."

At the end of the sixth day of the week of ages, it is recorded that God saw everything that he had made, and, "behold, it was very good." In the sixth day, when God said, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness," he had previously made the "cattle, and creeping things, and beast of the earth after his kind." This animal creation, as geology shows, occurred an immense period of time before the creation of man; so the sixth creative day, is a day of long duration, and even now being not yet ended; but when it does end, and God looks upon man, he will find him "very good," and that he had accomplished his purpose to create man in his image and likeness. This creation of man in the image of God, was "his eternal purpose," which he purposed in himself (Eph. 3:11; 1:9).

This "very good" man that God is making and unto whom he said, "have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth," will be the coming man of the ages. Paul referring to this man says: "Till we all attain unto the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a fullgrown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Eph. 4:13). Man in the image of God is yet in the making; and he will have to measure up to the fulness of Christ. The miniature account of the creation in the first chapter of Genesis, teaches us that his purpose to create man in his image will be accomplished. The prophet of the Lord said: "God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he not said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall not he make it good" (Num. 23:19)? "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with my glory." It is stated in Ex. 33:18, that Moses said, 'I pray thee, show me thy glory. And he said, I will make all my goodness pass before thee; and proclaim the name of the Lord before thee." In the 34th chapter we see how this was done. Verse 6: "And Jehovah passed by before him, and proclaimed Jehovah. The Jehovah Elohim, merciful and gracious, long suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin and that will by no means clear the guilty." In this proclamation of the name of Jehovah, we have the proclamation of his glory, which we see is composed of seven principles, which are attributes of the moral character of Jehovah. He is merciful, gracious, longsuffering, goodness, truth, forgiving, justice. Jehovah stands for these attributes; and the name which he has chosen to be known by signifies "I will be who I will be." This we understand to signify that these seven divine attributes will be the moral attributes of the man made in the image of God. These attributes make up God's glory, and so when these become the attributes of the everlasting inhabitants of the earth, then, as the Lord declared to Moses, the whole earth will be filled with his glory.

The prophet Habakkuk says: "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." Isaiah says, "Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified" (ch. 60:21). God will be satisfied with nothing short of these seven moral attributes in those who will inherit the land and earth forever. "Fret not thyself because of evil doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity. For they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb." "For evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth.

In the above quotation from Isa. 60:21 we learn that the righteous are the work of God's hands that he may be glorified. In Rev. 4:11, we also learn that God created all things; that they exist and were created for his pleasure. The making of man in the image of God will be the crowning glory of all his work, and when the work shall be completed, it will afford the creator the greatest of satisfaction and pleasure. His work, the work of his hands, it is not yet completed, neither will it be at the second advent of Christ; no, not until "the end" comes when Christ delivers up the kingdom to God the Father, who then "will be all in all." "In the dispensation of the fulness of times" (Eph. 1:10), the greatest part of the work of God in making man into his image will be accomplished. It will be in "the fulness of times." Away back in the incomprehensible past these times commenced with the beginning of the creation of this earth, so that when the proper time should have arrived for the making of "man in the image and likeness" of God, the living image would have a place to live. "And God said, Let us make man in our image after our likeness." Behold how great and difficult the work! "For the creation was subjected to vanity, not of its own will, but by reason of him who subjected it in hope" (Rom. 8:20).

It was absolutely necessary that in the making of man in the image of God, he should know good and evil. Without the knowledge of good and evil, and the ability to choose the one or the other, no character either good or bad, is possible. Man starting without a moral character when placed under temptation, would yield to the appeals of his five senses and the natural impulses of the nature with which he was created. His plung into sin and evil was therefore a forgone and unavoidable happening. In view of what would happen to such a creature as man, God made him of the dust of the ground, so that he could die should he sin. Man, an unsophisticated novice in his start some six thousand years ago, drank of a poisoned cup, when he yielded to his own natural impulses unregulated and uncontroled by the commands of God who created a creature with such impulses. To drink of this cup was to become possessed of an experience with sorrow, pain and anguish, that is necessary as a safe guard for every man who comes to be made in the image of God. An automobile on the city street, without a control and regulating hand, runs wild, and not only destroys the neighbor car, but wrecks itself. The laws of God that govern the natural and moral universe, are such that they cannot be violated or transgressed without suffering the penalty attached to such laws. Man is so constituted that without suffering pain because of breaking God's laws, he cannot learn to obey those laws: and without obeying those laws, he cannot be made in the image of God. Furthermore, just so long as man remains uncreated in the image of God, it is not safe to trust him with a "spiritual body," without which there is no eternal life. The apostle says, "If there is a natural body, there is also a spiritual body," "Howbeit that is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; then that which is spiritual" (Cor. 15:44,46).

The potentiality of man with a spiritual body is beyond our finite comprehension; and because of what is possible with such a body, God never has nor never will allow an undeveloped mental and moral man, one not made in his image, to have a spiritual body. There is only one other kind of body spoken of in the Bible, which is a mortal or natural body. The mortal body is spoken of as "flesh and blood," and mostly, as simply "flesh." What becomes of "flesh" we are not left in doubt. Peter says, "For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withered, and the flower falleth" (1 Pet. 1:24; Isa. 40:6-8). Paul, speaking about himself as an unenlightened natural man says: "I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." He also said, "By the law is the knowledge of sin." The unenlightened natural man in the law of God, is comparable to a man undertaking to run a locomotive on a railroad, who knows nothing about its control, not knowing how, or when, to turn on or off the steam.

The first thing that Paul did when he preached to the Gentiles by the command of Christ, was to enlighten them concerning God and his laws. "To open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light" (Acts 26:18). Yes, "in the dispensation of fulness of times," this great moral work with man will be finished. In the fulness of all the "times" which will be reached in the millennium, the work will end. Consider these "times" as they stand related to "the Week of Ages" as outlined in the first chapter of Genesis, as also in "the times and seasons" belonging to the chronology of prophecy. Consider how great that God must be, who could work and wait, through all the vast geologic times or periods of the six days of the week of ages. Each period of time, saw completed the work which God purposed should be done during that time, so that when the earth had reached that condition that was necessary in order to sustain human life, human life could appear, and did appear by direct creative power being exercised by the God, who before "the earth was," when there were no depths," when there were no fountains abounding with water, before the hills," purposed in himself that he would create an earth or planet for the everlasting home of the coming man, whom he purposed in the beginning, should be created or made in his own image.

The apostle Paul in Heb. 2:6-8, gives us a view of the coming man of the ages, in the making and also when he is a finished production of the hand of Almighty God. "But one in a certain place testified, saying What is man, that thou art mindful of him? Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the work of thy hands: thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all things in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him."

THE LITTLE LAD OF GALILEE

A Story Primarily for the Children

BY S. ROXANA WINCE

It was a long time ago in the month of Nisan or March that a little lad took the road leading around the northern shores of "the beautiful sea of Galilee" to the plain of Batiha, some distance from Bethsaida-Julias, and all covered at this season of the year with green grass and fragrant flowers.

I want to tell the children about this little lad, and how he gave all the little store of food in his basket to Jesus, just as you have given your money for the Linograph.

He must have seen Jesus before this time, heard him talk, and learned to love him, for he was not going to Batiha to see the flowers but to see the dear man who loved and blessed little boys like him.

The disciples of Jesus had all been away quite a long time, going from house to house, two by two, to tell the story of the new kingdom of love and peace that was by and by to fill the whole earth with Jesus as its king. And Jesus himself had been out telling the same sweet story in all the towns of the region lying just west of the sea. Now, they had come back, to meet at Batiha and talk things over and rest.

But it was near the time of the Passaver and all the towns were full of people on their way to Jerusaleum to keep the feast. Some of them saw Jesus get into a boat at Capernaum and watched to see where he was going, then they set out in great haste, taking their sick friends along. The folks in the towns on the way heard the shouts of joy that went up from the lips of these over the coming back of Jesus, and they two joined the hurrying crowd.

The little boy was in that throng. He went not only because he loved Jesus and wanted to hear him tell about the sower, the mustard tree and the prodigal son, but also because he wanted to see Jesus touch the men burning up with the fever, and see the fever leave them in a moment of time. See the limbs of poor cripples made as straight and as strong as his own; the ugly sores of the leper all go away, and blind eyes made to see that had never seen before. And his wish was gratified, for tired as Jesus was, not a sick person in all that vast throng was left unhealed. It was marvelous to the child. No one else that he knew could do such things, not even the greatest doctors among his people.

But now it was time for the sermon to begin, and gathering the people around him Jesus talked to them of the Kingdom of God, and taught them so many things, that they forgot all about how tired and hungry they were, and how fast the day was going.

Even the little boy had forgotten that there was food in his basket, though he had not tasted a morsel since he had kissed his mother good bye in the morning. Yet, still he stayed on, and so did the multitude; stayed on, because some of these Benjamites, like the Benjamite disciples of Jesus, had learned to love that precious Saviour, and the truths he taught, and were destined to carry the glad tidings of the kingdom to other parts of the world.

But not a loaf of bread, not a single fish could be bought out on that uncultivated plain. So the disciples said to Jesus: "Send them away, that they may go into the country round about and into the villages, and buy themselves bread." But Jesus said: "No, they can't go until they have something to eat; they would faint on the road." Philip replied that two hundred pennyworth of bread would not be sufficient for them—a sum equal to thirty dollars; it would take everything they had, and beside, where was the food to come from?

But Andrew said, "There is a lad here! He has five barley loaves and two small fishes, but what are they among so many?"

"Make the people sit down," said Jesus, "and you will see." The little boy came with the basket. He was giving up his supper so Jesus could have something to eat. He was glad to do it. He could wait until he got home. How surprised he must have been, when Jesus, after giving thanks, began breaking and distributing the loaves to his disciples, and they to them that were set down, five thousand of them, beside women and children. And the fishes in the same way; and still there was bread and fish in his hands, until the last person had had his fill, he himself among the rest! It was far more marvelous than the stories his mother had told him about the prophets.

And see, how much the men are gathering up! There was only his little basket full in the first place, and now there are twelve. He has had his supper, just the same as he would, if he had not given it away. And the dear man who loves the children, has had his supper too, and so have all that vast throng. And there is a basket full left for each one of the twelve disciples. What can it all mean? We wonder if he solved the puzzle? Can my little friends who are giving their dimes and dollars to get the Linograph?

It is like this: the bread we eat every day keeps us alive now, but it cannot always do this. A time will come when we must die. But there is another kind of bread. Jesus says of himself: "I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." To give his flesh was to give his life. Jesus did this when he died on the cross. To believe on him, to believe that we can be saved because he died, is like eating bread, because it is in this way and in no other, that we can get the life that will have no end. You must have "the bread that came down from heaven" for your very own, if you want to live on and on beyond the grave in the glorious kingdom of God, and you can have him as this bread, only by taking him as your Savior in the holy ordinance of baptism, and by giving your lives to his service.

But what did it mean, the feeding of so many with such a little gift? Just how much can be done with our little mites when we put them into the hands of Jesus! He can make our small dimes and seemingly insignificant dollars, feed hungry thousands with the words of life, and leave us with just as much and more of blessing in the way of bread, than we had, before.

You will see how this can be dear children, when we get that Linograph, and our paper brings many a man and woman to Jesus.

SEEKING THE TRUTH

John: Tom, I notice that the majority of preachers are ready to reject every passage of Scripture that does not agree with their creed: but since we took up the study of God's word, I have noticed that you seem to have the uttermost confidence in the word of God.

Tom: Yes, John; I am sorry to say that the ministers who should teach the word are its worse enemies. They are in fact wolves in sheep's clothing, and for that reason they are dangerous, because the poor sheep may be led astray, and find when its too late that these hirelings only cared for the wool and mutton.

Jesus forsaw this condition, and in Luke 18:8 asked this question: "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Paul also warns us of the departure from the faith once delivered to the Saints. In 2 Tim. 4:3,4, after charging Timothy to preach the word, he says: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine: but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." However, we must not follow them: for in Isa. 8:20 we are commanded to go to the law and to the testimony, and are told that those who do not speak according to the word, have no light in them.

John: I see that this departure is another proof of the inspiration of God's word, for it is fulfilling the word.

Tom: In order that you may understand how Christ, who is our model, viewed the word, I propose to set before you what he has said on this subject. In John 14:1 you will see that he commands us to believe on him. When you see what he has said on this subject you will wonder how any who profess to follow him can for one moment doubt the word of God. He never expressed a doubt of one single passage of scripture, and never said a verse was mistranslated. So you will see that those who so represent things do not follow the example of the Great Teacher, the one who spoke with authority (Matt. 7:29).

John: Tom, I believe it would be a good idea to gather up what the Master has said on this subject, and send it in to your Brother Huggins and have it printed in The Restitution: for I have no doubt but that it will help to build up your brethren in the most holy faith, and will give them more strength to stand for the truth.

Tom: Very well, John; we will begin with Matt. 5:17,18: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, (first 5 books of Bible), or the phophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot, (smallest letter in Heb. alphabet) or one tittle (a small particle) shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." "The Scripture can not be broken" (Jno. 10:35). "The Scriptures must be fulfilled" (Mark 14:49). "Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels? But how then shall the Scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be" (Matt. 26:53,54)? "But all this was done, that the Scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled" (Matt. 26:56). "And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms concerning me" (Luke 24:44). For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me. But if ye believed not his writings, how shall ye believe my words" (Jno. 5:46,47). His command is: "Search the Scriptures . . for they are they that testify of me" (Jno. 5:39). J. H. Anderson.

When we have been enabled to overcome temptations or subdue some selfish inclination, to do something to the honor and glory of God we have overcome self. Have we given honor to whom it is due? Can we truthfully say that there was no feeling of self complacency; no self righteous commendation? We should render thanks to God for the greatness of his sufficiency which was present when we needed it. When we have been fairly successful in over coming and have been more than usually calm in mind, we may be prone to feel a little too much satisfied with ourselves, and forget that it has all been God's doings, and not our own. We cannot do anything without his help, not even think a good thought, much less raise good thoughts or affection in others. Our sufficiency is all of God, and his grace is sufficient to furnish us with every good thought and deed.

I can do all things through Christ which strengthenth me. Do we realize the sustaining strength of our Savior, and seek by prayer to comprehend more practically our own utter helplessness? We must seek to set forth the Savior's strength, not our own; and use that strength in his service. When we arise in the morning, let our first thought be, What can we do for our Savior today? Then watch for opportunities. If we claim the strength of Christ in our hearts it will give us courage in every conflict. Could we not make our burdens light whatever they may be by framing our hearts to the burdens and making God's will our law.

He will not fail or forsake us. We often provoke God to forsake us by our departure from him, yet we expect that he will not fail us. Would we deal thus with our earthly friends? Then how can we be so ungrateful to him who has done more for us than all the world beside? We may not always realize our Father's presence, but we should remember the fault is in ourselves. So let it be our constant prayer that we may be enabled more to draw still deeper from his unfailing fullness.

Jesus Christ is the same yesterday today and forever. Do we practically believe in the unchangeableness of our Redeemer, although our heart should be changed, its moods and feelings ever fluctuating: sometimes cold, and then hard? Yet our Savior never changes. His love is ever the same. Let us try to look away from our uncertain selves to Jesus, the Rock, and be willing to look upon him as our way, since by his holy teachings and example he shows us our duty. Let us accept Jesus as the truth, that which is opposed to falsehood and error, as his doctrine is true, and we need seek for no other that the truth as it is in Jesus, and we may feel that God looks upon us with favor. As the sins of the past have been blotted out, are forgotten by him, cast behind him, when looking back on past years can we recall much labor of ours in the Lord's service? Have we tried very earnestly to do many things to his honor or glory? If we have, and see no fruit to cheer the heart, is it not comforting to know that the word spoken in fear and trembling cannot fall to the ground, but works its destined mission? "My word shall not return unto me void." So if the difficulties we must meet with; instead of discouraging should stimulate us to greater diligence, to closer self-examination, more fervent prayer and constant perusal of God's word, then God will repard us, as he says in Mark, "she hos done what she could."
could."

May we so order our lives that the Savior's words may apply to us. Let it be our earnest desire to do what we can, no matter how small a thing it may be, and seek after that real goodness, which is the one thing needful, which alone can profit for this life, and that which is to come.

ANIMALS UNDER SHELL FIRE

The proverbial sphinx-like imperturbability of cats is once again demonstrated by the fact that pussy is the only quadruped known to face shells without a natural feeling of trepidation, says an English exchange. Even after two years of devastating bombardment, Ypres, the dead city of the Flanders plain, still boasts a number of cats which prowl and flourish in this wilderness of calcined debris. Horses are more human, inasmuch as they are afraid of shells, but endeavor to show a bold front. Dogs are the greatest cowards, and the sound of a "Jack Johnson" sets them running as fast as their legs can carry them from the danger zone. Perhaps, however, the most unaffected of all natural life within sound of the guns are larks and sparrows. These birds treat a hurricane fire with aloofness and contempt, singing and chirping through all the din as if the uproar were but an uninvited accompaniment to their song.

A theological student was sent one Sunday to supply a vacant pulpit in a Connecticut valley town. A few days after he received a copy of the weekly paper of that place with the following item marked: "Rev. ——— ———, of the senior class at Yale Seminary, supplied the pulpit of the Congregational Church last Sunday, and the church will now be closed three weeks for repairs."—Cleveland Leader.

Lesson II

THE WORD OF GOD IN THREEFOLD ASPECT

I. As Revelation

The Scriptures have been revealed and inspired by God, and are "in truth the word of God" (2 Tim. 3;15-17: 4:1-4; 2 Pet. 1:19,20; 1 Pet. 1:10,11; John 11:51; Numb. 16: 28; Gen 41:16; Dan, 2;30,28; 1 Thess. 1:13).

II. As Authority

Revealed and inspired by God, the Scriptures are the only infallible standard of right. Their unique and exclusive authority destroys all inimical and false standards of authority which are prevalent in the world, among which may be mentioned specifically:

(a) Our hearts (Numb. 15:37-40; Deut. 29:19: 20:19: Prov. 28:25,26; Jer. 9:13,14;11:7,8; 23:16,26).

(b) Our thoughts (Acts 26:8-12; John 16:2: Isa. 55: 7,8; 2 Cor. 10:4,5).

(c) Our conscience (Acts 23:1,2; 1 Tim. 1:13; 2 Tim. 1:3).

(d) Our ways (Judges 2:19; Isa. 53:6; Hos. 10:13: Isa 55:6,7,8).

(e) Our wills (Gal. 5:16-21; John 5:30; 6:38; Rom. 15:3; Luke 22:40-42; Heb. 10:7).

III. As the criterion by which God's Blessings and Curses are (to be) Disbursed Among Men

1. Blessings, if we obey his word (Psa. 32:8,9; 73:24; Deut. 30:11-20).

2. Curses, if we disobey it (Acts 20:27; Isa. 30:8-10; Psa. 81:12; Luke 7:30; Prov. 1:24,25; 2 Chron. 36:15,16; Psa. 107:10,11; Prov. 13:13; Isa. 5:24; Zech . 7:11,12; Matt. 15 chapter).

Synthetic Remarks on the Lesson

I. The Bible as Revelation. The word "inspiration" means "a supernatural divine influence on the prophets, apostles, or sacred writers, by which they were qualified to communicate moral or religious truth with authority; a miraculous influence which qualifies men to receive and communicate divine truth" (Webster). It appears from this definition that inspiration is an "influence" exerted by one person upon another. The inspirer wields such an "influence" upon the inspired that he is dominated and "moved" to write the will and words of the inspirer (2 Pet. 1:19,20). It is self evident, ergo, that inspiration requires at least two persons; one to act, and another to be acted upon. The first is the author of the statements spoken or written; the second is merely an amanuensis. The inspirer breathes "with authority" through the organs of the inspired, transmitting to him all his own authority (Matt. 10:1,5,14,15, 40). Since the inspired writers and speakers wrote and spoke in the name of God and represented him officially, they are called in the margin of Hos. 9:7, and accordantly with the Hebrew text, "men of the spirit," because they were "overshadowed" with the Holy Spirit (Luke 1:35), and "endued (Greek,endus) with power from on high," or "clothed with power," as the Revised Version correctly translates the passage (Luke 24:49). Thus "overshadowed" and "clothed" with "miraculuous influence" the sacred penman spoke and wrote with the "authority" of God. Their own minds and wills were subordinated, and God's asserted (2 Pet. 1:19,20). "They spake not of themselves" (John 11:51). They were neither wiser (Dan. 2:30; 1 Cor. 1:25-29), nor holier, than other men (Acts 3.12). But by "the inspiration of the Almighty" (Job 32:8) "the God of heaven" (Dan. 2:28) has revealed his words, mind and wisdom, untainted with the "will of the flesh, and the will of man" (John 1:13; Gen. 41:16). The delectable "waters of life" have been poured out in "earthen vessels" (2 Cor. 4:7). Weak erratic men through whom God spoke (Heb. 1:1) are called "earthen" because they are "of the earth, earthy" (1 Cor. 15:17); and "vessels" because they are not the authors and founders of the gospel, but simply instruments, vessels which contain the heavenly treasure, or holy deposit of God. And the philosophy of God working thus through mortal men is to make it evident to all discriminating minds that "the excellency of the power may be seen to be of God, and not of us" (2 Cor. 4:7). Therefore the Scriptures are "in truth the word of God" (1 Thess. 1:13), "not in word only, but also in power, and the Holy Spirit" (1 Thess. 1:5; Rom. 1:16). "All Scripture is given by inspiration ofGod" (2 Tim. 3:16) in such an absolute sense that the divine writers could not reverse the statements God "moved" them to make, try as they would. When the spirit of God came upon Balaam (Numb. 24:2), although the prophet was a wicked man (2 Pet. 2.15), yet he was put under the restraining "influence" of God completely: "Only the word that I shall speak unto thee, that thou shalt speak:" "I have received a commandment to bless: and he hath blessed; and I cannot reverse it" (Numb. 22:35; 23:20). In no instance did the "inspiration of God" permit the minds of the Bible writers to assert themselves (Numb. 16:28; 2Cor. 10:4,5). The Bible reveals only God's mind, God's will, God's wisdom, and God's words.

II. The Bible as Authority. Exclusive "authority" is a logical thought resulting from inspiration. In fact the communication of moral and religious truth "with authority" is a fundamental idea attached to the word "inspiration," as Websters affirms. When the world then rejects the Scriptures as God's word, they reject the "authority" of God, and the only divine standard of right in the world (Luke 16:29). In its place, however, they substitute the traditions of men (Matt. 15:6), and many other false standards of righteousness. We can only mention the following false standards, to which the world is only too loyal:

(a) Their hearts. From the rostrum it is now customary for ministers to "speak a vision out of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord" (Jer. 23:16,21). Such preaching violates the divine charge, "Preach the word" (2 Tim.4:2). Preaching their own "visions" leads the people to "walk after the imagination of their own heart" (Jer. 9:13,14). Both ministers and people are under the curse appointed for those who trust in man (Jer. 17:5). Mislead, culpable people! "He that trusteth in his heart is a fool" (Prov. 28:26). "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked" (Jer 17:9). If the heart is so deceitful and wicked as this, is it safe to repose confidence in it? Will you give over yourself to the guidance of such a miserable master? Instead of trusting in our hearts, we should know that they are great deeps of iniquity, out of which emerge all the blighting, ruinous and voluptuous sins of men (Matt. 15:18-20).

(b) Their thoughts. We are forbidden to trust in princes and the sons of men (Psa. 146:3). "We should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead" (2 Cor. 1:9). And our trust in God must be complete: "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not upon thine own understanding" (Prov. 3:5). The carnal mind must be crucified (Rom. 8:6,7). What we think, and "verily think," may be wrong (Acts 26:8-12). Thoughts have been so perverted that "whosoever killeth you, will think that he doeth God service" (John 16:2). Our thoughts, if we trust them, may lead us to commit murder, and then approve it! Our "thoughts" are among the things which God calls upon us to "forsake" (Isa. 55:7,8). Every thought must be brought into subjection to Christ (2 Cor. 10:5).

(c) Their conscience. Many have deified conscience into an "infallible guide," and have supplanted the authority of God's word with the authority of their conscience. See what the conscience of Paul led him to do. A self-confessed blasphemer, persecutor, and murderer (1 Tim. 1:13), yet he maintains that he always did what he "verily thought he ought to do" (Acts 26:9). Doing what he "thought" was right, but which in fact was wrong, he pursued his sinful course with a "pure conscience" (2Tim. 1:3). He declared openly in the face of the Jewish council, even after his conversion: "I have lived in all good conscience before God unto this day" (Acts 23:1). If a "pure conscience" and a "good conscience" led Paul into blasphemy,persecution and murder, will your conscience lead you any better? Will you depend upon conscience to guide you aright, when this so-called "inward spark of divinity" led Paul astray? No reflecting person can believe in the infallible guidance of conscience when he considers the infinitely differing and conflicting decisions which conscience, as judge, renders in precisely the same cases. Nor is conscience a "creature of education." Education can improve faculties, but it can create none. There must be something to educate before education can commence its work. Conscience is a faculty among the original endowments implanted in man by the Creator; not to supplant God in the heart and destroy, by infallible leadership, the utility and supremacy of God's word in the mind. No; conscience rejoices in its dependency, and it looks up with reverential humility for the word of God to prompt all its impulses and decisions. None of our other faculties are so prompt as conscience, when it is in a healthy state, to respond to divine appeals, and say, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth" (1 Sam.3:9). Conscience is an eye; but the eye needs light; conscience is an ear; but the ear needs sound. The best eye discerns nothing in darkness; the best ear hears nothing in silence. Conscience without a light is like Samson without eyes. Instead of leading and guiding infallibly it needs to be led and guided. It must have light. Like all other faculties of our nature, it needs illumination. Locke gave the correct definition of conscience when he said, "It is the power of judging of the rectitude or the pravity of our own actions." Even so. Rectitude has respect to right rule, and pravity implies a departure from one. Obviously then conscience needs a rule to work by, a standard of judgment upon which to base decisions. If she "accuses" or "excuses" (Rom. 2:15), her accusations and exonerations must rest upon fact and law. If she "witnesses" (Rom. 2:15; 2 Cor. 1:9), her testimony relates to conformity to a right rule,or to dereliction and disobedience. The conclusion is plain and unavoidable: There must be a rule or standard for every act of conscience, and that infallible standard to which conscience is subservient, is the word of God.

As showing how fluctuating and faulty conscience is as a standard of right, and how unreliable it is in itself as a guide, we observe that there is

1. A sleepy conscience. It suffers men to go on their sinful ways without shame or remorse. So callous is this faculty within them that it is Scripturally represented as "seared with a hot iron" (1 Tim. 4:2). "Were they ashamed when they committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush" (Jer.6:15). Were they not "past feeling" (Eph. 4:19) they could not go on so cheerfully as they do in open sin and impiety. Then with many there is

2. A partial conscience. They discern what is wrong in others, but not in themselves: or they notice some evils, but not others. Herod would not violate his oath, but he would murder a prophet (Matt. 14:9). And the pharisees would not put into the treasury the money that was the price of blood; but they would persist in persecuting Jesus to death (Matt. 27:3-6,20). Such a conscience many people have today: it would be clamorous if they were to commit some flagrant enormity; while it bears no testimony at all against secret lusts, or against any evils which are current and popular in an ungodly world. With others there is

3. An erroneous conscience. Paul "thought he ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus" (Acts 26:9), and he would have stood condemned in his own mind if he had not labored incessantly to extirpate the Christian name. And our Lord has told us that many would "think they did God service in killing" his faithful followers (John 16:2). Doubtless there are many who, both in civil and religious actions, are instigated by good principles, while yet a clearer view of their duty would represent those actions in a different light. And there is also with many

4. A scrupulous conscience. They both do and forbear many things from a sense of duty, when the things themselves are indifferent in the sight of God. Thus it was with those who were afraid to eat meats that had been prescribed by the Mosaic law (Rom. 14:2,3,5,6). Superstitution may be less common in our day: yet wherever the mind is tinctured with it, there will arise many occasions of condemnation or acquittal in a man's own mind, when the sentence passed is entirely founded in an ignorance of Christian liberty and duty. Conscience then may, and often does, condemn when it ought to acquit, and acquits when it ought to condemn. The Scriptures alone are the infallible standard of right. To this touchstone all the decisions of conscience must be brought for confirmation and final adjudication.

(d) Their ways. In describing a fearful declension in Israel during the reign of the Judges the following language is used: "They ceased not from their own doings, nor from their stubborn way" (Judges 2:19). We all like our "own sweet way," but it is generally the wrong way. Having our own way is the tap root of all our sin. "All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one his own way" (Isa. 53:6). Then since our "own way" has led us astray, it has mislead us, and therefore is discredited as a leader. "We have plowed wickedness, we have reaped iniquity; we have eaten lies." And why such a fearful harvest? The divine answer is, "Because thou didst trust in thy own way, in the multitude of thy mighty men" (Hos. 10:13). Our "own way," the "multitudes" and the "mighty men"—these have all mislead us! These are "other lords" which we must disown, and say to Jehovah, "By thee only do we swear by thy name" (Isa. 26:13). And in taking our oath of allegiance to him he has reasonably and logically stipulated our pardon and reconcilation upon the following conditions: "Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon" (Isa. 55:6,7).

(e) Their wills. "We cannot do the things which we would," and do right (Gal. 5:17). Even Christ did not "please himself" (Rom. 15:3). "I seek not my own will," he said, "but the will of the Father which sent me" (John 5:30). "Not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me," was the motto of his life (John 6:38). His will revolted at Calvary, but his Father's will nailed him to the cross: and conflict of will in this case was settled in the beautiful words: "Not as I will, but as thou wilt;" "Not my will, but thine be done" (Mark 14:36; Luke 22:40-42). And God's will, about which Christ was so greatly concerned, and which he obeyed at the sacrifice of his own, he found, not in his own heart, thoughts, conscience, way, or will, but in "the volume of the book'' (Heb. 10:7). To that volume, dear reader, betake thyself in imitation of Christ, and thou shalt find there, like him, "the good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God" (Rom. 12:2).

III. The Bible the Criterion by which the Blessings and Curses of God are Disbursed Among Men. All the blessings of salvation are conditioned upon an understanding and belief of God's word. To be "a man of God" and "approved of God" are both impossible attainments without the study and knowledge of the Scriptures (2 Tim. 3:17; 2:15). On the other hand, to reject Christ and his words is fatal, for the rejected Christ is to be judge, and the rejected words are to be the standard upon which his decision will be based in the day of judgment (John 12:48). That the rejection of the Scriptures involves a forfeiture of salvation and exposes to irrevocable penal retribution, the following testimonies solemnly and eloquently declare:

> "They mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words . . . . until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy" (Heb. healing) (2 Chron. 36:16).
> "Such sit in darkness . . . . bound in affliction and iron: because they rebelled against the words of God" (Psa. 107:10,11).
> "Whoso despiseth the word shall be destroyed" (Prov. 13:13).
> "As the fire devoureth the stubble . . . . so their root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust: because they have cast away the law of the Lord of hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel" (Isa. 5:24).
> "They refused to hearken and stopped their ears: . . . therefore came great wrath from the Lord of hosts" (Zech. 7:12,13; Prov. 1:24,25).

WELL-TRAINED

A Scottish farmer of a miserly disposition bought a horse at a fair. On the way home he thought a drink of water would refresh it, so he got a pail of water; but the animal would not take it. When he got home, he offered it a feed of corn; but, to his surprise, it would not touch that either.

"Weel," he muttered to himself, "if only I was sure ye were a guid worker, ye're the verra horse for me."—Tid-Bits.

Gratitude for escape from ills and evils which so far have not come nigh our dwelling, is quite as becoming as gratitude for blessings enjoyed. Many of us could well sing the Doxology daily in thankful recognition of the fact that we have escaped even the ill we have justly merited.

OUR HARVEST HOME OFFERING

Let us pay for Linograph by Harvest Home Offering the First week in November

"But when they in their trouble did turn unto the Lord God of Israel and sought him, he was found of them."

What a happy Harvest Home we are to have this year! Never have we had quite such an one before. The Crisis, that we have been called to meet as to our paper, has been just what we needed: It has brought us to our knees; it has turned our eyes toGod; it has filled our lips with pleading prayers, given backbone to our wills, strength to our arms, unconquerable faith and hope to our hearts. It has brought us near O so near to God. Our former acquaintance with him seems poor and distant compared with this, and so different, that I cry out "O Father, I never knew you be fore! never knew you as I know you now."

"Walking with thee
in closest, dearest company."

The Crisis to our paper has done even more, yes, even more than this for us:"it has called out our affections and cemented us in love. We not only know God better, but we know each other better; and to know is to love.

Truly "when we in our trouble did turn unto the Lord God of Israel and seek him, he was found of us." Men mocked. They said: "Your paper is dying, because the blessing of God does not rest upon it. Scarce a ripple would be made if such a little insignificant thing should die. Other good papers, are being sent by the ton into all parts of the world: yours is scarcely known outside of your own little circle of believers."

But The Restitution is not dying. For as if to make answer to those who mock us,its old debts were all paid months ago! and that, too without calling upon any earthly being to help. Who ordered this? Did not the dear heavenly Father? Did he not tell us"to seek first the kingdom, and all the rest should be added?" We set out to get the Linotype that we might, in our humble way, do more and better work for him, and so "hasten the coming of the kingdom." We thought by getting the Linotype we could stop the accumulating of any further bebt, wipe out the old score, and and save our paper, but God has done all this for us, as a manifest token of his favor. David said "My soul shall make her boast in the Lord:" "We will boast in the Lord all the day long."

And shall we not, dear brethren and sisters, do the same? He hath done great things for us; things that seem almost like miracles. Let us return and give him the glory. Let us set apart the first week in November, to make our final offering to him on the Linotype that we may present it to him unencumbered by debt.

If you have had losses, give him an offering, thanking him that all has not been swept away, If unseasonable rains, and long periods of drouth have caused a total failure of some crops, thank him for a bountiful harvest from other fruits and grain. Thank him that you have food, that you have clothing, that you have shelter, that you have friends, that the dear Restitution lives to carry his light, his truth, into other homes, and above all, thank him that you have that precious truth for your own, and that he himself is the Lord your God.

We are very near the goal now. We only have a little over $700,00, to raise. We can do that easily if we continue to put our trust in God.

We trust him when we give. There may be no potatoes in our cellar; the chicken-roosts may have been made bare by thieves, but if we still bring our offerings, that his cause may not suffer, he will provide for us, though we give the last dollar in our possession.

Try it - prove him! Walk out by faith, and share in the blessings that will follow our happy Harvest - Home - Giving, in the present time, and in the greater joy of the great Harvest - Home.

"Toil on till the Lord of the harvest come,
Then share ye his joy in the harvest home."

No. 2

Jesus says: "The sons of this age marry and are given in marriage: but those worthy that age to obtain, and the resurrection which is from among the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither in fact can they die any more; for they are equal to messengers, and are sons of God, being sons of the resurrection" (Luke 20:34-36). This text shows that people of this age who live in the age to come, are worthy of the first resurrection, which is a resurrection from among the dead, and hence is positive proof that dead sinners will not live in the future age.

"And I saw the souls of them that had been beheaded because of the witness of Jesus, and because of the word of God; and whoever worshipped not the wild beast, nor his image, and received not the mark in the forehead and on their hand; and they lived and reigned with Christ for a thousand years (Rev. 20:4). This text shows that those of the resurrection who reach the age to come are worthy to reign with the Christ; and we are further told that they are blessed and holy, so then it is the blessed and holy dead of this age who will live in the age to come, and those on whom the second death will have no power.

Jesus tells the Jews: "There shall be wailing and gnashing of the teeth,whensoever ye shall see Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, but yourselves being thrust out side" (Luke 13:28). Those Jews then will not have a future trial, but will be resurrected and see what the Saviour says they shall see.

Jesus answered, verily, verily, I say unto thee Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John. 3:5). This is a law for this dispensation; and as only the righteous are ever to become spirit-ual or spirit beings, all others are debarred from the kingdom. If we would enter the kingdom, our righteousness must exceed the righteousness of will of God (Matt. 5:20;7:21). But this age will the scribes and the pharisees, and we must do the end, and the millennial will be ushered in, and then we will have a new law; for we are told: "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain (kingdom) of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow into it. And many people shall say, Come ye let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to hte house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law (that is, the new law for the new age), and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation neither shall they learn war any more" (Isa. 2:2-4). Micah adds to the prophecy: "But they shall sit every man under his own vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it" (Mic 4:1-4). These quotations show that after the kingdom is established, God judges among the nations, and some of them, or some of the subjects of them become submissive, and beat their swords into plowshares, and spears into pruning hooks; and Jesus tells us: "The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth" (Matt.13:41-42). Daniel says: "And in the days of these kings (the ten kingdoms), shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people,but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever" (Dan. 2:44). God's kingdom consumes, eats up, the other kingdoms, and also breaks them to pieces; just as the Roman kingdom is said to break and devour the kingdom of Greece (Dan. 7:7). Now when Rome broke Greece and devoured her, did she destroy every individual of that kingdom? No: as history will attest, those Rome devoured were swallowed up by Rome, and became a part of her: so it will be with those consumed by the kingdom of God. Elder John A. Cargile, the greatest preacher of the Advent Christian Church, quotes Zech. 14:9, "The Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day there shall be one Lord ,and his name one" (verses 10, 11), tells of changes that will occur in the land of Palestine at that time, and that men shall dwell there, and Jerusalem will be safely inhabited. Verses 12, 13, 14, 15, show how punishment will be meted to those who fight against Jerusalem, and verse 16 says: "And it shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the king, the Lord of hosts ,and to keep the feast of the tabernacles." Verse 17: "And it shall be that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the king, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain." How beautifully this chimes with Isaiah's prophecy which we have seen declares all nations shall flow into it . James says: "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the gentiles, to take out a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, After this will I return, and build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build the ruins thereof, and I will set it up :that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the gentiles, upon whom my name is called." This also is in sweet accord with what we have quoted. But listen again to Isaiah 16:5 : "And in mercy shall the throne be established: and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging, and executing judgment, and hastening righteousness." Zech. 6:13: "Behold the man whose name is the Branch, and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord: even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a priest upon his throne: and the council of peace shall be between them both." Here is the priest like Melchisedec, king of peace, and priest of the most high God. Jesus could never be a priest like Melchisedec unless he is king and priest at one and the same time; for that was exactly what Melchisedec was. And now we have seen clearly that he is to be such. How beautifully the Bible harmonizes.

A MYSTERIOUS POSTAL CARD.

Assuming that the Turkish censors are not Bible students, a clever American nurse in Turkey sent to the American Board a postal card which read:

We shall very soon have to test the first part of the twentieth verse of the fifth chapter of Job and still sooner, even now, of the last of Psalm 91: 3. What a blessing to have a God who is true and able! Lots of love to you all. Dr. Hamlin's famous mixture in demand here."

From the passages, "In famine he shall redeem thee from death," "He shall deliver thee from the noisome pestilence," and from the fact that the mixture referred to is used in cholera cases, the Board infers that famine and cholera is raging in the part of Turkey from which the message comes.—Sel.

Carrying fowls with their heads downward and their feet tied together is very cruel, and, in most states, an offense against the law.

EDITORIAL

Be careful of your thoughts, for they are likely to break into words at any time .

We thank Sister Amanda Hazzard for fifty cents for the Helping Fund.

Owing to advanced cost in printing and printing material, The Restitution is now published only four times a month. As October has five Tuesdays the issue of the 17th was omitted.

Brother J. H. Anderson writes, dating Oct. 9th: "We have just closed a good meeting at Lawrenceville. Mrs. S. M. Ramsey and Mrs. E. R. Lutz were baptised. You will get a report of the meting later."

The Bible is the book of God. It is a divine revelation; the Creator speaks through it to his creatures; and its truthfulness can be demonstrated. As intelligent men we have a right to know what we believe, and why we believe it. The sooner all shams and pretences are exchanged for substantial truth and settled conviction, the better. There are plenty of men who say: "Even if the Bible is not true, it is best to let the imposition pass, because it exercises a wholesome moral influence upon a lot of rascals who are kept from actual mischief through fear of punishment." But we say pious frauds will not sow the seeds of righteousness. The writers of the Bible were not a pack of credulous fools easily imposed upon and easily deceived. No fool ever wrote Moses' law, or Job's discourses, or David's psalms, or Soloman's proverbs, or Isaiah's poetry, or Ezekiel's prophecies, or Daniel's visions, or Paul's epistles, or John's Apocalypse. If skeptics think fools can write such books as these, let them try the experiment.

Fulfillment of prophecy is proof of divine revelation. Prophecy fulfilled is truth verified. Only the power that created the universe can read its future history. If we could find but one prophecy which was given in the distant past, and definitely fulfilled in after ages ,it would stamp the Bible with God's own hand and seal. And we are able to point out, not one prediction alone, but hundreds, the fulfillment of which could only be known to the infinite mind. Fulfilled prophecy stamps the Bible with divine authority, gives us a proof of its divinity which cannot be counterfeited, a kind of proof which no intelligent man can question.

HARVEST HOME OFFERING

We call special attention to an article by Sister Wince in this issue under the above caption. The Restitution Linograph Fund now stands at $1,421,50. This is short of two thousand dollars necessary, $579,50. When we asked for two thousand dollars a few months ago, the sum sounded so large and our constituency looked so few and poor, the request seemed like a fantastic impossibility. Even the optimism of Sister Wince staggered under the weight of such a gigantic proposition. But God is with those who are with him; and Sister Wince's uncertain probability has been converted into a gladsome reality. It may be profitable to ask, How did this sweet surprise come to pass? Well, here hangs an interesting story. Brethren had lapsed into ease and repose. They were not suffering for the truth; their profession of the faith was not costing them enough. When we were a small boy a friend gave us an old "Spanish quarter;" it had done much service, the face was worn smooth-scarcely a trace of the stamp was discernable. Inquisitive, like all boys, we asked father the date and superscription. He told us to put it for a short while on a hot shovel. We obeyed, and to our great surprise and delight the heat brought out distinctly to view the date, the pillars, the image and superscription.

Now our brotherhood had become too much like this old Spanish coin: they had settled down to ease and inactivity. The Restitution grew too aggressive in the advocacy of the truth to suit the ease of some sentimental brethren among us; opposition was started, and the life of The Restitution hung in the balance, with a sword drawn over its head. God threw us into the furnace of affliction. He threw us in to bring out the true soul-image of our characters, be it that of Christ or Belial. "Whose is this image and superscription?" Affliction answers the inquiry. "One like unto the Son of Man" has been in the flames, and his image has burnt into many hearts and minds. Many devout lovers of The Restitution betook themselves to prayer; Sister Wince grasped her pen, and it seemed to be driven by an almost divine influence; both the rich and the poor among the brotherhood felt an uncontrollable impulse of generosity-result: Today we only need $579,50 more in order to present the Linograph an unincumbered offering to the Lord!

Now what shall we do about this troublesome $579,50? Sister Wince seems equal to any emergency; she has solved this problem before the rest of us had time to think or bother about it. This is her solution of the problem, and it is so easy and practical we feel sure of its utility: Let us all make the first week in November a Harvest Home Offering. From past wonderful doings of God,we are lead to expect great things of him in the future. If all give according to their means, the rich liberally and the poor freely, cannot we raise $579,50 during the first week in November? Of course we can, the Lord helping! Already a contribution has reached us for Harvest Home Offering. We feel from past tokens of God's goodness and help that we shall receive $579,50 during the first week in November; and how much more we dare not risk ourselves to say! "Give, and it shall be given to you;good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over" (Luke 6:38)!

"Them That Gives, Gits"

There's a quaint and homely saying
That is trite though ill expressed
And you'll find upon the weighing,
That it measures all the rest-
"Them that gives gits."

Is it wealth you're seeking after?
Do not tightly close your palms,
But with love and happy laughter
Give your brother needing alms-
"Them that gives gits."

Is it fame for which you're longing?
Follow still the Godlike plan,
Help the need forever thronging
Round your struggling fellow man-
"Them that gives gits."

Is it knowledge you would fetter?
'Tis within your earnest reach,
But you'll' get it quicker, better,
If another you will teach-
"Them that gives, gits."

Is it love, earth's dearest treasure,
You would gather for your store?
Give of love, nor stint the measure,
'Twill return to you the more-
"Them that gives gits".

Miss Green—"Of course, you can't believe everything you hear."

Miss Gadleigh—"Oh, no; but you can repeat it."

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother Huggins: Enclosed is a post office money order for $5,00 for the Linograph Fund. I think we should do what we can while we have the opportunity for I think the kingdoms of this world will soon become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. This leaves us well, and trust it finds you the same.

Yours in the one hope,
Brother and Sister Townsend.

Dear Brethren:

I see the Linotype Fund is not progressing very fast. I would suggest that every one who has given to this fund, give $5,00 more if possible, and all who have not given, do the same. Let us see what a long list of $5,00 donations we will have in next week's paper. I would like to see it raised to the $2,000 mark. Let us be quick about this and see how soon we can get the linotype machine.

I would like to see a balance due each week on this and perhaps our new subscribers who do not know what this machine is to cost, may help us out.

Yours in Christ,
Hanna M Barber.

From Brother U. J. Bowman

Dear Restitution: You will please find enclosed $2,00 for my subscription. I think the paper is good. It gives us a great deal of truth. In these times we need all the truth we can get. May God bless you, Brother Huggins, in this great work.

Yours.

From Sister Alice J. Adams

Dear Restitution:

I am thankful for the labor and sacrifices that make the paper the teacher it is, and its continuance possible. I want a part in it, and am glad to do even a little to help toward the linotype machine needed. I feel sure the reward of the faithful is not far off, and I hope bright crowns are in store for the dear workers, whether I be counted fit for a place among them or not. He is faithful who has promised, and none need fear to trust him.

In love to all.

From the Song Book Committee

To the Brethren settled abroad:

After announcing that the song books were ready, there was a delay in getting them to the binder, so we could not fill orders as fast as we should ,but now there will be no more delay. The books are ready, and will be sent out as fast as orders are received. We have tried to keep all orders correct, but in the delays some one might be overlooked, if so please notify me, and it will receive prompt attention. We think every one will be proud of the book, especially do we believe you will like the cloth bound book; they are bound in two colors, blue and red. The name is in gold. If any wish we can put your name on your book in gold for 20cts extra. They are going fast, so get in your orders early.

From Sister W. E. Knight

Brother Huggins:

Would you please send me one book of "Manual of Praise," the new song book when they are ready. Sister McClelland wrote to me that she had sent 50cts for me, that if I did not receive one to let you know I see the price of the cloth binding is 50cts. I would prefer one of them. I feel sure they are free from doctrinal error if Brother Adams had any thing to do with them, as he is in the narrow way and firm in the faith. I am one of four that Brother Adams baptised a few years ago in Sunnyside Wash. I will never forget that day, and will always thank our heavenly Father, that through the efforts of Sister McClelland, that I was brought to see the truth of the Gospel of the Kingdom, and was honored to help with the saints with Christ our chief corner stone to rule in the coming age. O what a glorious time that will be! I love to meditate on his promises. His precious word is full of them. May we all be faithful until he may come and speak peace to this troubled world.

From Sister Grace Lawrence

Dear Restitution:

It is with the greatest pleasure that we introduce to the household of faith, the following brethren and sisters: Clement Miller, wife and daughter, Alice; John Alexander, wife and daughter, Lether; our young brother Floyd Hummel; and our own two sons, Feryl and Leland.

Brother W. L. Crowe, of Chanute, Kan., held a two weeks meeting here at our school house, and the nine above named were obedient in baptism, and others are showing an interest in this new, strange doctrine, but so dear to the hearts of those who understand the covenants of promise. Brother Crowe is certainly a fearless defender of the truth, and understands how to "rightly divide the word of truth.

Dear Brothers and Sisters, we cannot tell you how happy it makes us feel to know that we are no longer isolated from all of like precios faith. There are now thirteen of us here, and hope and pray that with God's help we may each one let our light shine and that others may be led to seek out the grand truths of the soon coming King, who will rule this earth in righteousness.

We meet tomorrow evening for Bible study with Brother Miller as leader, and ask the prayers of the brethren and God's blessing, that we may be guided into further knowledge of truth, and that others may be lead to search the scriptures daily, whether these things be so.

Your sister in the Abrahamic Faith,

REPORT OF THE MEETINGS AT LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow," is the way I feel in starting this report. We have been praying that God would bless our efforts in these meetings, and he has answered our prayers and blessed us, seemingly a hundred fold. Bro. Anderson "preached the word." He reproved, rebuked, and exhorted with all longsuffering and doctrine, he showed all within the hearing of his voice how to study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. His subjects for the week were: The Word, The Gospel, The Kingdom, The Gift of God, The Two Ways, The Journey of Israel, The rich Man and Lazarus (by request), What Must I do to be Saved? Faithful Over a Few Things and The Boy Hero, or Joseph a Figure of Christ. He not only gave us a feast of rich wholesome spiritual good for our ownselves, but he also taught the outsiders the Bible in all its beauty and simplicity.

The attendance increased from night to night, giving the best of attention, all acknowledging Brother Anderson a wonderful expounder of the truth of the Bible. Questions were asked and answered, not in man's way, but from the divine Book, which is able to make all wise unto salvation.

The regular Sister's meeting was held at Sister Grace Myers in Springfield Thursday afternoon, and Brother Anderson was present to help teach us the moral and spiritual state of the world at the coming of Christ; and he taught us wonderful truths as to this war and the last one in such a way we have been made to see prophecy and revelation as we never did before. God's plan is surely working along quietly for us and in the hour they know not, our Lord will come.

Friday night two asked Brother Anderson to baptise them, as they had been studying and reading for the past two years, and attending all the meetings this week. So early Sunday morning we added to the family of God two worthy members; Mrs. Simon M. Ramsey, and Mrs. E. R. Lutz; the former Sister Argabright's sister in the flesh, and the latter her sister-in-law. We pray their husbands may follow their example, and place themselves in the hands of the all saving name of Jesus. After hearing a masterful sermon on "Faithful over a Few Things," our walk and duty as members, we all passed around and gave the right hand of fellowship; and then Brother Anderson as a farewell to the little flock here, presided at the Lord's table. This day was devoted to an all day's meeting, having with us the members of the Brush Creek Church and Sister Hudson of Cleveland. At noon we gathered around the tables bearing the temporal food so necessary to our bodies, just as it is necessary for us to be around the spiritual table of the Lord each Sunday. If we failed to eat natural food during the week, would not we become almost starved? We should feel the same concerning the spiritual food and be anxious for the hour to come when we are invited to partake of the broken body and shed blood of our dear Lord and Savior.

The Lord blessed us in giving us perfect weather, so that our aged brethren and friends could attend all the meetings. Sunday was an exceptional day, and the country beautiful, so under a grand old maple tree we talked together and could not help but feel 'how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

The afternoon was given over to a social meeting, where all had an opportunity to exhort one another and to express to Brother Anderson our heart-felt thanks for all he has done for us during the past four years, and to wish him God speed in his new field in Virginia.

The closing meeting Sunday night was encouraging to the little flock. The church was crowded, some sitting on the platform; and after singing "God Be With You till We Meet Again," we all said our farewells to Brother and Sister Anderson with aching hearts, prone to give them up, feeling it is not our will, but God's.

I would like to say in behalf of our new "babes in Christ" that some of our sisters write them letters welcoming them into the fold, and let them see and feel no matter where we are, we are all one in Christ. And some one write a personal letter to all new comers and send it to The Restitution. Sisters Ramsey and Lutz addresses are the same, R. F. D. 7, Springfield Ohio. Both have given their names to Brother Anderson for The Restitution. We expect to have with us during the fall and winter Brother Mason, and we pray he will be able to continue to sow the good seed and that others may see our good works and glorify our Father which art in heaven.

Jessie M. B. Kauffman.

REJOICE WITH US

The fifth of this month, the church at South Bend, Ind., was made glad by Nelson Morton and wife of Laport, Ind., coming over here, requesting the writer to baptize them, which he cheerfully did,after finding them sound in the faith. They had joined the disciple church many years ago, but after reading The Restitution for quite a while, and searching the Scriptures they became dissatisfied with their baptism, fearing that it was no better than their faith. For the disciple church (as a church) teach that man has an immortal soul that goes to heaven or hell at death, Just how any of our faith can unite with a church that holds such views, is more than I can understand. If they unite with a church they surely endorse the errors and teachings of tha church. The Lord's admonition is "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and I will receive you." May we all so live that when Jesus comes to gather out his faithful ones, that we may be accounted worthy to share with him in his reign and glory.

Your Brother in the faith.

R. C. Railsback.

Remarks

After conference closed Wife and I went to Holbrook our old home, and spent a week with old neighbours and friends. En route from Moorefield to Holbrook we stopped over night with Mr. and Mrs. Hinton , where we received a cordial welcome. Mr. Hinton is a strong believer in the truth, but has not yet obeyed, but we hope to see the day when he will. The following morning he conveyed us to Brother and Sister Calvin Hammond's, where we took dinner. In the afternoon they took us to Holbrook. On the way we stopped for an hour's visit with Brother and Sister Gamble. Sister Gamble has very poor health, and is longing for the return of the Master. How much suffering and strife and bloodshed will be eliminated when the Lord comes! Are we praying daily "thy kingdom come?"

On Sunday the 10th some from Hoblrook and Edison went out to the new congregation north of town, took their dinners, and spent the day together. We spoke both forenoon and afternoon. It was certainly a feast to see those old familiar faces. But a sense of sadness comes over us when we miss some of the old faces that once were so familiar in days gone by. We will see them no more till that great meeting in the air. I am afraid we do not fully realize what that meeting means to us.Again, perhaps we cannot fully realize it in this life. But will we be at that meeting? is the all prevailing question.

The Sunday following our return from conference we went to Kennard. Some of the brethren from Blair and Arlington came, and we had our old time turn out. At the close of the forenoon meeting we went home with Brother and Sister Krogh for dinner, and in the afternoon met with the Blair church and spoke for them. Some of the Kennard people returned the complement, and drove over to the afternoon meeting. We then motored to Arlington with Sister Emma Newell and took supper, after which we drove back to Kennard for the evening, and again found a number of the Blair brethren present, and a well filled house. Sister Jenkins and husband took charge of the singing, and the church was made to ring and reverberate with the songs from the new song books, Thus closed a busy day enjoyed by all, and we trust profitable as well.

We are now preparing to enter upon our fall campaign. After two or three very urgent meetings have been disposed of we have calls from Oklahoma, Missouri, Kansas, and California. So we have to urge the brethren to be patient. We will reach all just as fast as possible,but every one must put his shoulder to the wheel and help push the good work along for the coming year. Tomorrow, Oct. 8th, the brethren from Omaha, Avery, Arlington and Blair meet with the church at Kennard; and in next month's report we will tell you all about it.

"I CREATE EVIL"

Isaiah xlv: 7

This startling statement from the mouth of God was a difficulty to me. It was a statement I would have liked to cover up, to hide it from the gainsayers, lest they should seize upon it, and slander the name of Cod. For at first sight it gives the impression that God created this world, with its teeming population, and sent sin amongst them, with its terrible harvest of cruelty and suffering, and all that he might callously watch and enjoy the great drama of humanity.

But I learn that the word translated "evil" is by no means the word for "sin." It means "calamity, grief or affliction," and in this passage it is used in direct contrast to the previous phrase, "I make peace." The whole verse is one of contrasts—"I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and bring about disturbance." The disturbance which God brings about is always in consequence of sin.

What then was the origin of evil? No doubt philosophers have dwelt much on this problem; but in my few years I have not, so far as I remember, come across any attempt to grapple with the question. I cannot believe that God deliberately created sin; but in the freewill which he gave to his servants, that they might intelligently worship and serve him, lay the possibility of disobedience. In one place we may have a charge of gunpowder, for the useful purpose of blasting; in another place is a match. One conceives the idea of bringing these together, and instead of rejecting the evil thought, cherishes the idea, and brings it about. The destructive explosion which ensues cannot be charged to the maker of the gunpowder or of the match, but to him whose perversity brought evil from them.—Wm. Campbell, Jr., in "Words of Life."

THE HORSE WOUNDED IN BATTLE.

O friend of man! O noble creature,
Patient and brave and mild by nature,
Mild by nature, and mute as mild,
Who brings thee to these passes wild
Thee, gentle Horse, thou shape of beauty?
Could he not do his dreadful duty
(If duty it be, which seems mad folly),
Nor link thee to his melancholy?

"Is his condition critical?"

"It's worse than critical," she answered, with a sigh ,"it's abusive."

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

ALWAYS CLEAN

"Licht und Leben" speaks of a young bride met recently on a railway train, who was traveling to join her future husband. At a certain stage of the journey she disappeared, but soon came back to her seat, washed and brushed. One of her fellow travelers noticing this, remarked: "You are, it seems, near the end of your journey and will soon meet your husband." "Oh,no," she answered, "but the best way to be fresh and clean at the journey's end is to keep one's self fresh and clean the whole way."—Sel.

NEW ENGLAND TRAINING

"Now," said a Boston schoolteacher to his class in English, "can anyone give me a word ending in 'ous' meaning full of, as 'dangerous,' full of danger, and 'hazardous,' full of hazard?"

She kissed the old man: she showered upon him kisses and tears. She told all the people how good he was. I thought if she only had given half a dozen of those kisses a year for the last ten years, how the tender-hearted old gentleman would have smiled through his tears. But now he took it all very coolly. He was dead. He was old and poor, she was young and rich. She had ten rooms, but no room for father. Yet he made room for her when he had only two. The old man was not educated. She was—at his expense. He had fed and clothed her for twenty years at home and at college, until she had risen into more refined and cultured society, and married among new friends. The old people's address and dialect were too coarse. She kissed him and buried him in a beautiful coffin. Dear father is to have a beautiful monument. MY BIBLE AND I

We've traveled together,
My Bible and I,
Through all kinds of weather,
With smile or with sigh!
In sorrow or sunshine,
In tempest or calm,
Its friendship unchanging,
My lamp and my song!

We've traveled together,
My Bible and I,
When life had grown weary
And death e'en was nigh:
But all through the darkness
Of mist or of wrong,
I found it a solace,
A prayer and a song!

So now who shall part us,
My Bible and I?
Shall isms or schisms,
Or "new lights," who try?
Shall shadow for substance,
Or stone for good bread,
Supplant its sound wisdom,
Give folly instead?

Ah, no! my dear Bible
Exponent of light!
Thou sword of the Spirit
Put error to flight:
And still through life's journey
Until my last sigh,
We'll travel together,
My Bible and I.

SPIRITUAL BLESSING

Can we have a "spiritual blessing,"
When the heart is bowed with woe?
Yes, dear sinner, to the Savior,
Is the place where you should go.

He has promised life eternal,
To the one that comes to him;
And, he'll take you to his kingdom,
Free from all this age of sin.

In the resurrection morning,
We will meet our Savior dear;
And will enter in his kingdom,
Where we'll never have no fear.

There we'll worship with our Savior,
And no one will say us nay:
Oh! that glorious "spiritual blessing,"
Will be ours on that glad day.

Then we'll strive to live for Jesus,
Strive to walk the narrow way;
It will lead us to the kingdom,
Which will come on earth to stay.

"BE YE SEPARATE"

George B. Alldridge

"Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean: and I will receive you" (2 Cor. 6:17).

Among religious bodies professing to obey the mandates of Christ, none in their fellowship and associations should be more exclusive than the brethren constituting the Church of God. We are often accused of being narrow in our views, and bigoted respecting the views of others, to the former we plead guilty, the latter is only imaginative.

Paul in writing to the church at Corinth and the brethren of Galatia, warns them that" A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump;" "That they must purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us."

Paul with sorrow of heart and anguish of mind observed the leaven of sin, on behalf of false brethren gradually permeating the whole lump. Indulgence in sin, so subtle, so gross, so deceitful, introducing of false doctrines, that if possible even the very elect may be deceived, alarmed Paul for the spiritual life and existence of the church, hence this warning.

This morning at the breaking of the bread, I thought of the type. The Jews had only the type and shadow of good things to come in their feast appointed by God. Each year as they kept this feast, they would search with candles in every corner of their houses that they might cast out all leaven, before they made even the unleavened bread for the passover. Now we have the real bread, unleavened, Christ himself the true passover, slain for us.

That bread to me in the unbroken loaf represented him and his church, pure and undefiled. No wonder Paul admonishes us, "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup." Why Paul? Because he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body." Egypt surely represents the dark benighted world of sin and wickedness. Israel could only be saved from slavery by being rescued out of Egypt. God told them through Moses that they were an holy people unto the Lord their God, and that God had chosen them to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all the nations that were upon the earth (Deut. 14:2). What were the conditions? Simply these: To obey him and keep themselves entirely isolated from the surrounding nations. They by their lives rejected God, and he cast them off. They became the old lump, and were set aside, because they were corrupt through the leaven of sin.

Paul now reasons that God still intends to fulfill his original plan, to have an holy people, a peculiar people unto himself, separate from all the nations now existing upon the face of this earth. This nation Paul calls "The new lump" unleavened, free from sin. How so? Christ our head being without sin, transmits to us his body, his spirit, his mind, his disposition, in proportion as we obey his commands and mould our lives in accordance with his precepts. Beloved, Sin separates us from God: Separating ourselves from sin, enables us to get back again into fellowship with God.

Abraham must first separate himself from those things dear to the hearts of us all, before God would enter into a covenant with him (Gen. 12:1,2). Moses, before he could be used by God as Israel's deliverer, must first separate himself from all that men call honor, riches and glory (Heb. 11:24). Jesus, throughout his whole life, though in the world, was never of it, and prayed that his Father would bestow this spirit upon his followers (John 17:9-26). God's saints from righteous Abel, down to the humblest one among us today, have manifested this spirit. a separateness from all systems, all that is sinful and worldly every thing that tends to keep us from God.

Beloved, do we realize what it means to let down just the fraction of an inch, the door of exclusion from our assembly that God has so solemnly enjoined us to maintain? We say sometimes: "We only slightly differ in our views; their doctrines are much like our own; their innocent pleasures and pastimes are trivial;We should be more broad minded," etc. Nay beloved, leaven is a treacherous thing, and when it begins to get warm its corrupting influence affects the whole lump—The Church.

The United States Government spends millions of dollars every year, fighting the destroying influences of three insect pests. Nearly fifty years ago James Tick, of California, imported some trees from China. Had any one because of the rough exterior of these trees rejected them, that man today would be heralded as one of our most honored citizens. That peculiar roughness was the San Jose Scale. Ten years after its arrival the people of San Jose began to wonder what was killing their trees; A scientist put his finger upon the spot, today we know it as the San Jose Scale.

Leopold Trouvelet, a Harvard professor, thought that in crossing the ordinary silkworm and a moth he imported from France, he might produce a hardier breed, "But the best laid plans of men and mice often go aglee." The professor hatched out his silkworms and moths on a bush in his yard at Medford, Mass., but one summer day a stiff breeze blew the netting off the bush and the worms escaped. Professor Trouvelet sought to catch all the caterpillars he could, warning everybody to destroy all they could find. A few escaped. This happened forty-seven years ago. Today the state of Massachusetts has spent over eight million dollars fighting the gypsy moth, but with little success. New Hampshire, Maine, Connecticut, and Rhode Island are suffering its ravages.

Beloved, these are simple illustrations but sin, like these pests soon spreads and effects all where it can get a start or hold in our mind. Peter says that we are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that we should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light, and then to impress upon our minds just how this may be done he says: "Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul. Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles; that, whereas they speak against you as evil doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation!"

Just now, if we are not on our guard, we will be drawn into the political vortex. Only citizens of this country are entitled to vote at the coming presidential election. Brethren, be careful; the recording angel is voting the side we profess allegiance to. Jesus was offered the kingdoms of this world. They were his, but the Father had a work for him to do. That mission must at all hazards be first fulfilled. We have the right as citizens to vote, but beloved, God has a mission for us first to do. We are to make our calling and election sure. This election is of God (1 Thess 1:4). The citizenship that God recognizes and rewards is in heaven, "From whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself" (Phil. 3:20,21). Aliens cannot vote: the government will punish them if they do. Peter says we are pilgrims and strangers. Before you vote beloved, take your Bible and memorize the chapter, and verse where it says that you should take part in politics, or help elect those seeking office: then you can confidently tell Jesus why you supported and voted for another king when he sets up his kingdom that you are seeking a place in. I find that I must pray for rulers (1 Tim. 2:1-3); that I must obey them (Rom. 13:1-7, Titus 3:1); that God's word tells me to honor them (1 Pet. 2:17; Jude 8); that if I am asked to pay taxes I should do so (Matt. 17:24-27; Rom. 13:6); That if it is possible as much as is within me, to live peaceably with all men (Rom. 12:18); that I am an ambassador, and that necessarily means my appearance in a foreign court (2 Cor. 5:19-21; Eph. 6:19,20). God's word then forbids me to take up the sword against my fellow man. So beloved, to be consistent to my God and to myself, if I cannot and do not desire to fight with carnal weapons, neither will I vote (2 Cor. 10:3-5).

TWO EXTREMES REFUTED

No. 3

Ezekiel speaking in chapter 36 of the return of the Jews, speaks also of the nations that are left: "Then the heathen (nations, R. V.) that are left round about you shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places, and plant that was desolate: I the Lord have spoken it."

Isaiah 24th chapter: "Behold the Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof." Verse six says: "Therefore hath the curse devoured it, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left." Again, at verse 19: "The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean disolved, the earth is moved exceedingly. The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage, and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and not rise again. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth that are upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited (punished, R. V. marg.) Then we hear the prophet exclaim in words of ecstacy, "Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."

This chapter most certainly points to the end of the gospel age, and the beginning of the millennium, and shows that there are some men "left" for subjects of the kingdom. David says: "Let the saints be joyful in glory; let them sing aloud upon their beds. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two edged sword in their hand: to execute vengeance upon the heathen (nations, R. V.), and punishments upon the people: to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgment written: this honor have all the saints. Praise ye the Lord" (Psa. 149:5-9). Here we are told that the saints bind the kings and nobles after they are in glory, and that accords with the fact that wicked ones are gathered out of the kingdom after its establishment, or at least out of territory that is to be annexed to the kingdom; and that is why Isaiah follows so closely after he tells of the gathering of the kings, with his beautiful words about the Lord's reign in Jerusalem.

But listen again: "Behold a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment" (Isa. 32:1). "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne (Rev. 3:21). "And they sang a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings: and priests: and we shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5:9,10). "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that you may eat at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Luke 22:29,30). "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. 19:28). "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world" (1 Cor.6:2)? "They lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years" (Rev. 20:4). All these passages, with Jesus' parable of the nobleman, and many others, teach that the saints will reign as joint rulers with Jesus, and will have power over nations, and cities as kings and priests; but if a remnant of people were not left for them to reign over, they could not officiate either as kings or priests. The power which they are to have over the nations is power over those who are to anually go to Jerusalem to worship the king, the Lord of hosts.

David, the sweet singer of Israel says: "In his days shall the righteous flourish: and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him; and his enemies shall lick the dust. The kings of Tarshish and of the Isles shall bring presents: the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him: and all naions shall serve him" (Psa. 72:7-11). The great prophet Daniel also falls in line,saying: "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed" (Dan. 7:13-14). This gave the prophet Zechariah a reason for saying: "This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles;" they shall have no rain. If we are to believe God we must believe that the rulership of Jesus and his saints is to be over restored Israel, with the rebellious ones purged out (Ezek. 20:38), and those left of all nations after the offenders are purged from the kingdom (Matt.13:41,42; Zech. 14:16). Here is the golden mean which harmonizes all Scripture evidence, and does violence to none. We invite the extremes to step down from their mountains tops of extremity, and meet us a[illegible]ach other in this golden plain of Bible fact[illegible]l then we can march out together, clear as th[illegible], fair as the moon, and as an army with banners, conquering in the name of the great Jehovah, and of his Son, Jesus Christ.

[illegible] WEEK OF AGES

A. D. Strickler

Man starts in being made lower than the angels, and he ends, by having all things put in subjection under him. Christ said, "But they that are accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead....are equal unto the angels." "But now we see not yet all things in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." John says: "In the beginning was great is the mystery of godliness." God likeness, and the image of God, are equivalent to each other, and by what Paul further says in this sixteenth verse we can see the facts in regard to Christ. "God was manifest in the flesh, justified were procaimed to Moses. His name Jehovah or Yahwah, means, as we have previously seen in this paper, "I will be, who I will be." This according to Ex. 3: was to be his memorial name for all generations. It was a prophecy of the coming man of the ages. Now as man in the making, is a free-will moral creature, it was not only necessary that he should be placed under a righteous law; but that he should also have a personal living embodiment and representation of God's law, as an example or pattern by which to make himself in the image or likeness of God. This example and pattern was none other than Jesus Christ.

Paul in 1 Tim. 3:16, says: "Without controversy put under him." What we do see, however is a wonderful creation, even if it is only yet in the making. "What is man, that thou art mindful of him." Man is a creature that thinks, and feels and wills; and has the consciousness of individual personality. His capacity is such that he can respond to the highest spiritual appeal of God; his capabilities are manifold; but it is only in connection with his moral and spiritual potentiality that we wish to consider him.

God is a righteous being or personality, and his name Jehovah, stands for his attributes, which the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God." And he further says, "And the word became flesh, and dwelt among us." Paul and John are both in agreement as to Jesus of Nazareth being the word made flesh, and from their teaching we are justified in believing that Jesus Christ was a living manifestation of the glory of God, that is, a living exemplification of the seven attributes of God that were proclaimed to Moses as the name of Jehovah. Paul to the Colossians (Ch. 1:15), declared that Christ was "the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature." (every creature of the world to come, the first one of the coming man of the ages).

In Acts 15:14, James quotes Simeon by saying: "Simeon hath declared how God [illegible] first did visit the Gentiles, to take out o[illegible] a people for his name." Such a people are [illegible]n out from the Gentiles by being baptized into God's name, that is, into his attributes. The formula is found in Matt. 28:19; "The Father, and the Son, and the holy spirit." This brought to our understanding, means, The Father in the Son, by the holy spirit, It is a new name for those who [illegible] named upon them, a name that stands fo[illegible]mprehends and incompasses those attributes [illegible]od's character that we have been considering. These who are "for his name." are each one of them, the word of God become flesh, the image of God: but this is only true providing the seven attributes of God become the character after such trial as the apostle Peter speaks of in 1 Pet. 1;7; "That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried by fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ."

Jesus Christ as the example, and pattern of God for the people, "for God's name," appeared in the dawn of the human race, in the purpose and promises of God, and in that way he became the ideal of their spiritual ambition; although not having had a concrete personal existence prior to his birth of the virgin Mary.

This work of God during the week of ages, is the greatest the grandest and the most noble that the mind of man can possibly imagine. The result, so far achieved in reference to the physical earth, as the knowledge of it becomes unfolded to the understanding, is marvellous. Is there any wonder that the Psalmist David was impelled to exclaim; "I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart; I will show forth all thy marvellous works?" Having a bearing upon these considerations, is what Paul says about the ancient worthies, as to why they are dead, and have not yet had fulfilled to them, the promises which God made (Heb. 11:39,40): "And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided (or foreseen) some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." When we consider the geography of the earth, we can see how fittingly it has been adapted to "the coming man of the ages" while he is yet in the making; and how perfect it is for him when he arrives. Cosmopolitan must we be in order to appreciate what God has done in making this earth to be inhabited; and giving it to man when made in his image and likeness, as the scriptures teach. In our own beautiful land, as we pass from town to town, from county to county; and from state to state, beholding its fields, plains, valleys and plateaus; its vast mountain chains filled with fabulous mineral wealth, the surface of which has as yet, been but scratched; when we see its numerous rivers with their mighty waterfalls, its great inland sea, made up of a chain of fresh water lakes unsurpassed anywhere upon the earth, we may feel that this is enough, and also good enough for us. But this is not all that God has provided for the people "for his name."

There are other lands, both north and south, east and west, equally as beautiful, good and productive. All, not a part of the earth has, God promised that "the coming man of the ages," shall have dominion over, and where he will be at home. "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord"(Num. 14:21). The inspired penman has said, "The earth abideth forever" (Eccl. 1:4); and the Lord said to Noah: "While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease" (Gen. 8:22). No, not a part, but all. The apostle says "For all things are yours"—"all are yours." Said Jesus, "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5 5); and Paul said: "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men: knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritnce." Again, "They which are called might receive the promise of the eternal inheritance" (Heb. 9:15). "Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward" (Ch. 10:35). "For if the inheritance be of the law, it no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise" (Gal. 3:18). "For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith" (Rom.4:13).

Now, as we think of the inheritance of "the coming of the ages," our faith is strengthened by what Paul says in 2 Cor. 4:17,18: "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory: while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen, for the things which are seen are temporal: but the things which are not seen are eternal." "We see not yet, all things put under his feet:" but when they are, it will be forever. "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" Paul, as part of the coming man of the sixth day of the week of ages, when he was about to die, knew that he had been made in the image and likeness of God, that the work so far as he personally was concerned, had been completed. Here are his words: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." He was assured, he was confident that he would receive the reward belonging to righteousness, which is eternal life; and that he would get it "at that day," the day of Christ's appearing and kingdom, as the apostle states in the first verse of the fourth chapter of second Timothy. Paul was so confident about the things seen only with the eye of faith, that he was constrained to say: "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. 8:38,39). It is needless for us to say, let this mind be in you, which was also in the Apostle Paul.

Christ said to the Jews, that Abraham their father rejoiced to see his day; and he saw it, and was glad (John 8:56). David, "the sweet psalmist of Israel," also had a vision; and this is what he said: "He shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, a morning without clouds; when the tender grass springeth out of the earth, through clear shining after rain" (2 Saml. 23:4).

What a prospect for the man made in the image of God, and after his likeness! Paul writing about Abraham in Heb. 11:19, says, "For he looked for the city which hath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God. We are shown a symbolism of this city by John in the twenty-first chapter of his book, in the form of a cube; the cube is a perfect geometric figure, and in this chapter it stands for perfection. In the tenth verse it is said to be the Holy Jerusalem, and this in turn, in verse nine, is the bride, the Lamb's wife. In Rev. 1:13-15, we have these symbolisms presented in the form of a man, and by John's description of this man we learn that he is a man of multitude or a multitudinous man. We learn in other places in the Scriptures, that this symbolic man, is Christ and his church, whom together, make up "the first fruits" before the harvest of the human family.

This man of multitude, is a perfect model of the coming man of the sixth day of the week of ages, and will be incorporated as the head. What Abraham looked for as a city, was the corporate head of the completed man made in the image of God, who, at the end of the millennium, will stand erect upon this earth, a victor over the devil and his works, among which is death, the last enemy which shall be destroyed (1 Cor. 15 26).

"The city which hath the foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (Heb. 11:10), is founded upon the Seven pillars of wisdom—"Wisdom hath builded her house, She hath hewn out her seven pillars" (Prov. 9), which, as we have previously shown, are the seven attributes that make up the righteousness of God. A corporation built upon such a foundation as wisdom's seven pillars, will stand forever and ever.

"Whose builder and maker is God." "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." "Every house is builded by someone, but he that built all things is God." From the scriptures, we have before us God as the builder or maker; and when we consider what he is making when completed, we shall find it to be the most precious, the most desirable and the most costly of all the works of the Creator.

"IN FLAMING FIRE"

Some people seem to think the Lord will come to the world in an ordinary manner, and at his immediate coming nothing unusual will happen. This opinion is not sustained by the scriptures. We read in Zecharia 14:4; And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof, toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south." Thus we see that an extraordinary event will happen at the advent of the Lord to the world.

Jesus will undoubtedly appear in all the effulgence of his glory, and until he draws himself in, no flesh will be able to stand in his presence, When Saul, afterwards called Paul, saw the light from heaven which suddenly shined about him, he fell to the earth and became blind. (Acts 9:3,4) When John on the Isle of Patmos saw him, he fell at his feet as dead (Rev. 1:17).

To the world he is said to come as a thief, but his coming is thief-like, in that he comes when not expected. He will reveal himself at the proper time and make his presence known in a very decided manner.

"Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him" (Rev. 1-7). For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." (Matt. 24:27).

He is coming to punish and destroy. "And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming" (2 Thess. 2:8). "Our God shall come and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him" (Psa. 50:3).

Thus it is said: "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and the glory of his power" (2 Thess. 1:7,8,9,).

It was the Pharisee, whose standard of all was not as other men. But the poor publican, with his God-touched conscience, and his vision of the splendor and purity of heaven, could only cry, "God be merciful to me the sinner." With such heights to scale, and with such depths to loathe, it was impossible to despise the sorriest brother.—G. H. Morrison.

He that does not think at all upon what he is to do, will never do anything well; and he who does nothing but think, had as good do nothing at all.

CREED IN EXCESS

"I believe, therefore have I spoken" (Psa.116:10). Everywhere faith and speech should be inseparable. The man who speaks what he does not believe is a hypocrite; the man who does not speak what he believes is a coward. The power of faith finds expression for itself. Hence the one hundred sixteenth psalm becomes a creed, and from this fact springs the vitality of creeds. When we intelligently and heartily believe "the truth" a burden is laid upon us: we believe, "and therefore speak." We "cannot but speak" the truth we believe (Acts 4:20)). Therefore The Restitution stands firm as a rock for the "form of sound words" (2 Tim. 1:13), for the gospel as a definite message, or for a creed, if you desire to use that word.

But all the good things may be abused. The gospel has been abused, every good thing under the sun has been prostituted, creed along with all other excellent things. Chief among those guilty of this crime may be mentioned the Christadelphians. The following lines vividly and accurately describe the exsess into which they have gone concerning creed:

Believe as I believe, no more, no less;
  That I am right, and no one else, confess;
Feel as I feel, think only as I think;
  Eat what I eat, and drink but what I drink;
Look as I look, do always as I do,
  And then, and only then, I'll fellowship with you.

That I am right, and always right, I know,
  Because my own convictions tell me so;
And to be right is simply this to be Entirely and in all respects like me;
To deviate a hair's breadth, or begin
  To question, doubt, or hesitate, is sin.

I reverence the Bible if it be
  Translated first and explained to me;
By churchly laws and customs I abide,
  If they with my opinions co-incide;
All creeds and doctrines I admit divine,
  Except those which disagree with mine.

'Twere better that the sick should die than live
  Unless they take the medicine I give;
'Twere better sinners perish than refuse
  To be conformed to my peculiar views;
'Twere better that the world stand still than move
  In any other way than that which I approve.

Friendly Exchange of Thoughts on Peter's Burning Day.

To the Editor of The Restitution.

Dear Brother:

Your sermons are always thoughtful and helpful, and I enjoy reading them very much. Your sermon in The Restitution of Oct 3rd,1916, on "The Coming age" was read by me with keenest interest; and most of it I fully agree with. There is one statement in it that presents to my mind many difficulties. It is possible that I do not fully understand you; and that you do not mean what you seem to say.

I refer to 2 Peter 3:7,10,13. Your comment on this is that Peter's language is literal, and should be taken as such. A little further on you speak of the atmosphere bursting into flames, the earth melting, and its formation being changed.

I would not trouble you with my private opinions were it not a subject that many others may be interested in, and would like a little further light on this rather difficult Scripture.

A Statement of Objections and Difficulties

I will now state a few of the difficulties in my mind that make me hesitate to accept Peter's statements as refering to the literal atmosphere (heavens) and the literal earth (terra firma).

First Difficulty

My first difficulty is to locate the time when this is to take place. It cannot be at the beginning of the millennium age; for, unless my present ideas are entirely wrong, there will be mortal nations over which Christ and his saints will reign during that age. The existence of these nations shuts out the possibility of a molten globe surrounded by clouds of intensely super-heated gasses—even if we admit the possibility of immortal saints living under such conditions.

If not at the beginning of the millennium, can we locate it at the end of that age? The world has enjoyed the grand and glowing priviledge of government by Christ and his saints; Jerusalem has been made a joy in the earth; Abraham now posseses the land he was promised; Dadid now sees his son sitting upon his throne; Israel has been gathered to their own land; war has been made to cease to the ends of the earth. Suddenly, on this peaceful scene, the day of doom decends: the atmosphere bursts into flames; the very rocks melt; all vegetable, animal and mortal human life ceases; the earth one burning molten mass rolls on in its way as it may have done in the far back ages of the past, surrounded in a mass of vapour which no sunlight can penetrate: Where Abraham and his seed (the saints) will find refuge, I cannot say! No use: I cannot make it fit on either end of the coming age. I cannot locate the time.

Second Difficulty

My second difficulty is to make this view fit into the promises that God has made. Peter is talking about the flood, and is drawing a warning to the saints from the fate of those that obeyed not God, while he encourages them by what God has promised. Let us go back to that time and see just what God did promise, and see if it leaves room for a literal understanding of Peter's words.

Get your Bible and find Genesis 8:21. The flood is past, the waters dried up, the trees and grass again beautify the earth, Noah and his family bow in humble thanksgiving to God, around the altar where the sacrifice is burning. "And the Lord smelled the sweet savor, and the Lord said in his heart, I will not again curse the ground for man's sake, neither will I again smite any more every living thing as I have done. While the earth remaineth seed time and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, day and night shall not cease."

This is one of God's promises to which Peter refers, and it entirely shuts out the possibility of a literal understanding of his words as refering to the air and the earth during a period covered by the phrase "While the earth remaineth." If we are to look forward to a time of molten rocks and flaming atmosphere, we must locate it at some time when the earth has ceased to "remain."

Now let us turn to Jeremiah 33:20; "Thus saith the Lord, if ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, that there should not be day and night in their season; then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne. Here we have two covenants set side by side: if one can be broken, then the other can be broken also, if one stands, then the other certainly stands also. Now this points us right back to Noah and God's covenant of day and night, cold and heat, summer and winter, including the promise that God would not any more smite every living thing as he had done.

Three Questions

First question— Can God's covenant with David be broken?

Second question—Can God's covenant with Noah be broken?

Third question—Can God's covenant of day and night, cold and heat, seed time and harvest, summer and winter, be kept in a world of molten rocks and flaming atmosphere?

In conclusion, I have stated my difficulties; can some of the brethren tell us how we must understand Peter? I believe that the subject would make interesting reading matter for The Restitution.

Submitted by a brother who loves to learn the whole truth.

John Parker.

Editor's Reply

Brother Parker seldom writes for The Restitution, but when he does write he always has something good to say. Our regret is that he writes so infrequent. His criticisms of our sermon on "The Nature of the Coming Age" causes us to say that our sermons are always given from skeleton notes, and then Brother Alldridge condenses the sermon in his report to the bare gist—he does not give all we say perhaps on any single point. This way of reporting our sermons, while it may in a few instances lead the reader into misunderstanding, as in the present case, on the whole is better than a verbatum report, as space is economized in The Rsstitution and yet the seed thoughts of the discourse are preserved and given publicity. We give herewith the notes of the sermon Brother Parker objects to, in the hope that its study will be interesting and profitable to the general reader.

The Nature of the Coming Age

Text: "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord" Numb.14:21)

Introduction.

1. Bible begins with the formation of earth and its preparation for the occupancy of the first Adam and his family; and closes with the reformation of the earth and its preparation for the occupancy of the second Adam and his family (Gen. 1;2; Rev 21;22).

1 The earth under its present constitution not adapted for the abode of immortal beings.

1. Its heavens—atmosphere. Impure air.
2. Its waters. Salt water undrinkable; fresh water holds in solution large amount of animal, mineral and vegetable matter, destructive to human life.
3. Its climate. Extremes of heat and cold. Vigorous constitution may become "acclimated," and endure for a while the extremes of climate; but who can survive in health artic winters? South African summers?
4. Terra firma misarranged. Unproductive-

ness. Three-fourths of earth's surface covered with water. Vast ranges of barren mountains, and sterile deserts cover the other fourth. Non-inhabitable for three hundred miles north and south of the poles! Six months of frozen arctic night!

5. Light equally faulty. Alternations of day and night, of relative duration. Man needs rest, and light is regularly withdrawn that his repose may not be disturbed.

2. God has Promised a New Heaven and a New Earth (Isa. 65:17; 2 Pet. 3:7,10-13; Rev. 21:1; Isa. 66:22; Gen. 1:1).

1. Peter's language is literal (whole epistle).
2. His reply to the scoffers (in detail).
3. God has only to suspend one law—that of chemical attraction—and the air would ignite and envelope the earth in flames forty miles deep (high). Men's works "burned up," but earth is only "melted."

3. The Earth in the Next Age will be under a Constitution Adapted for the Abode of the Saints.

1. New heavens—atmosphere (Gen. 1:6-8).
2. Its waters healed (Ezek. 47:1-12; Zech. 14:8; Rev. 22:1,2,3,).
3. Its climate ideal (Rev. 22:2,3).
4. Its productiveness unbounded (Isa. 65:17-25; Psa. 67).
5. Its light will be perfected (1 John 1:5; 1 Tim. 6:16; Exo. 10:22.23; 14:19,20; 34:29,30; Matt. 17.2; Acts 9:3; Isa. 30:26; 60:19,20; Rev. 21:18,21-26; 22:3-5).

If the reader will compare the sermon in the issue of Oct. 3rd with these notes, he will see what an expert Brother Alldridge is in reporting our sermons; and if he will study the notes for himself, he will notice that all the thoughts revolve around three propositions:

1. That the earth as now constituted is defective in its atmosphere, water, climate, terra firma and light.

2. That God has promised a new heaven and earth to supplant the ones that are now, owing to fundamental defectiveness, unfit for man's permanent abode. And

3. That the heaven and earth which are to displace thses faulty ones, will have all the defects of the former eliminated. They will have pure air, water, climate, terra firma, and light. And to guard the point of world burning, popularly so-called, we say in our notes that while "men's works are 'burned up,' the earth is only 'melted'."

Now since the defects of the old heaven and earth are pungently real, and as we all believe that the perfections in the "world to come" are gloriously literal, were we wrong in thinking and saying that the means used in the transmutation from the imperfect to the perfect, are literal also? Christ comes as the "name of the Lord from afar" (Isa. 30:27,28), because he comes in his Father's name (John 5:43). And in what character is he to be revealed according to the prophecy? "His lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire!" "In flaming fire," says Paul (2 Thess. 1:8). His day is compared to a burning furnace in Mal. 4:1,2. Another prophet speaks of his fury as sweeping through the earth like a whirlwind a continuing whirlwind; "it shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked" (Jer 30:23,24). He swallows them up in his wrath; "and the fire shall devour them" (Psa.21:9). "Upon the wicked he shall rain fire, and brimstone, and an horrible tempest; this shall be the portion of their cup" (Psa. 11:6). "I will send a fire on Magog," declares the Almighty (Ezek. 39:6). And in stating final results the affirmation is: "The slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth" (Jer. 25:33). Christ comes the second time, not as "the Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," but as "the Lion of the tribe of Judah," taking vengeance on the present unbelievng generation. His outpoured vengeance results in the destruction of the majority and the disipline of the minority. Multitudes will perish by war and pestilence; multitudes upon multitudes will fail victims of the "flaming fire" flashing out from his presence and descending after the manner and "example" of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the flames that consumed the military companies that went to bring Elijah from the top of the mount. Surely these scattered passages afford ample room for Peter's fire at the coming of Christ. And if the reader finds trouble in making all ends meet at the immediate coming of Jesus, let him go over a thousand years later, when "fire comes down from God out of heaven and devours" the sinners of the last confederacy, and he will surely agree with our representations of the matter that the judgment of God in the coming day is literal, destructive and awe-inspiring. What do you think, brethren?

OUR LINOTYPE AND MISSIONS

By S. Roxana Wince

Four commands given by Jesus to his disciples after he rose from the dead, three of them to Peter. What were they? First, comes the question to Peter, "Lovest thou me more than these?" "Feed my lambs!" "Feed my sheep!" "Follow me!"

Did he mean that none but Peter was to do these things? that none but Peter was to so care for the young converts and for the older members of the church that they would "stand fast in the truth?" Were no others of the disciples to "follow Jesus" in breaking the bread of life to the little flock? in continually "tending" and watching over them, lest grievous wolves break into the fold to scatter and devour? This certainly cannot be, judging from what happened afterward. Peter in this touching episode, was tenderly rebuked for having thrice denied the Master, and was then, for his comfort, given the leadership in the matter of tending to the wants of the rest.

So the first speech made to the one hundred and twenty disciples, gathered in that upper room at Jerusalem was made by Peter, and it was at his suggestion that Mathias was chosen to take the place of Judas. It was Peter who first publicly preached Christ, the resurrection of the dead—that men do not go to heaven when they die, that Jesus, being David's son according to the flesh, will sit on David's throne, and that to be saved every one must repent and be baptised in the name of Jesus for the remission of sins.

Peter made three thousand converts by that sermon, but in preaching it he was obeying another command of Jesus, to "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." All the disciples were to do this, for Mathias was ordained to be a witness with the eleven, of the resurrection of Jesus.

To Peter and John was it given to perform the first miracle after Jesus went to heaven, and to make about five thousand converts by the sermon that followed. But remember, John was with Peter; he too had something to say when they were commanded "not to speak at all, nor teach in the name of Jesus." And the whole company in that upper room joined with them in prayer, and after prayer, "spake the word of God with boldness."

Stephen loved Jesus, just as much as did Peter, and, "full of faith and power, did great wonders, and miracles among the people," following Jesus, even unto death.

Philip went down to Samaria and preached Christ, and caused great joy in that city.

Then Paul was called, and Barnabus became his helper. And soon after, Cornelius, a Roman, was baptized, having heard from Peter "words whereby he and all his house could be saved."

Judas, surnamed Barnabus, and Silas, helped Paul to tend the lambs and sheep, and so did Apollos, Aquila, Priscilla and Timothy, and ever so many more.

And the Thessalonian brethren "sounded out the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place their faith to God-ward was spread abroad." So that there was no need for Paul and Silvanus and Timothy to speak anything. They had received the word in much affliction and yet, with such joy in the holy spirit that, following Paul and the Lord, they became ensamples to all Macedonia and Achaia. They had "turned from idols to serve the living and true God and to wait for his son from heaven;" and they were serving him with all the might that was in them. They had love, as well as faith, they loved the brethren in all Macedonia and "abounded in love toward all men," because, they loved Jesus even "more than these." They had the thing that is greater than faith or hope, the love that never faileth.

Do we love Jesus more than we love the brethren? I am sure we do, we mourn over the fallen Smyrnas and Thyatiras of these days, where the lambs and sheep were left untended, and strayed into other folds, and are determined to raise up other churches in their room, to carry the gospel into other fields, to win other subscribers for The Restitution, to preach the truth in every house that we enter.

We are getting the Linotype that we may do all these things. We are asking great thing of the Lord. He has done much for us, but we want him to do more. We lean upon him, we trust in him. We will not stop to grieve over the lost battlefields, over warriors that have gone down in defeat, over armies that have been divided. Our mission is to press on, we still have loyal soldiers who > "Are toiling up new Calvarys > Ever with the cross that turns not back."

I have found these through my Linotype work, God bless them, each and all.

They want, they want "the gospel of the kingdom," to go into all the world as a witness before Jesus comes. They want to be in mission work. They are not satisfied to sit down with folded hands, thinking it enough if they, their wives, and their Johns be saved.

They know God loves the world and would fain have it repent, and so, they love it and strive in every possible way to bring men to Christ, "denying themselves of all ungodliness and worldly lusts," that our paper may live, and may tell the "old, old story" everywhere

NATIONAL BEREAN COLUMN

Edited by Leota R. Hanson

Articles Read at the Illinois Conference

Dear Bereans: With Christian love I greet you. I have no report of my Berean work, as I am the only Berean here. However, one sister in the faith and myself have keep up our weekly Bible study.

We enjoy our Bible study, and so often we say, "If we were only in a class of Bereans," for we truly see the great need and the spiritual strength we gain by studying the scriptures.

Let us as true Bereans pledge ourselves the coming year to do more for the work, so that we may be worthy to be called noble Bereans. And dear young Bereans who have the grand privilege of meeting in Conference, Bless and love those who labor to make the work a success. Remember the old soldiers are falling, and the ranks must be kept filled, and Berean study is the stepping stone for higher places.

My prayer is that all work may be well rewarded with blessings from our heavenly Father who knoweth our heart's desires. Remember us, the isolated: how we long to meet you in person.

Your Sister Berean,
Mittie Chandler.

Dear Bereans: It is strengthening to meet with many of like precious faith. But as we are not permitted to be with you today, it is encouraging to think that no matter how far apart we are, we may honor and serve the same Lord today and all the other days of our lives.

We know this life is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away. As we are pilgrims in this life, traveling on to another life, let us be diligent to do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with God, that we may be ready when Christ who is our life shall appear; for we know there is a life beyond the grave an everlasting life, full of glory and unspeakable joy, for all those who walk in the ways of the Lord.

Your Berean sister,
Jennie Townsend.

Dear Bereans: I have been asked to tell of my Berean work the past year. I cannot say that I have any proof that I have accomplished much the past year, but I have been trying to do what I could. I lend our literature regularly to some who read it; and when I see a request for good reading, I send our papers and tracts. Every week I send to one or more. I send to all parts of the U. S. hoping thereby to reach some.

Winter evenings I read and study the Bible a great deal, during the warm months I cannot study as much, but don't neglect it altogether, as I get hungry for such mental food, and I believe all who love the Bible do. I think we are required to sow beside all waters at all times, and we have the promise that it shall accomplish that whereunto it is sent, that we shall find it again in this life or in the other. There is no song I like better than the one beginning, 'Cast thy bread upon the waters."

Yours sister in Jesus
Lillie H. Willis.

Giving

As a society, the Bereans have become very strong in membership. Many new members are added to the list each year.

The officers of this society spend much time preparing a Berean Bible Study. This Bible study is to bring its members in touch with the true words of God. As the leaders of this society often lack funds to accomplish what they could, it is our duty to give them these funds. It is also our duty as Bereans and true followers of Christ to supply those teaching the Master's words with what we have.

If we do not form some system of saving for this we are often unable to do what we should. There are many passages in the Scriptures where they saved portions of their earnings for Master's work. In 1 Cor.16:2 we find a way concerning a collection for the saints: "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."

Would not that be a good way for us to do in this day and age. If we did more of us would be able to help more readily. In 2 Cor. 8:12-15; "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not. For I mean not that other men be eased and ye burdened. But be an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want; that there may be equality. As it is written, he that hath gathered much had nothing over, and he that had gathered little had no lack."

In these verses we find if we give willingly and according to how God has prospered us, he asks no more. Therefore if we have prospered well let us save a goodly amount for our helping fund. A small amount given accordingly will help also, for there may be many of these, and when added together will mean much. In this way we will always be ready to help spread the good news. Is it not our duty to keep those with the knowledge at work? They have the knowledge; should we not supply the necessary funds?

In Lev. 27:30 we find: "And all the tithes of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: "And concern-to the Lord." In the 32nd verse: "And concerning the tithes of the herd of the flock. even of whatsoever passeth under the red, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord." Here we find that one tenth was the Lodr's. Do you not think this about the proper amount? I am positive more and better work could be carried on by means of this saving system on our part.

In Luke 6:38; "Give, and it shall be given unto you. good measure, pressed down and shaken together, and running over, shall men give unto your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again." Thus if we give nothing, we can expect nothing. But by giving what we can, we will receive much.

In Mal. 3:8: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say,Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." Is not this the truth that we should keep before us, so that it cannot be said that we rob the Master of what belongs to him? There are many other passages of the Scriptures telling us of the importance of our duty in keeping the Lord's words before his people, but these ought to be enough to convince us of our duty.

To show you that as true followers of the truth we do not belong to ourselves but to God, I take 1 Cor. 6:19-20: "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the holy spirit which is in you, which you have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." By belonging to God, what we have must also belong to him. Therefore as Bereans and followers of the truth let it not be said of us that we are robbing God. He offers so much and asks co little of those he has bought with a price. Not with dollars and cents, as most of us figure a price, but with the blood of his only Son, the One that some day will be a just Judge in this world. One we hope to see and will see if we do our part. This should not be hard for us to do.

W. A. Hanson.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of their paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

Time was up

"I can na' get over it," a Scottish farmer remarked to his wife. "I put a two shilling piece in the plate this morning instead of my usual penny "

The beadle had noticed the mistake, and in silence he allowed the farmer to miss the plate for twenty-three consecutive Sundays.

On the twenty fourth Sunday the farmer again ignored the plate, but the old beadle stretched the ladle in front of him, and in a loud tragic whisper, hoarsely "Your time's up now Sandy."

Is your time up?

SENTENCE SERMONS

He who scorn to make little things matters of conscience, will soon be conscienceless in regard to greater things.

Faith takse up the cross, love binds it to the soul, patience bears it to the end.

Our prayers and God's mercies are like two buckets in a well; while one ascends the other descends.

Cut of suffering comes the serious mind, out of salvation the grateful heart, out of endurance fortitude, out of deliverence faith.

Little self-denials, little honesties, little passing words of sympathy, little nameless acts of kindness, little silent victories over favorite temptations; these are the silken and golden threads which when woven together, gleam out brightly, and produce the most fitting garment of human life.

Just to keep sweet and repress uncharitable opinions is to go far toward commanding the love-gospel of Christ.

If we could but conquer our inmost enemies, we could stand thousands of our outward ones.

That friendship is only indeed genuine when two friends, without speaking a word to each other, can nevertheless find happiness in being together.

An ounce of essence is worth a gallon of fluid. A wise saw may be more valuable than a whole book, and the plain truth is better than an argument.

G. B. Alldridge.

When the blessed one was suffering in the garden, and his grief was almost too heavy, he said: "If it be possible, let this cup pass away from me; not my will, but thine." So with us, it is his will, not ours, but we must become willing.

There are three things which wealth so eagerly sought and bountifully obtained can never do for us here. First, increase the number of our days upon earth; second, secure happiness while we remain; third, make us really rich in the world to come. Upon the other hand, riches may cut short our time here, increase our cares, and drag us to an untimely grave of eternal loss.

O'er every region of the dead, cold earth,
His glory tell!

Tell how he lived, and toiled, and wept below
Tell all his love;
Tell the dread wonders of his awful woe;
Tell how he fought our fight, and smote our foe,
Then rose above!

Tell how in weakness he was crucified,
But rose in power;
Went up on high, accepted, glorified:
News of his victory spread far and wide,
From hour to hour.

Tell how he sits at the right hand of God
In glory bright,
Making the heaven of heavens his glad abode;
Tell how he cometh with the iron rod
His foes to smite.

Tell how his kingdom shall thro' ages stand,
And never cease;
Spreading like sunshine over every land,
All nations bowing to his high command,
Great Prince of Peace!

The Nature of Love to God and Christ Enforced

"He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things: thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep" (John 21:17).

The Scriptures reveal to the thoughtful student that in the world, and we may say, even in the church, there are two classes: the one class who love God; the other who do not love him and often hate him.

Two minds influence the lives of all men either the carnal mind or mind of the flesh, or the new mind, the mind of the spirit. Paul in Rom. 8:7 distinctly tells us that the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. The mind having once been enlightened by the good word of God, may again revert back to its original condition, as Paul also argues in Rom. 1:28-32. This is a terrible condition of mind, but is possible if we forget God. At one time we were alienated from God, and enemies in our mind by wicked works, but now hath he reconciled us to himself (Col. 1:21). In our Lord's day he pointed out to the Jews, why they so bitterly opposed him. It was because they had not the love of God in their hearts (John5·42).

Jesus proposed to put Peter's love to the test. For the case of Peter required a more marked notice than that of the other apostles: in order that both he and others might derive the greater benefit from his fall and recovery. Our Lord therefore on this occasion, addressed him by his original name, as if he had forfeited that of Peter through his instability, saying, "Lovest thou me more than these?" This clause might be interpreted of his employment and gains as a fisherman, and be considered as a demand, whether he loved Jesus above all his secular interests; but Peter's answer to my mind also determines this interpretation: He had, before his fall, in effect said that he loved his Lord more than any of the other disciples did; for he had boasted, that "though all men were offended, yet would not he." Jesus now asked him whether he would stand to this, and aver that he loved him more than the disciples then present did. To this he answered modestly by saying, "Thou knowest that I love thee," without professing to love him more than others. Our Lord's reply to this was, "Feed my lambs." This intimated to Peter, that his late experience of his own weakness ought to render him peculiarly condescending, compassionate, tender, and attentive to the meanest and feeblest believers; and to such as were harassed with temptations, or overtaken with a fault, or who manifested many and great infirmities; as the shepherd takes the greatest care of the most weak and sickly lambs of his flock.

Soon after our Lord repeated his question: but as Peter had dropped the latter part of it, he urged that no further; which proves that it is not true love of Christ, which is not decidedly superior to our love of earthly things, when Peter had again appealed to him, that he knew he really did love him, Jesus ordered him to show that love, by "Feeding his sheep;" by diligently laboring to promote the edification of every description of believers as well as to spread the knowledge of the truth world wide.

But as Peter had thrice denied Jesus; so he was pleased to repeat the same question "a third time;" this grieved Peter, as it reminded him, that he had given sufficient cause for being thus repeatedly questioned, concerning the sincerity of his love for his Lord. Conscious, however, of his integrity, he more solemnly appealed to Christ, as knowing all things, even the secrets of his heart, that he knew he loved him with cordial affection, notwithstanding the grievous inconsistency of his late behavior. Our Lord then tacitly allowed the truth of this profession, and renewed his charge to him, "feed my sheep."

We learn this lesson from Peter's experience, that every confession of faith made must endure testing. It is God's law and none can escape it. every time we make a confession of love to Christ, we admit in our life at some time a state of alienation from him existed. John declares, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh: and that which is born of the spirit is spirit" (John 3:6). Hence then as Paul reasons, to be carnally minded or in the flesh, we cannot please God (Rom. 8:6-8).

But God manifested his love towards us even while we were enemies and alienated from him (Rom. 5:10). But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we had our conversation in times past in the lust of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others (Eph. 2:2-7). But now this wonderful love of God taking hold upon our hearts transform us. Our present experience verifies Paul's declaration in 2 Cor. 5:17,18: "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

If then we are a new creature, possessing a new mind, the mind of the spirit, what signs of of love, what are the evidences of love in our lives, that we sincerely love God?

If we love Christ sincerely, then we should frequently and affectionately think of him. The person we love most often occupying the thoughts of our mind. Love of Christ was so real to Paul. that to those that did not love him he said let them be accursed (1 Cor. 16:22). David's experience was a blessed wholesome one: "How precious also are thy thoughts unto me. O God; how great is the sum of them; If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand; when I awake, I am still with thee" (Psa. 139:17,18). David was always thinking about the Lord's goodness and lovingkindness, even upon his bed during the long hours of the night (Psa. 63:3-6). So he could say in the morning as the light of day streamed in upon him. "My meditation of him is sweet" (Psa. 104: 24).

A blessing always comes to the mind that dwells upon God: it brings peace, quietness, confidence and a knowledge of things to come (Isa. 26:3,8,9). But how different the minds of his enemies; They do not like to retain God in their minds; that care not to think of him (Rom. 1:28). If we forget God, then with the nations who also forget him, God will turn into oblivion (Psa. 9·17; Psa. 50 22). Pride kept God out of our minds, (Psa. 10:4). The fear or love of God is the beginning of wisdom. Hence with Job we see why wicked men follow their own thoughts and ways contrary to the mind and purposes of God (Job21: 13-15).

If we love God our delight will be to commune with him. If we draw nigh to God, of course God will draw nigh or commune with us (James 4:8). If our hearts are inspired with hope begotten through the Gospel, then God to us becomes very near (Heb. 7:19). Our trust being in God, to draw near to him must and will do us good (Psa. 73:28). Drawing near to God gives us assurance, stability and sympathy towards and for each other (Heb. 10:22-24). When we commune with God, God is honored and will plead and defend our cause (Lam. 3:56-59). Communion with God, brings fellowship with God and his dear Son (1 John1:3; John (14:21-24). Communion with God, brings love of God into our life. A heart filled with love for God,will surely obey him and keep his commandments.

If we love God then the ordinances of the gospel will be found places for interviews between God and his people. When David through adverse circumstances was unable to assemble with God's people in the Temple, he cried out: "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." Read Psalm 42 and Psalm 84. "My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord; my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God." David desired one thing of the Lord. He says in Psa. 27:4; "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his temple." If we stay at home and neglect going to church, then this is a strong evidence we do not love God, for we are strictly enjoined "to consider one another, to provoke unto love and good works, not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." (Heb. 10:24,25).

Those whom we love the best we seek to please. If we love the Lord with all our heart, with all our mind, with al our strength and with al our soul, then at all times, in all places we will endeavour to please and obey him. Almost the last wish and instructions Jesus gave to his disciples was. "If ye love me keep my commandments" (John 14:15,23,24). His beloved disciple who leaned his head upon his bosom, says his commandments are not grievous ((John 5:3). Paul who suffered the loss of all things for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ his Lord, kept his body cause of his Lord and brethren (Rom. 12:1,2). Beloved, that service was always rendered with an eye single to the glory of God (Eph.6:6). This service of love for God will eventually, as it did our Master, make us perfect in every good work (Heb. 13:21).

Finally, my beloved brethren, if we love God, then we cannot help but love his beloved Son Jesus, and all his brethren. (1 John 5:1; 4:21; 1 Pet. 1:22). It is a glorious fact and experience to know that if we love God and our brethren, then we know that we have passed from death unto life, because we are the brethren (1 John 3:14,15).

Lord in the morning thou shalt hear
My voice ascending high;
To thee will I direct my prayer
To thee lift up mine eye.

Up to the hills where Christ is gone
To plead for all his saints,
Presenting at his Father's throne,
Our songs and our complaints.

Thou art a God before whose sight
The wicked shall not stand;
Sinners shall ne'er be thy delight,
Nor dwell at thy right hand.

But to thy house will I resort.
To taste thy mercies there;
I will frequent thy holy court,
And worship in thy fear.

Oh, may thy spirit guide my feet
In ways of righteousness;
Make every path of duty straight
And plain before my face.

Finally, dear brethren, be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love and peace shall be with you. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the holy spirit, be with you all. Amen (2 Cor. 13:11,14).

THE WEEK OF AGES

A. D. Strickler

The making of a natural free-will, intellectual and moral creature, in the image of God, is a work which only God can do, as it takes infinite wisdom and management to direct the work, It is entirely optional with such a creature, as to whether the natural shall be transformed and made new into a spiritual creation.

The apostle says, "That is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural." The inclination and drift of the natural, is to follow in the line of the least resistance, to obey the insistent demands of the nature to be gratified; which is summarized by the apostle John as "The lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." Man is the child of wrath because he consents to do those things which have their seat in the heart, Christ said: "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies: these are the things which defile a man" (John 15·19,20). The work to be done is, to take this morally unclean and defiled creature, who has had an experimental knowledge with evil, and make him into the image of God; to make him a child of favor in place of one of wrath and disfavor. That God is equal to accomplish what he purposed in himself need not be questioned only by those who do not know the Scriptures. "Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." The Lord said by the prophet Isaiah: So shall my word be that goeth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it" (Isa.55:11). Christ said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work" (John 5:17).

God has been working up through the six days of the week of ages, and down through the times which stand related to his work in creating man in his image. The end of these times is fast approaching! God said, "I have laid help upon one that is mighty; I have exalted one chosen out of the people" (Psa. 89:19). "And I have put my words in thy mouth, and have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people" (Isa. 51:16). "If the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, it is the remnant that shall be saved: for the Lord will execute his work upon the earth, finishing it and cutting it short" (Rom. 9:27,28). The work of making the perfect man will be finished in the millennium and cut short, not being allowed to exceed that time; flesh, after that time is expired, will have no more opportunity to become a son of God. The prophet says, "It is the remnant that shall be saved," The children of Israel and the Gentiles too, may be numbered as the sand upon the sea shore, yet it will be only a very few in comparison to the whole number who will be saved and go to make up "man made in the image of God." From Adam to Noah, God's work in making his own image, was but little advanced, a few examples such as Abel, Enoch and Noah being given: but the mass as stated "was corrupt, for all flesh had corrupted his way upon earth" (Gen. 6:12). The time covered during this period was 1656 years, The next period was only 367 years, during which time the whole world had become Idolatrous, when with the call of Abraham, a new start was made. What success was made in taking out a people for the name of God, during the period of 430 years from the call of Abraham to the exodus from Egypt, we know not, but we should conclude that it was not much: for it was because of transgression, that the law of Moses was given at Sinai being added to the promises which God had made to the fathers of Israel.

The next period, covering all the time that the law of Moses as a code, was binding upon the people, about equals that from Adam to the destruction of the antideluvian world, viz., 1659. This period saw much progress in the work of God; but so far as the masses of Israel and the Gentiles were concerned, the giving of the law, did not cleanse the conscience and create within it the image of God. The history of Israel as recorded in the Bible, shows how God by the ministry of the prophets, was not successful in keeping that people from sin, the apostle Paul gives the reason in Rom. 8:3, when he says: "For what the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh." The will power of the unregenerated man, is too weak to resist the natural demands or impulses of his nature and obey the higher law of God, the law of faith, which when obeyed, will "yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness," and result in eternal life. A moral law, such as that engraven on stones at Mount Sinai, separated from God's law of faith, cannot give anybody eternal life. Something more than mere morality is necessary to make man in the image and likeness of God. "Without faith it is impossible to please God"

(Heb. 11:6), "And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith" (1 John 5:4). "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is, and every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure" (1 John 3:2,3).

What is the instrument that he is using to do the work with, which he commenced six thousand years ago to do? Paul said that he was not ashamed of the gospel; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth (Rom. 1:16), and Peter said: "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" (2 Peter1:4). The gospel and the promises of God are one; and he has no other instrument wherewith to save man. The prophet says that God's word shall not return unto him void, but it shall accomplish that which he please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto he sent it (Isa. 55:11). The apostle says in Phil. 2:12, 13; "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." To the Ephesians the apostle said: "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."

Plainly then, we come to understand that God's transforming and creating power is his word, the Scriptures of truth. The Scriptures in all its parts, are necessary to produce that perfection of character which belongs to the man made in the image of God. Paul said to Timothy that from a babe he had known the sacred writings, "which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. Every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness" (2 Tim. 3:15,16). Unlike human writings, there is a power and authority in them that arrests attention and secures obedience where conviction as to their truth exists. The sacred writings are as though they were now being spoken by God in our hearing and because it is God who is speaking, the godly man trembleth. The prophet says, "But to that man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and that trembleth at my word" (Isa. 66:2).

The Bible is so divinely constructed, that its effect upon the person having faith, that is an understanding faith, in it, will feel searched through and through. Here is the way that Paul in Heb. 4:12, states what it does: "For the word of God is living, and active, and sharper than any two edged sword, and piercing even to the dividing of soul and spirit, of both joints and marrow, and quick to discern the thoughts and intents of the heart." Every thought and act of human nature, is laid open and made visible. by historic example in living persons, and written explanation of the inspired penman. The way in which God worketh in a man "to will and to do of his good pleasure," is by his word finding a lodgment in the enlightened understanding and being affectionately believed. David says, "Thy testimonies are wonderful: therefore doth my soul keep them. The entrance of thy words giveth light: it giveth understanding unto the simple" (Psa. 119:129,130). "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple" (Psa. 19:7).

Again, we learn in Psa. 119:142, that God's law is the truth. When the moral attributes of God as proclaimed in Exodus 34. become the attributes of man, then will he be in his image. "Abundant in goodness and truth," was part of God's attributes, and so, if his law is the truth, and it becomes a part of man's mentality, then, to that extent is man in the image of God, God's attributes and his mind are one: in the Bible we find the mind of God unfolded, not in only one part, but in all, from Genesis to Revelation. Now when "the manifold wisdom of God" in the Scriptures become so deeply written into the tables that are hearts of flesh (2 Cor. 3:3), that habits of righteousness and right faith become established, the result will be an approved character, a destiny. "The hidden man of the heart (1 Pet. 3:4) is a creation of God by the instrumentality of his word, which is his law and which is the truth. Anything that is false, any false doctrine or teaching, will produce only a counterfeit and not a genuine "man of the heart." The Psalmist says, "The law of the Lord is perfect," God would not use an imperfect instrument in the making of his own likeness, working as he does by moral suasion and entreaty with a free-will creature. Here we will repeat a former quotation from Paul, viz., "The holy Scripture is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

It will now be interesting and profitable to consider how God uses his word to fashion a creature of his (who by suggestion, has established habits of unrighteousness), into his own image. The start is made with an unenlightened man in the condition described by Paul in Eph. 4:18; "Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart." Here is a condition that debars any and or of God's moral creatures so long as it exists, from being made in his image and thereby receiving the gift of eternal life. Evidently then, the first thing to do is to enlighten "the darkened understanding," which was the first thing that Paul did when he was sent to preach to the Gentiles. How he enlightened them we learn in Rom. 10:13-17; "For whosoever shall call upon the Lord shall be saved. How then shall thy call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?" Paul closes his statement by saying, "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." When the word of God is heard, understood and believed, then follows a desire for the things which the word of God promises; this desire in the Bible is called "hope," and is spoken of as the "one hope of your calling." The things contained in the promises of God are so extensive, powerful and righteous, that he has based the attainment of them upon certain conditions, which are as a whole comprised in being made "A new creature," "For neither is circumcision anything or uncircumcision, but a new creature" (Gal. 6:15). "And have put on the new man, which is being renewed unto knowledge after the image of him that created him" (Col.3: 10). When "the old man with his deeds," has served the object and time for which God has permitted him to exist, he will cease to exist any longer; he shall be destroyed; he shall perish.

Holiness is one of the conditions that is absolutely necessary, as enjoined in the Bible: "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. 12:14). "Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy" (Lev. 19:2). "Having therefore these promises, beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all defilement of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God" (2 Cor. 7:1).

With this condition of holiness before the one having understanding, faith and hope in the promises of God, confession of sins and repentance take place as the first step toward attaining to the holiness of God. In order to establish the proper humility and child-like disposition, which is an essential characteristic of the new creature, created in the image of God; a public and outward demonstration and manifestation of the inward faith, and also of guilt and repentance, must be made. God has instituted baptism as the means by which this can be done, it is a command of God to be obeyed; ano is a part of that righteousness of God. without which there is no salvation. Paul says in Romans 16:25,26, that his gospel was made known to all nations for "the obedience of faith." by the command of the everlasting God. Christ said to his apostles, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation, He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16: 15,16).

BREATH OF LIFE

The breath of life is viewed by the immortal soulists in general as being the immortal soul. This view we utterly reject for the following reasons:

"N'Shahmah" the word rendered "breath of life," occurs twentyfour times in the old testament. Eighteen times it is translated "breath" or "breathing" it is rendered "breath" in Gen. 2:7; 7:22; Isa. 2:22; Psa. 150:6; 1 Kings 17:17; "blast" in Sam. 22:16; Job 4:9; "soul" in Isa. 57:16; and "inspiration" in Job 32:8. Try to read "immortal soul" as a rendering for "N'Shahmah" in each of the foregoing texts, and note the results.

"N'Shahmah" is defined as follows by the lexicons: "N'Shahmah means breath; life; breath of God; That life, of which he is the author; the wind" Lee's Hebrew Lexicon.

N'Shahmah, from the verb nesham, to breathe, occurs twentyfour times in the old testament, and is invariably rendered pneuma in the Greek, from the verb pneo, to blow, breathe, rendered wind, air, the breath of life. living being, spirit, i.e. feeling" (Liddell and Scott).

"Neshamah or nesme signifies the chameleon or kind of lizzard which has its mouth always open, gaping for the air of which it was once supposed to live" (Taylor's Hebrew Concordance).

If these eminent lexicographers are to be accepted, one must admit they no where define "N'Shahmah" as being the deathless soul.

That the "breath of life" is not an immortal soul may be seen from the following reasons also:

1. The residence of the "breath of life" is the "nostrils"---a queer place for an immortal ghost!

2. This "breath" is in the "nostrils" of not only Adam, but also in the "nostrils" of all the brutes (Gen. 2:7;7:22; Isa. 2:22)!

3. Adam and all animals pre-existed, if the "breath" before its entrance into them was alive and conscious!

4. The "breath after its entrance into Adam and the brutes, established life and consciousness in them, but not in itself.

5. On the withdrawal of the "breath" at death, life and consciousness cease in man and beast.

6. This "breath of life" in the nostrils of man and the beasts means not a variety of things but one thing --"The breath of life." "The city of Rome" means one city; "The army of Washington; one army; so "the breath of life" means only "one breath" dwelling in all flesh(Eccl. 3:19).

7. As the "breath" established, not life and consciousness in itself, upon entering Adam and the brutes, when it leaves them at death, it departs as a lifeless unconscious thing.

8. As the "breath comes from the winds" in the resurrection to make man alive(Ezek. 37), can there be conscious living breaths of life in the winds? Is the air the heaven of departed breaths of life?

9. Rev. 11. was this "breath of life" that "came from God" and made these prophets alive and conscious, alive and conscious before it entered them? If so, then was not the "breath of life" a living personality before it entered Adam?

10. Are there two kinds of breath in the nostrils--"the breath of life" and the "breath"? If so, why does not the Bible even speak of the breaths of a man?"

11. If the "breath of life" is the immortal mind, and it is "in the nostrils," it follows that the seat of the mind is in the nostrils, and not in the cranium!!

12. All will admit the "breath of life," when it leaves the "nostrils of brutes, is unconscious Then we must also admit it is unconscious when it leaves the nostrils of man, seeing it is the "one kind" in both.(Eccl. 3:19,Leeser Ver.).

13. If the "breath of life" is an immortal soul, then as it dwells in animals too, it is most positive proof that animals have immortal souls dwelling "in their nostrils!"

14. If the withdrawal of the "breath of life" plunges the brute into an unconscious state, its withdrawal from man would plunge him, too, into unconsciousness. If not, why not?

To conclude; It is plainly evident from the foregoing arguments that the "breath of life" that dwells "in the nostrils" of man and beasts is not an immortal spirit, but the lifeless and unconscious element of life. John Fiske Jr

"The laborer is worthy of his hire." To pay more than he is worth is charity, and to pay less is robbery. The Bible teaches economic justice.

Many brethren know A. H. Zilmer, an ex-minister among us, who left us a few years ago, was re-baptized, and identified himself with a body of people whom he thought were Christadelphians. He is just now waking up to the fact that he was deceived, and that instead of being a Christadelphian, he is merely "Dear Mr. Zilmer" to them. They not only refuse to fellowship him, but they decline to give him the right to join them even in a petition for military exemption. The Christadelphians are perfectly willing to exclude "Mr. Zilmer" from their camp, expose him to flying bullets, and see him shot down, without crooking their little finger in an effort to rescue him. But we let him tell his own story in his own words:

"Several months ago we informed the brethren that we had written to some of our brethren in association with Birmingham with a view to securing their co-operation, or co-operating with them, in the matter of sending a petition to the Government asking for exemption from military service. We have received word from Brethren E. J. Mitchell, of Boston, Mass. and W. W. Wells of Orange, N. J., to the effect that owing to differences on 'some of the first principles of the truth' their respective ecclesias did not wish to co-operate with us in the matter. For this we are heartily sorry. The note in 'Bible Truth' urged 'all the ecclesias in the United States' to unite in this petition, and that it be signed 'by all Christadelph ians in the United States.' We thought this was broad enough to include 'all Christadelphians in the United States,' but the answers we received, together with the fact that in one of these we were addressed as 'Dear Mr. Zilmer,' would indicate that, notwithstanding we believe all things that are written in the law of Moses and the prophets, and steadfastly adhere to the teaching of Jesus and the apostles, we are not recognized as Christadelphians. If those brethren will point out to us what we are lacking to constitute us true Christadelphians we shall feel grateful for such service. This is not written in the spirit of polemics, but simply to direct attention to conditions as they actually exist, and if possible to obtain information upon the matter referred to. We are no friend of controversy, and have persistently kept away from it, and assure our readers that we shall in future as in the past do our utmost to avoid it. But we are anxious to know, if we do not, what is required to constitute anyone a brother in Christ." (October Advocate, pp.114, 115).

"Mr. Zilmer," it seems, is in poor standing with the Christadelphians, in fact, he has no standing at all, for they do not even recognize him as a brother. He must be "heartily sorry" to make this discovery. But even in the schismatic sect to which he belongs he is accused of being a covenant-breaker. One of his own brethren, writing in usual and truly Christadelphian style, thus flays "Mr. Zilmer:"

"My Very Dear Brother:

Yours of the 9th just received and replying will say that I think you have left out of your communication to the brotherhood to be published or sent through 'The Advocate' the first of next month, a very important matter which the brethren ought to know to be able to judge in this matter wisely and righteously (2 Chron. 19.6,7; Deut. 1: 16,17). I refer to the fact, first, because it has been reported that The Advocate Committee interfered with the Editor's work it was voted by a majority of the committee to give the Editor a 'free hand' and the right of censor, so that the Editor and not the Committee is responsible for all that has appeared and been taught in 'The Advocate' up to the present time. Second, It is a fact that the Editor made the promise that he would edit 'The Advocate' on the same lines and promote the true teaching of its late Editor, Brother Thomas Williams—and it is a fact that he has not fulfilled his promise. Therefore I refuse to allow that the Committee is responsible for the present deplorable condition into which it has fallen. The only mistake made by the Committee was in giving the Editor a free hand and the right of censor, when they should have maintained as their sacred right and duty to see that 'The Advocate ' was an instrument for the promotion of 'the one faith' (as taught by Brother T. Williams and Dr Thomas and the Sacred Scriptures) and come out with the whole truth. 'Let God be true if it makes every man a liar.'—I.N.J." —(October Advocate,p.301).

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother Huggins:

In the blessed truth I am writing you a short letter again in behalf of the Linotype Fund.

I am sending you $3.50 of which $3.00 is for myself,Mrs. M. A. Anderson; and 25cts.,for Master Lester Anderson, age 8 years old; and 25cts. for Miss Velma Anderson, aged 5 years. These two little children are my grandchildren and they come to me each week to hear me read Sister Roxana Wince's pieces to them; so they wanted to help some, as other little boys and girls have done.

Yours in Christ
Mrs. M. A. Anderson.

Dear ones of the household of faith:

I would like to ask through our dear old Restitution, if any one knows of any benefit being derived from using Dr. Thatcher's Magnetic Shields. I am affected with progressive paralysis. Please write me a personal letter about this treatment, if you know anything about it.

E. W. Mead,
Clarksville, Iowa.

Sister S. Roxana Wince:

The undersigned has been a regular subscriber and reader of our church paper now called The Restitution. The writer was taking the paper at the time of the great fire at Chicago, and now has one copy of the first paper printed after the great fire. Wife and I are getting old and well stricken in years. We have no church close enough to attend the meetings, and The Restitution is a welcome visitor at our home. Please find enclosed post office money order for $5.00 for the Linograph Fund.

E. and H. L. Cox.

Dear Sister Wince:

Inclosed please find draft for $10.00 towards helping the Linograph Fund, from the following:

My son, Sydney Lovelace,$5.00 .
Mrs.Lanie Lovelace,$5.00

I pray the dollars may be multiplied until enough is raised to make full payment for the Linograph without going in debt a "single penny," and I have faith that this will be done. Trusting that we may all meet soon in the life to come, if not in this dispensation, I am waiting and watching the great drama of the world, and reading with interest the articles in The Restitution. Yours are of double interest to me:

First on account of their lucid convincing truths, and,

Second—Because Indiana is my native state, I was born at Kingsbury, LaPorte Co. 68 years ago. My father was Daniel Shaw. He was a noble man and died in the faith; also my dear old mother. Oh, if I had such an understanding of the truth as they! But he will not fail or forsake us, if we keep on.With love and best wishes and prayers, I remain,

Your Sister in the one hope,
Lanie Lovelace.

A BEAUTIFUL BAPTISMAL SERVICE IN INDIANA

To be brave and strong and true; to take a stand for certain ideals when you know it is not popular; to have courage, when the circle of friends with whom you meet, does not, cannot and will not, see as you do; to be yourself; planted, like a tree, by the rivers of water; to measure up to the law of the Lord, and be his delight.

Strange subject this but these thoughts have crowded out every other plan, and seem the only way I can find to express it.

By request I want to tell the readers of The Restitution of the beautiful baptismal service of Brother and Sister W. E. Byers. On the 17th of last September, a few friends and believers, gathered at the home of her sister, Mr. and Mrs. Leffel, in North Manchester, Ind. and after short services in the home by Brother J. F. Wagoner, went to the banks of Eel River nearby, and Brother and Sister Byers were buried in baptism. Will we ever see another picture like this one? Two young people,full of hope and courage, ready to face the world and what it might say; dear Bro- Wagoner tottering with his eighty three years, performing the service. But God gave the strength Brother Wagoner prayed for, and oh the beauty and simplicity of it all! The perfect day, the sheltered and quiet place, protected from the public gaze of those who would not approve; the beautiful setting sun, the peace and joy, made you think of God's perfect day. The story was not new to Brother and Sister Byers, for when quite young, I understand Brother B W. Woodward baptised them, or at least Brother Byers, I am not certain about Sister Byers, being immersed then, although she too had been immersed.

In the years that followed they were married, and now have a lovely family of five children. They moved from the home of their childhood to the place where they now live, near North Mancsehter, Ind. Strangers in a strange land, here it was they had to meet the paths that led in other directions. They did not know of any one near who believed as they did, and to meet the world with a faith and hope of the gospel, they had to study. From searching the Scriptures they concluded they should be immersed; then they would feel stronger and more like real soldiers.

Not long ago,a sister in writing for the paper wished people would give their address, for we might be near some one of our faith and not know it; in this case,through their correspondence with dear Sister Wince, we found about fifteen within a radius of a few miles who believed the truth; and it was these few who gathered on the banks of the river to witness this baptismal service. The seed had been sown by the rivers of water, planted like a tree; and it brought forth fruit in due season. May they stand strong in defense of the faith like a tree, towering high when the winds blow and clouds gather. Just to do what God wants us to do, and to be what he wants us to be. May his richest blessing be with and overshadow our dear Brother Wagoner and these two dear ones, and keep them. And when eighty-three mile stones of our lives are rounded out, may our high ideals and noble influence be handed down to others, as Brother Wagoner's have come to us, and may we all keep clean in the fear of the Lord.

Sincerely and in love,

Ettie Fry

WITH GOOD WILL DOING SERVICE

By S. Roxana Wince

How many people seem to think that, having believed and obeyed the gospel, there is nothing more to be done, save to go to church and prayer meeting, help sing beautiful hymns, speak and pray with the rest, get all the good and the pleasure possible out of the sermons if they happen to strike the fancy. and if not go home criticising and irritated. True these things are a part of the service we owe to God, all save the criticising of God's messengers, and the thought of receiving much as our due and giving little in return. Service means work, when a young person is hired by some family to do house work, field or shop work, we say he, or she, has gone out to service, and not once does such young person think of sitting down with folded hands, and doing nothing when the place is reached, with the hope of being paid for work undone.

We laugh at the very idea, we know the hired servant must fulfill his part of the contract or he will lose both place and wages. The washing, the ironing,, the scrubbing, the baking must be done, the meals be prepared in time, rooms be swept and furniture dusted. The plowing, the sowing the harvesting must be faithfully performed, shoes be mended, harness made.

The field ,where God's work is be done, is the world.That is the vineyard that he wants tended and into which he sends his laborers. The church is his working force, they are to give themselves, their money, the utmost powers of their being, to lift up, clean up, wash, iron, plow, and sow the world.

The services of the house of God are theirs, that they may be fitted for field work, both at home and in foreign lands.

We think it out of the question for us to attempt mission work, but is it?

Did he who said "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature" require an impossible thing? Most assuredly not. he wants us to ask great things, to get great things, to do great things.

We thought it a wonderful thing when we dared to ask for the Linotype, yet according to our faith, so has it been. It will be ours in time, not a penny will we be in debt. How our hearts overflow with love and gratitude and praise to him from whom comes every good and perfect gift;

It pays "with good will to do service," we have taken much meal from the barrel and oil from the cruse, and yet the store does not fail, nor are sticks lacking for fire.

Why should we who have become the bond-servants of Christ, sit down and do nothing? No man would like to hire that kind of a hand when the fields were white for the harvest.

We can all be preachers if we will, we can read the promises made to Abraham and to his seed to even the casual caller, and can show that those promises will not fail, because God cannot lie, I do, I prove that there will be a resurrection of the dead, to everlasting life, and everlasting inheritance of the earth, by reading these promises. This I tell my friends is "the gospel."

We "do service with good will" when we do this, we "do service with good will" when we tell people what to do to be saved; when we teach the little ones in Sunday school, when we watch our words, when we take good heed to our conduct.

"Christian! walk carefully!" Let no one be able to say truthfully, "I do not think much of these people."

Have a good report with these that are without, you cannot "with good wil do service" unless you have, your tracts your papers your preaching, will avail nothing unless you have this good report. The "good will" towards others, must begin with the mastery of yourself, if you truly love them, you will set them a proper pattern to copy after. How can they believe in the transforming power of the gospel, when they see no vital change in you who profess it?

If you cannot overcome by the blood and faith of Jesus, how can they?

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON LEAF

Lesson XI

Subject--What must I do to be saved?

Memory Text

"He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God" (Micah 6:8).

1. "And brought them out and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved?"

2. "And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house.

3. "And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house."

4. "And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptised, he and all his, straightway" (Acts 16:30-33).

5. "And he said unto them. Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

6. "He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:15,16).

7. "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ they were baptised both men and women"(Acts 8:12).

8. "I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have showed you and have taught you publicly, and from house to house.

9. "Testifying both to the Jews and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 20:20,21).

10. "But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them.

11. "And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Jesus Christ" (2 Tim. 3:14,15).

Practical Thoughts

This is the most important subject in the Bible and should be stndied with care. Faith and works cannot be separated in relation to salvation. What must I believe and what must I do? Abraham's faith was counted for righteousness, and it is said of him that he believed God. God has made very precious promises in the gospel and he requires that we accept them or believe them and do what he has commanded. There are three things promised in the gospel.

1. An inheritance in the earth;
2. A position in the kingdom of God as kings and priests;
3. Incorruptibility and immortality; and all these blessings are conditional, that is to say, dependent on faith in the gospel and obedience to the same. With these points before us it will not be difficult to see that God requires implicit faith and ready obedience. The gospel of Christ, the gospel of the kingdom, the word of faith, the word of the kingdom, the word of the Lord, are all of them phrases which relate to the glad tidings of salvation through Christ and are generally included in the term "the gospel," and this is God's power of saving men. Let us believe and obey.

Notes on the Lesson

1. Brought them out.—Paul and Silas had been cast into prison and the jailor asks of them the important question, "What must I do to be saved?"

2. Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. —How much there is in this statement! It includes more than simply believing that there exists such a person; it includes the doctrines he taught, the promises he made and his ability to make them good.

3. Word of the Lord.—Signifies the same as "the gospel" (Acts 10:36,37; Mark 1:14; 1 Pet. 1: 25).

4. World.—Gr. Kosmos.

Every creature.—The whole creation, or more literally, to all creation.

5. Baptized.—Dipped, immersed, or plunged into water.

6. Both Men and Women.—There is no prohibition on account of sex. The women as well as the men were baptized. Paul writes we are all one in Christ Jesus.

7. Repentance toward God.—Repentance is necessary. Jesus says; "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." Peter said, "Repent and be baptized."

8. Continue thou in the things which thou hast learned.— Jesus says, "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life," To believe is necessary, to repent is necessary, to be baptized is necessary, yet these are not enough: we are to continue faithful unto the end. A holy life is indispensible to happiness even in this life, and it certainly is for the life to come.

9. Holy Scriptures.—The Old Testament Scriptures were no doubt here referred to, as the New Scriptures were not yet written, or at least collected together.

10. Through faith.—Observe salvation comes through faith in Jesus Christ and a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. Faith in the Gospel.—What is the jailor told to do in the second paragraph? Does a belief in the gospel include a belief in the Lord Jesus Christ? Does faith include more than simply to believe? What is the difference betwten faith and trust? Can anyone be saved withont faith in the gospel?

2. Repentance.—What is meant by repentance? Is "sorrow for sin" repentance (2Cor. 7:9-10)? Which is first, faith or repentance? What did Paul preach or testify to Jew and Greek? Can we be saved without repentance?

3. Baptism.—What is meant by baptism? Show where in our lesson we are taught that we should be baptized. Was the jailor baptized in the house? When did Phillip baptize the converts at Samaria, before or after believing the gospel? Why did Paul re-baptize twelve men at Ephesus (Acts 19: 4,5)? Can we be saved without submitting to the ordinance of baptism?

4. Do Justly.—Do faith, repentance and baptism save us witnout conforming to the right? Read Rom. 12:1,2, and tell us what is meant by being "Transformed."

5. Love Mercy.—Where are we taught in the Bible that God is merciful? To whom is he merciful (Psa. 145:9)? Tell us what Jesus said of the merciful in his sermon on the Mount. Where is a command to be merciful (Luke 6:36)?

6. Walk Humbly. What is it to walk humbly?

What does our memory text say?

7. Be Faithful unto Death.—How long must we serve God? What does the Bible say of those who fall away from the faith (Heb.6:4-6; Luke 9:62)? What does it say of those who are faithful (Matt. 24:13; Rev. 2.10 Jas.1,12)? What things has God promised all who believe and obey? Do we believe, and hav we obeyed?

OUR REWARD

What is reward? That which is given in return for good or evil. "Verily there is a reward for the righteous" (Psa. 58:11).

What is their reward? "He that receiveth a righteous man, in the name of a righteous man, shall receive a righteous man's reward."

Who is a righteous man?

He that doeth right, and knows that he is doing right: Not one who thinks he is doing right. Paul when he was persecuting the church, thought he was doing right, but he was not righteous; Why? Because he was not right in the sight of God. But being called of God (Acts 9:10), he became obedient, and turned to God and did his will, which was right, and so became righteous. So any one who receiveth Paul, or his writings, or his works, receiveth a righteous man. And if we receive Paul in the name of Christ (another righteous man), we shall receive a righteous man's reward, which is life eternal (Matt.25:46), in God's glorious kingdom. "And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward" (Matt. 10:41,42; Mark 9:41). "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; And then he shall reward every man according to his works." Every man's work shall be made manifest: if any man's work abide, he shall receive a reward (Matt.16:27; 1 Cor. 3:13,14).

After Abram refused to take anything from the king of Sodom (Gen. 14:17), the word of the Lord came to Abram in a vision saying, "Fear not Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward" (Gen. 15 1). To him that soweth righteousness shall be a sure reward (Prov. 11:18). Abram did a righteous act, in refusing to take anything from Sodom. For the men of Sodom were wicked and sinners before the Lord (Gen. 13:13). So if the Lord was Abram's great reward, by Abram's righteousness, then we (if we become the seed of Abraham), can have the same reward that Abraham has, and get the reward at the same time Abraham does. At that time there is but one reward given, and all that are entitled to the reward, receive it at the resurrection, and at no other time.

Our Lord has given some commands which we must obey if are to receive the great reward. Love your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again, and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest (Luke 6;35). Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as to the Lord, and not unto men, for in so doing ye serve the Lord Christ; And shall receive the reward of inheritance (Col. 3:24). This is the land promised to Abraham and his seed, and any one that becomes the seed by adoption, receives the same reward, that the actual seed does.

"And behold I come quickly: and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22:12). If we by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, we will be rewarded with eternal life. This is the "great reward," and is worthy of all the labor we can possibly do in this life for the cause of the truth and righteousness.

There shall be no reward to the evil man: the candle of the wicked shall be put out (Prov. 24:20). He shall reward evil unto mine enemies: cut them off in thy truth (Psa. 54:5). The reward to the wicked is complete destruction; the righteous eternal life.

E. W. Knapp.

Resurrection and Mocking

We read in the Acts of the Apostles (17:32) that "when they (unbelievers) heard (from Paul) of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked." such men as Dr. Lyman Abbot and his sympathizers tell us that "the resurrection of the dead" here is a resurrection on the basis of spirit elimination; in other words, it is simply dying, and in that event the spirit is freed from the body. Now we will admit simply for argument's sake that Paul referred to the event of death. Then we ask: Why did some of his listeners mock? Do men mock today when we tell them that men women and children die? Did they ever mock when a man talked that? And can such a thing as death be termed the resurrection of the dead?

If Paul had referred to death, he might better have said to King Agrippa: Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should cause a man to die, thus causing separation of spirit and body?" The facts are, Paul taught a revival of the dead and not a survival of the living; and that is why they "mocked." And that brood of mockers have not altogether disappeared, for as fast as one generation dies, another comes on; and they are with us today. But, mockers or not, God is going to raise the dead, and it will be no bed-room, death chamber affair, but large and immense enough to startle all the world. And then these blatant mockers will do something more than mock.—Messiah's Advocate.

SECOND COMING OF CHRIST

James M. Gray

Text—"Waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 1:7).

There is unusual interest at this time in the second coming of Christ, and many are the enquiries as to what it means and when it may take place.

The importance of the subject from the divine point of view is seen in that it is alluded to over 300 times in the New Testament. Indeed perhaps there is no doctrine of Christianity dwelt upon to such an extent as this, unless it be the fundamental one of our redemption through the cross.

What does it mean?

The second coming of Christ means a personal, in the sense of a visitor, reappearing of our Lord on this earth. Such seems to be the teaching of his own words when, in the presence of the high priest he said: "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." This is recorded in the 26th of Matthew at the 64th verse. The angels taught the same truth to the disciples on the Mount of Olives when they said. "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye here gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." This is recorded in Acts 1:11. And finally, in the last book of the Bible, we find John exclaiming, "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, amen."

When Will it Take Place?

This doctrine has been brought into disrepute because many have assumed to fix dates for the coming of our Lord, notwithstanding that the Bible warns against it. Jesus himself said to his disciples: "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." There are some who think that a millennium of peace and prosperity will be experienced on the earth before the Lord comes.

There is also one other fact that seems to preclude the expectation of a millennium before Jesus comes; that is, what the New Testament teaches as to the moral and spiritual conditions in the world at the end of this age. We are all familiar with the teaching of Paul in his second epistle to Timothy at the third chapter, where he says that "in the last days perilous times shall come." He then goes on to define what he means by that, adding that "men shall be lovers of self, lovers of money, boastful, haughty, railers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, slanderers, without self control, fierce, no lovers of good, traitors, high-strung, high-minded, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God; having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof."

All this does not look like a millennium, and yet how much it looks like the times in which we are now living! Can it be therefore that the coming of the Lord may be nearer than most of us expect?

Results of His Coming.

In the light of the second coming there are three classes of men to be considered, which are defined in First Corinthians at the 10th chapter as the Jew, the Gentile, and the church of God. To begin with the last-named, the coming of Christ will mean the translation of the church to meet him in the air, according to First Thessalonians 4:13-18. It would seem to be after this translation that Christ comes with his saints and his holy angels to the earth, as indicated in the Scriptures previously referred to. This coming is for judgment on the Gentile nations which "know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Bringing the Truth Home.

This hope of the second coming of Christ is the great motive for holy living. Where it really takes hold of the hearts of Christian believers it restrains them from known sin as nothing else does.

It is also the great comfort in disappointment and trial, for our Lord said that when he came again in the glory of his Father he would bring his reward with him. Hence what a stimulus to holy endeavour in the face of difficulties and discouragements, for—

No word he hath spoken
Was ever yet broken.

Finally, how the thought of his coming should move men to repentance and faith in his name! O, those solemn words which Paul spake to the unbelievers and mockers in Athens: "God now commandeth all men everywhere to repent; because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead."—Sel. by Brother Finlayson.

The military hero says: Let me kill one fourth of your army, wound another fourth, and reduce the other half to hunger, penury and nakedness, and I shall be called great! But the Christian philanthrophist says: Let me bind up the wounded, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and give words of consolation to all, and I shall be regarded good. How glad are we because of the command of the blessed Master: "Put up again thy sword into its place, for all who take the sword shall perish by the sword." But hear that military chieftain as he returns from a successful battle, where the earth is drenched with blood, and the thousands are crying and dying, hear the man in his glittering steel: "I did it" —Firm Foundation.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD. AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

DISCIPLINE

The purple clusters ,full of beauty,
That in the golden sunshine wait,
Where vineyards lie in autumn's glory,
On hills that stand at sunset's gate,
Must all be crushed and rudely broken,
And prisoned where no sunbeams shine,
In midnight vaults of dungeons gloomy,
Before they gleam in song-praised wine.

The sun-kissed harvests, white and ripened,
In burning trance of summer noon,
Touched by the flitting wings of shadows,
Beneath the silver, crescent moon,
Must harshly wake to keen-thrust sickle,
And bear the threshing's bruising pain,
Before the patient sower gathers,
Purged from its chaff, the winnowed grain.

The precious ore securely hidden
In fastnesses of earth and rock,
Must have its prison burst asunder,
With force of sturdy blow and shock,
To meet the fiercely burning furnace,
And feel its wild, exultant ire,
Before it shows the watcher's image,
In the refiners glowing fire.

No life yields much of love's sweet vintage,
Till torn and bruised and sorrow bound,
Or bears the rich fruit of the spirit,
Until it shows the Pruner's Wound.
And no soul gives the Master's image
Reflected in its outlines sweet;
That has not felt God's moulding fingers,
And finish-touch in pain's white heat.

THE WEEK OF AGES

Allen D. Strickler

The ritual of baptism submitted to without understanding its significance is valueless for salvation; and therefore Paul in Romans the sixth chapter defines what it stands for; "Know ye not, that so many of as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptised into his death?" What this means is shown in verse eight viz., "But if we died with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him." Paul says in Gal. 2:20, "I have been crucified with Christ;" and in 2 Cor. 5:14, he says, "One died for all, therefore all died."

From these Scriptures we learn that to be baptized into the death of Christ, which was not a natural, but a violent death on the cross, is to understand that we share that death with him, that it is as though we ourselves had died the same violent death which he died. Why did Christ die the kind of death that he did die; and why do we have to die in the symbol of baptism, the name kind of death? Paul answers this in Rom. 6;10; "For the death that he died, he died unto sin once: but the life that he liveth, he liveth unto God."

Christ died a sacrificial victim unto sin; to die unto sin, is to die unto the demands of sin; the apostle tells us what sin demands, this he does in the twenty-third verse, viz., "The wages of sin is death."

If, in the making of man in the image and likeness of God, a concrete living personality of righteousness was necessary for an example and pattern, it was also necessary to have a living personality to demonstrate the justice of God in submitting to death as "the wages of sin." The death that the Christ victim submitted to, was not because of any wages, or penalty due to him because of sin, for had it been, his resurrection from among the dead would have been impossible. This is clearly shown by the record of his prayers recorded in Heb. 5:7: "Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard, in that he feared," His death therefore, although real, was tragical, symbolical and representative; representing the death due to sinners as their just deserts, and not of any punishment due to himself.

Paul says, "For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungod y;" "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." "Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures." It was not in place of us as a substitute, punishing the guiltless and letting the guilty go free; no, but a showing forth by real demonstration, the justice of God and a declaration of God's righteousness. "For the showing, I say of his righteousness at this present season: that he himself might be just, and the justifier of him that hath faith in Jesus" (Rom. 3:26).

The sharing in the death of Christ by the symbol of baptism, is a confession on the part of the candidate that death as the wages for sin was justly due. Punishment because of sin is the emphasis of God's righteousness as well as the satisfaction of justice. God's justice must become thoroughly ingrained in the "new creation;" hence the Bible teaches that "The fear of the Lord is clean, and enduring for ever: the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether" (Psa. 19:9); also that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge" (Prov. 1:7).

We can now sum up the object to be served by the tragedy of the cross, and its symbol baptism: The object is to produce that state of mind that will confess guilt because of sins, and cause repentance, that there may be remission of sins on the part of God. It is just as Christ stated it in Luke 24:47: "And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." To be saved from sin (this was the mission of Christ: "And thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins"), is not only to be saved from the penalty, but from the possibility of being tempted, that is, from sinning. Both penalty and the inclination to sin. are involved.

God has predicated salvation from the penalty due to sin, upon first, salvation from the desire to sin. The salvation from the desire to sin is a process, and must be worked out in the heart and conscience. Paul says: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure" (Phil. 2:12.13). We have already seen that it is by God's word being in the understanding and affections that God works with. He works by his word creating faith, hope and love; and by these he makes man in his own image, James says: "The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle;" and comprises the fruit of the spirit which is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. The wisdom of God manifested in these moral principles must become permanently fixed in the character, so that when the coming man of the sixth day of the week of ages, comes to be a finished creation or workmanship, it can properly be said that he came from heaven; even as the Revelator was shown the bride, the Lamb's wife, as the New Jerusalem descending out of heaven from God (Rev. 21:9,10).

To supplant the works of the flesh or the carnal mind, by "the fruit of the spirit" or "mind of Christ," is a work of the most difficult character; and requires "faith, hope and love" of the highest degree, and hence it is, that so few in comparison to the great mass of humanity, will be chosen as constituents of the "perfect man." "For narrow is the gate, and straightened the way, that leadeth unto life, and few are they that find it" (Matt. 7:14). "For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 5:20). Paul in 1 Cor. 6:9,10, enumerates certain evil practices, and says that those who practice such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God. The prohibitions of God are found throughout the epistolary writings of the New Testament, and they cannot be trifled with. No such a character as Esau, "who for one morsel of meat sold his birthright," will go to make up the character of the New Creation. God will not allow the breaking of his commandments, even to obtain temporal things, be they great or small. The mark of honor has been set in the character of Christ Jesus; and so Paul said, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil.3:14).

There is not a single impulse of man's nature but that can be suppressed and controlled. Will power, strengthened by faith in the word of God, will do the work. James says, "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you" (James 4:7). Peter says," Whom resist steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world" (1 Pet. 5:9).

What man has done, man can do; and so we have examples given in the scriptures to guide and encourage. James says: "Take brethren, for an example of suffering and of patience, the prophets who spake in the name of the Lord" (Ch. 5:10). Christ comforted his disciples by saying, "In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world" (John16: 33), "And for their sakes I sanctity myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth" (John 17:19). These Scriptures prove that Christ by his faith in "the truth," formed a character which he, before he "was in all points tempted like as we are," did not have. In Rev. 3:21, Christ says, "As I also overcame." The New Testament history of Christ shows that he had a character to form and perfect; and that he is presented to his disciples as an example for the development of their own character. "For hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for you, leaving you an example, that ye should follow his steps" (1 Pet. 2:21). Neither the Father nor the Son, hold out encouragements and possibilities that cannot be accomplished by those who have been called to God's kingdom and glory. Overcome the world must be an achievement by the man who has the high ambition to be made in the image of God, after his likeness. But it cannot be done without the help of the gospel which is God's power, or the power that God uses to transform the mind into the divine image (Rom. 12:2). "Jesus Christ who abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel (2 Tim. 1:10). Immortality in relation to man, is always predicated upon righteousness. It is the righteousness of God, and not the righteousness of man as he himself estimates it. Paul says in Rom. 10:3: "For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God."

One of the essentials necessary in the one created in the image of God, is the attribute of truth, "plenteous in mercy and truth." "This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth: but if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:5-7). Peter says that God's people are to show forth the praises of him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvellous light (1 Pet. 2:9). In many places in the Scriptures the necessity is shown for a knowledge of the truth; and also what results from not knowing and obeying it. Paul says that he did not shun to declare the whole counsel of God; and his commendation to the brethren was to God and the word of his grace (Acts 20:28-32). At the close of his life he said, that the time would come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears: and they shall turn away their ears from the truth and shall be turned unto fables (2 Tim. 4:3,4). In writing to the Thessalonians the apostle said that Christ would not come "except there come a falling away first." He also says that certain ones should perish: because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved: and that all might be damned who believe not the truth (2 Thess. 2:3,10,11, 12). The design of God's word is to enlighten man in reference to his eternal purpose and requirements from man; hence he said to the Jews, "Ye search the Scriutures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life." The difference between truth and error, between an enlightened and darkened understanding, must be apparent to all, Christ expressed his appreciation of it when he prayed to God by saying, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes" (Matt. 11:25).

An examination of the following passages of Scripture will show that a knowledge of the truth is essential for salvation, and that without it man must perish, because the truth is God, and where the truth does not exist there can be no image of God made: Isa. 53:11; John 17:3; 2 Pet. 1:3; Isa. 8:20; 1 Pet. 4:11; 3:15; Eph. 1:18; Eph. 4:18; Col. 1: 9,10; Col. 2:2; Isa. 5:13; Hosea 4:6; Amos 8:11,12; Luke 11:52.

We will now give a few illustrations of the destructive effects of error in reference to God's purpose and the means he uses in the making of man in his own image.

The Trinity

Up to A. D. 150 this doctrine was unknown by the Christian Church; and not until A. D. 200, was the word "Trinitas" first used.

If Christ Jesus was one third of a triune pre-existing God, then God could not have created him in his image: and therefore Jesus Christ cannot be the head of the coming man of the sixth day of the week of ages, who will be the man that God said, "Let us make in our own image and likeness."

A belief in the doctrine of a triune God. destroys God's eternal purpose which he purposed in himself, and when destroyed, makes it impossible to believe that God is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him, because the reward is, that those who believe in him shall be constituents of the man made in his image, with domonion over the earth.

The Immortality of the Soul

A belief in the natural immortality of the soul, also destroys faith in the purpose of God; because eternal life as the gift of God, is predicated upon first, the creation of the image of God in man as a moral and intellectual creation. One by one, the fundamental doctrines of Christendom can be shown to be the fables that the apostle said the people should be turned to; and that the prophet refers to as "The face of covering cast over all people, and the evil that is spread over all nations." Also as "The darkness that shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people, at the time when the Lord, as the Redeemer shall come to Zion as her light and dispel the spiritual darkness that covers all people as a pall.

TWO EXTREMES REFUTED

Peter, after speaking of the burning day, says: "Nevertheless we according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. 3:13). The promise Peter had in mind no doubt was Isaiah sixty-five seventeen, and onward, which reads: "For behold I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice for ever, in that which I create: for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her, nor the voice of crying. There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not fulfilled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed."

This text shows very clearly that mortals shall exist after Peter's burning day: for if all were immartal saints there would be no children to die, nor sinners to curse; but both are here spoken of. But let us read further: "And they shall build houses, and inhabit them: and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble: for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them.

These verses show that the people of that age will live to be very old, and that children will not be born full of trouble, as they are in this age; but yet there will be births, which would not occur in an age where immortal saints only dwell for the resurrected, and immortalized saints, neither marry, nor are given in marriage" (Luke 20: 35). The prophet continues: "And it shall come to pass, that before they call I will aaswer, and white they are yet speaking I will hear. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord." This is the first dominion restored to humanity, and it is grand to anticipate. In chapter eleven the same prophet sings. "And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots." 'And I will make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears: but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth; and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins. The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf, and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed: their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left," etc. Verse 12: "And he shall set up an ensign for the notions, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."

Here we find both the suckling and weaned child, the Gentiles, Israel and Judah; with the animal world in subjection to humanity; and the earth full of the glory of the great Jehovah. Is this not in the kingdom of age? Surely it must be unless the Adventists have been wrong in teaching the conversion of the wild animals to domestic habits in the kingdom. (See "True Theology" by Cargile, page 58.) But should it be proven that we get those great and precious promises in this age, it would be folly to pray, "Thy kingdom come:" for this would be good enough for any one. But the earth will not be filled with the knowledge of God till the kingdom has come, and the glory of God revealed; hence this is a prophecy of the kingdom. How then can any Bible reader deny that there will be mortals in the kingdom?

The angel told Mary: "Behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:31-33). Jesus is seventeen times called the "king of the Jews" in the New Testament; five times "king of Israel," and once "governor of Israel." Why all these kingly terms if he is never to reign over them? Why call him what he is never to be? We leave this question for Adventists to answer. Their idea is that he will never gather Israel and Judah, and hence they will never be a kingdom again; and if never a kingdom they will never need a king. But God says: "If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night in their season; then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites, the priests, my ministers. As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured, so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me" (Jer. 33: 20-22). Our Advent friends may say, "O, I believe David will always have his son Jesus to reign upon his throne, so you need not challenge us here; we agree with you." Then you should agree here: "Moreover the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah saying, Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? They have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them. Thus saith the Lord, If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth; then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them" (Jer. 33:23-26). And here also: "Thus saith the Lord ,which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; the Lord is his name. If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel shall cease from being a nation before me for ever. Thus saith the Lord, If heaven above can be measured, and the foundation of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the Lord" (Jer. 31:35-37).

If these texts do not teach a perpetual national existence for the seed of Israel, they teach the blotting out of the sun, moon, and stars; and that the heavens above space can be measured, and the foundation of the earth searched out. Shall we teach that one day the sun will refuse to shine for ever, the moon and stars no more give light, unbounded space measured? If not, then we shall not teach the cessation of Israel as a nation. If these texts do not teach a future perpetual national existence for Israel, then human language is inadequate to express such teaching. The prophet continues: "behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of Righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days Judah shall be saved, and Jerusalem dwell safely: and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness" (Jer.33: 14-16). The word "execute" means to enforce, and that shows that God will enforce judgment and righteousnes in the land by the Branch here promised. We are told by Jude that Jesus comes at his second advent to "execute judgment" (ver. 15). And that shows that the Branch is Jesus, and the occurrence post-adventual; and that forces us to the conclusion that the "good things" promised Israel and Judah are in the age to come. The return from captivity is one of the good things promised, therefore it is post-adventual.

Remarks

During October we have held only a few meetings in a place, but they have been well attended, and there has been a good healthy interest everywhere.

On the 8th the brethren of Blair, Arlington, Omaha, Benson and Avery met with the church at Kennard for the day, took their lunch and enjoyed the day in a splendid manner. One of the big features was the singing of a large class of little girls and boys. Their singing would be a feature in any place. After Sunday School Brother John Hammond, of Avery gave us a good talk on the sower that was appreciated by all. Brother Hammond is developing toward the ministry very fast. A feast was then spread fit for a king. After the viands had been disposed of we again assembled and the writer gave a talk on the subject of "Thy Kingdom Come."

The church was well filled all day, and nearly all were of the faith. All went away feeling the influence of the hearty welcome given them by the brethren of Kennard. The attendance was so large it reminded one of conference time.

At the afternoon meeting two young men took a stand for the truth: Robert Johns, son of Brother Art. Johns; and Ben Mead, son of Sister Nell Mead. We trust these boys will continue faithful to the cause they have espoused. Some others are about ready; we trust they will not put it off too long. The night is fast approaching when no man can work.

After the above meetings closed a couple of car loads accompanied Brother and Sister Sorresen across to Washington where it was more convenient to take the train for Omaha. While waiting for the train they met at Brother Arthur White's, where Brother Sorresen gave them a talk, and according to all reports, it was worthy a veteran. Brother Sorresen should have more such opportunities, for he has a splendid talent for teaching the truth. Let every one take courage and move along in the work, that God may be glorified. It is not the will of God that any part of the work should lag, so let us press on with vigor.

MARRIAGES

William A. Porter and Minnie B. Rouch, both of Bourbon, Indiana, were married at noon, October 26, 1916, at the residence of the writer in Argos. The happy couple took the Nickle Plate train for Chicago for a brief trip and will be at home to their friends north from Bourbon in the near future. Sister Porter is a member of the Morning Star Church of God, recently admitted to the Indiana Conference, where she has been a faithful worker. The groom owns a farm, but at present is engaged as a salesman.

May the heavenly Father guide and protect these worthy fellow sojourners along the journey of life. May peace and plenty and the priceless boon of many friends be theirs.

D. E. VanVactor.

William G. Heiser and Laura K. Overmyer were married in the presence of the immediate relatives, at the home of the bride's mother, Saturday evening at 8:00 O'clock, November 4, 1916.

The groom, son of J. D. Heiser, is a clean, industrious young man, full of hope and ambition, a farmer by profession and possessed of those sterling qualities of manhood that insure success in life. The bride is an intelligent, accomplished young lady full of hopeful consideration of the duties she is assuming as a helpmeet in the newly established household. She is a member of the Burr Oak Church of God, where her mother is a faithful worker and where her father, the late Albert Overmyer, was a trustee.

Mr. and Mrs. Heiser will be at home to their friends on the farm four miles south west from Burr Oak.

EDITORIAL

We have had a call from Dr. Mason, who was formerly a member of our church. He spoke twice while here to the edification of the brethren and sisters. He was on his way to Springfield, O., where he plans to preach the truth this fall and winter.

Copy is none too plentiful. Some of our good writers have been silent for quite a while, but word comes this week from Brother S. H. Thomas and Brother Almus Adams that they have been so busy with other tasks they have not found time to write. Both these brethren now promise to resume labor with their pens soon. Brother Gelletley and others too numerous to mention, we miss your help and assistance.

Several have enquired if the series of "Bible Lessons on First Principles" are to be continued consecutively. No; lessons one and two are now published, but none of the others are even written. These lessons require both time to write and money to publish, and the series will appear irregularly and tardily.

The Restitution of October 31st has a unmber of glaring typographical errors, and several lines are inverted. Brother Strickler's article suffered the worst. Having returned from Kentuegy, we shall now be on the job again.

A letter in this unmber from Sister Reinarz, of Texas, recalls once more the unpleasant subject of re-immersion. The baptism of people who have an imperfect knowledge of the truth should not be practiced. This evil is one among many which moved us to do something in getting the gospel teachings before the people in the definite form of "Bible Lessons on First Principles." Give them as wide a circulation among your friends and acquaintances as possible, brethren and sisters.

EDITOR'S TOUR IN KENTUCKY

Monday, October 23rd, after having enjoyed breakfast with Wife and "Baby Huggins," we took passage on a big four train for Cincinnatti, Ohio. Here we had to "kill time" for two hours, so we had lunch and visited some of the important points in the city. When our time expired we took passage on the Queen Crescent Route for the south, and arrived at Danville, Ky. in due time, where Brother Geo. Carpenter met us with an automobile. His home is in Perryville, a hamlet some ten miles away, but like Jehu, Brother Carpenter drives furiously, so it was just a matter of a few minutes till we were at his home, enjoying supper with Brother and Sister Carpenter, and their two interesting sons. After dinner or "supper," as it is called in the south, we made an attempt to convince Brother and Sister Carpenter that we had one hour more light in a day in Cleveland than they had in Perryville. We found they were rather skeptical, and soon gave up the endeavour, and retired for a good night's rest.

Next morning Brother Carpenter carried us about five miles farther into the country. The church building is near the home of Brother Frank Skeels. Brother Skeels' three sisters live with him. Here is a "household" in the faith, and here we spent most of our time during the series of meetings. We spent odd times with Brother and Sister J. F. Carpenter, and Mr. and Sister Bradley, and we also enjoyed occasional calls with some of the neighbors who are interested in the truth, more or less.

The weather throughout the meeting was superfine-a wonderfully long time for Kentucky weather to behave itself. From October 24th until November 6th, we gave sixteen sermons, preached one funeral discourse, conducted one baptismal service, and presided once at the Lord's supper. The meetings from first to last were well attended; and towards the close of the meetings the house was not big enough to hold the attendants. The church itself is small, numbering only eleven brethren and twelve sisters. But few in number though they are, the believers in this place are "sound in the faith" and are not easily "moved away from the hope of the gospel." They are not afraid to "contend earnestly for the faith," and they are faithful in the discharge of this duty, let consequences be what they may. We do not know of a more faithful and devoted little flock anywhere. They have been instrumental in causing many of their friends and neighbors to hear the message of life; and now we earnestly pray that God will in due time give them an increase of their fold.

Mrs. J. R. Pettit.

Dear Brother Huggins:
Enclosed is a post office money order for one dollar and twenty-five cents for the Linograph Fund. I would love to have sent more, but cannot. I do not want to be left out of this work for our Lord, if it is only a mite.
An old sister waiting for our Lord and Savior,
Mrs. S. V. Lawrence.

Dear Restitution:
Believing that The Restitution paper can be greatly assisted in circulating the gospel by the use of a linotype machine, I send you a draft for ten dollars to be applied on the purchase of the same.

From Mrs. A. J. Reinarz

Editor Restitution:
I have felt impressed to write for some time, but I have hesitated, thinking perhaps your time was too much taken up; but I can't refrain any longer, for I so much desire fraternity with the household of faith.

The Restitution was put in my hands by a friend nearly a year ago. I at once subscribed for it, and have been feasting on the good things contained therein ever since. I have had some understanding of the truth for a number of years, but this little paper has helped me wonderfully to grow in grace and knowledge of the Lord. I never knew before I saw this paper that there was such a body of people in the world. I am and have been for a number of years in the race course for eternal life. I was immersed some two years past, but as I have a better understanding of the gospel now, I am willing to go into baptism again, with my husband, who has never been immersed. We are alone in this part of the country. Have never heard a lecture, nor been associated with any of like precious faith.

I would like to correspond with someone, as there are some things not clear to me, and we would be greatly rejoiced to have an evangelist in this part of the country. Would like to say further that we wish to pay tithes. Will you please tell us how much is required of us, and to whom shall we pay it? Do we owe the Lord one tenth of our possessions, or one tenth of our income, and how would it be when you are in debt? I would greatly appreciate any help you can give. I want to be one of the Lord's family, and sit at the Lord's table. May the Lord graciously reward you.
Yours in search of the truth.

This Sister's address is Box 101, Kerrville, Texas. Will brethren in Texas please see that her wants are supplied.—Editor.

From Sister W. H. Eidmiller

Dear Brother Huggins:
You will find enclosed a post office money order for ten dollars for the Linograph Fund. Dear ones, I feel every one of us ought to want our names inlisted in helping purchase such a valuable machine. It helps spread the good news, of our soon coming Lord. Surely The Restitution is doing its part in spreading the gospel: It brings good news to us each week, which helps us to read and learn more perfectly the will of our blessed Lord. For a small sum, we can also make others happy by sending The Restitution to them for a present; yes, a very valuable present; and while doing this we are laying treasure up in heaven, where moth and rust do not corrupt, and where thieves do not break in and steal.

Dear ones, do not get discouraged; if you do not see good results immediately, and it always has taken time and persuasion to teach people that our blessed Lord is coming to this earth to set up a kingdom, and to destroy all other kingdoms, and to wipe all wickedness off the face of the earth, and rule this earth in righteousness. Then the desert shall blossom as the rose, and the whole earth will be filled with the glory of the Lord. It is useless to try to describe it, for the Lord has said: "Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the hearts of men, the things that are laid up for the faithful."

So we can see the future is all bright—no dark clouds overshadow that bright day: all the trouble is present. Will we withstand the trials and light afflictions of this short life, which Paul called not worthy to be compared with the glory that is to be revealed to the faithful.

Now dear ones, let us just keep right at this Linograph Fund till we get it all made up. All we have is the Lord's. We only have the use of it while in this life; why then should we be slow in helping to keep this good work going? This is a work that we all can help in. I have often heard it said, "Oh I wish I could get up and talk in church." Well dear ones, here is a place we can talk: write for our paper, and you can talk and not be embarrassed either, and forget what you wanted to say, as in church. It is a fine place for us to say a few words to each other, and to encourage those noble, never failing writers with words of thanks for their good work. They need words of encouragement and deserve it. You see there is work for all of us. We all have some talent, and we must put our talent to good use. For if there is no work there will be no reward. It seems if ever there was a time when every workman was needed and every talent, large or small, was indispensible, it is in these last days. We know not the hour of the hour of the return of our Lord. But we are put on our guard by the signs of the times. Christ's return is not far off. May we all so live and serve our blessed Lord that we may be found worthy of an entrance into his kingdom, is our prayer.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposte our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

Memory Text

"He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son" (Rev. 21:7).

1. "The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance and of my cup: thou maintainest my lot" (Psa. 16:5).

2. "For evildoers shall be cut off; but those who wait upon the Lord they shall inherit the earth.

3. For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off.

4. "But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

5. "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever" (Psa. 37:9,11,22,29).

6. Wait on the Lord and keep his way, and he shalt exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off thou shalt see it" (Psa. 37:34).

7. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5).

8. "And whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as to the Lord and not unto men, knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance; for ye serve the Lord Christ" (Col. 3:23,24).

9. "That we should be to the praise of his glory who first trusted in Christ.

10. "In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth the gospel of your salvation; in whom also after that ye believed ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise.

11. "Which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession unto the praise of his glory" (Eph. 1:12-14).

12. "Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25:34)

13. "And every one that hath forsaken houses or brethren or sisters or father or mother or wife or children or lands for my name's sake shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life" (Matt. 19:29).

14. "And for this cause he is the Mediator of the New Testament that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first Testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance" (Heb. 9:15).

15. "To an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time" (1 Pet. 1:4).

Practical Truths

The lesson today is one of interest and importance. What and where is the reward or rewards promised to those who love and obey God? As the future home of the redeemed is upon the earth and as they and they alone are the heirs of promise, they will inherit or possess the whole world. But earth without anything else as an inheritance would not be desirable. But God has promised to be with us. His spirit is to remain with us, and he has even now given us the earnest of his spirit. The kingdom, too with all its positions and blessings, is also offered: and as if this were not enough he showers upon us the promised blessings of immortality and incorruptibility.

Notes on the Lesson

Inherit all things.—In the fullness of his love Jesus has offered us an inheritance in everything he himself has received.

1. Inheritance.—A permanent or valuable possession or blessing. A possession received by gift or without purchase (Webster).

2. Shall be cut off.—A term denoting destruction, separation, punishment by death.

3. Earth.—The habitable world on which we live.

4. Abundance of Peace.—One of the characteristic features of the kingdom and reign of Jesus upon earth is to be peace and good will to men. War, domestic strife and civil discord will be at an end. David says there will be abundance of peace as long as the moon shall endure.

6. Keep His Way.—All God's commandments are for our good. Our highest interests are considered and the commands are only given as advice for our good. Keeping the ways of the Lord, will exalt us to the inheritance and we are assured that we shall see it fulfilled when the wicked are cut off.

7. Meek.—Our Savour points out the character here, who will be entitled to the inheritance. Let us remember the promise is to the meek.

8. Do it heartily.—Any service is vain if the heart is not in it. The great command reads, "with all thy heart."

9. Trusted in Christ.—If there is one thing we lack more than another it is that trust in God, and our Savior Jesus, which characterized the Apostles. And may we not fear this is often the reason we do not have an answer to many of our prayers?

10. Sealed.—The figure is a beautiful one. The bargain was completed and an earnest or part of the inheritance given as an evidence that God was in earnest, and intended to fulfill his part of the contract or promise. Notice the steps: (1) Ye heard the word of truth or the gospel; (2) Trusted or believed in Christ; (3) They receive the earnest—the Holy Spirit; (4) And now they expect the "redemption of the purchased possession."

11. Promise of Eternal Inheritance.—Yes, the promise is that the inheritance shall be eternal. The kingdom is eternal. Flesh and blood, nations or people, in their mortal natures, would die out of the inheritance; hence Paul says,"Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." So God has provided that the saints shall have a nature as endless in duration as the kingdom; so the life is eternal and is given at his coming and kingdom (1 Cor. 15:52-55; 2 Tim. 4:1).

15. Reserved in Heaven.—Although the promise of eternal life or our incorruptible inheritance is reserved in heaven, we are not to go there after it, but it is to be brought to us at the revelation of Jesus Christ, or be revealed at the last time. See also Col.3:3,4.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. The Lord as an Inheritance.—What does David claim as the chief portion of his inheritance? Would an inheritance be valuable to us without God? Where is the promise that God will be with us and be our God (Rev. 21:3)?

2. The Earth as our Inheritance.—In the 2nd paragraph what class of men shall be cut off? Who shall inherit the earth? Do you think that this refers to the literal earth upon which we now live? Read paragraphs from 2 to 7 and tell us whether these promises refer to the present or future? What is meant by "to inherit?" Who is the heir of all things (Heb. 1:2)? What are the conditions of being joint heirs with Christ (Rom. 8:17)? What is the difference between coming into possession of property by heirship and by purchase? Can we buy an everlasting inheritance in the earth with money? How then can we obtain it?

3. The Spirit as an Inheritance. What do you understand by the word "earnest" as used in our lesson? (A token of what is to come.—Webster.) Did the disciples have the spirit? Will it ever be possessed by God's people? Where do you place Joel 2:28? Was it fulfilled on Pentacost? If this was an "earnest of our inheritance," will not a time come when the whole will be fulfilled? Can we have the spirit now?

4. The kingdom as an inheritance.—Is the kingdom of God a matter of promise (Luke12:31,32; Dan. 7:27)? When is the kingdom given as an inheritance to God's people (Matt. 25:31-33)?

5. Everlasting Life as an Inheritance.—What is everlasting life? Through whom may we obtain everlasting life? Who is the fountain of all life (Psa.36:9)? To whom has God given to have life in his person (John5:26)? To whom will Jesus impart eternal life (John 17:2,3)? Where does it say in the Bible that we are to seek for immortality? Is eternal life a part of our inheritance? Will Jesus bring it to us when he comes? How do you understand paragraph 15?

6. Nature and Duration of our Inheritance.—Will our inheritance pass away? Will the earth be destroyed? Will heaven be destroyed? What does John say about "a new heaven and new earth" (Rev. 21:1)? How long will the righteous inherit the land? (Paragraph 5.)

7. Conditions of Inheritance. Name all the conditions stated in the lesson of heirship.

Remember: 1, We must have faith in God. 2, We must believe in the gospel of Christ. 3, We must repent of sin. 4. We must be obedient. 5, We must walk worthy. 6, We must love God and man, and be children of God if we would have an inheritance among the sanctified

OBITUARIES

Delbert S. King was born at Palmer, Neb. June 19, 1888 and died October 13, 1916, aged 28 years, 3 months, and 14 days. Delbert was a brother of Sister Alta King, so well known by her writings and other active work in connection with the gospel. Delbert was killed in a runaway. He leaves a mother, Sister Mary King, one brother and three sisters, to mourn his untimely taking away, as well as a host of friends. The church capacity was over taxed at his funeral as some had to remain on the outside while we discoursed from Isa. 49:4. We trust the time is not far away when these sad scenes will be no more. May the Lord comfort those left to mourn.

Almus Adams.

Angie Denney was born in Marion Co. Ind., June 6, 1859, and died October 16, 1916, aged 57 years, 4 months and 10 days. The deceased was married Nov. 4, 1882, to William Stevens. To this union was born five children: Robert, of Omaha. Glen and Dewy, at home, and Laurie, of Sheridan, N. Y. Laurie is a trained nurse and took care of her mother through her illness, which lasted through the most of the summer. She certainly did a daughter's part. She came to Frontier Co., Neb. in 1886 and lived on the same farm till her death.

Sister Stevens was baptized by Brother Hatch in 1880, and lived faithful to the truth all her life. She was well acquainted with Auntie Wince, and kept up a correspondence with her for many years. Sister Stevens was remarkably well posted in the Scripures, and delighted above all else to talk of her hope. I have heard her make some of the most timely and eloquent talks at Conference gatherings and social gatherings it ever was my lot to hear. I think the Editor will remember one of these. She truly sleeps in Jesus, and her sleep will not be long. Her example will live on, and we trust will be instrumental in yet bringing some to the foot of the cross. The writer spoke words of comfort to a church full of sorrowing friends and relatives from Isa. 49:13. Sleep in peace, dear sister, till the trumpet sounds, when we hope to meet thee again.

FOOLISHNESS OF PREACHING

Preaching the cross is foolishness to them that perish, but unto us which are saved, it is the power of God (1 Cor. 1:18). Let us look at the class that perish, and see how foolish it is to preach anything to them. They cannot expect eternal life through Christ; for they claim to have it already. Where do they get eternal life? If they have it, they get it through Adam, for it is through Adam they get life; and if they never die, this lift is eternal. No use of preaching Christ crucified; the gospel; the word; the kingdom of God; faith; baptism; resurrection, etc., for their life does not depend upon a belief of these things. So preaching to that class is vain, and of no use to them. Christ never rose from the dead, for he never died; therefore no need of a resurrection for any one; for the object of the resurrection is to give life to the dead, and if man lives forever, there can be no resurrection for him; So our preaching is foolishness, and our faith also (1 Cor. 15:12-16).

But we believe we are saved through Christ, and not Adam. We must believe the gospel, have faith in it to such an extent that we obey the command of the Life-Giver, and are baptized unto the death of the Savior (Rom. 6:3). We also believe that Christ actually died, and if God had not made a plan of giving another life, by a resurrection, he would still be dead. But thanks be to God for the law of resurrection: without it we are all lost.

Now to the class that believe and obey the gospel: Preaching is not foolishness, but the power of God. For it shows the power God has: he can take life, and he can give life. And we hope and pray that we may ever look upon the gospel as the power of God. Eternal life is the gift of God through Christ, and the life we now live comes through Adam. And we are very thankful that it is not eternal, for it is a flesh and blood life, and cannot inherit the kingdom of God. May we all drop the foolish preaching, and preach the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.—E. W. Knapp.

Tidbits of Pleasant and Useful Information Gathered from Everywhere

KEEP THY HEART

By Auntie Wince

"Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life" (Prov. 4:23).

Guard carefully thy heart, dear child,
From every thought of sin;
For wicked actions always come,
From wicked thoughts within.

Guard carefully thy heart, dear child,
In awe of holy word;
Let it be lamp and light to thee;
Its precepts ever heard.

If heart is kept, the life is kept,
And we may know the end,
For all life's issues, good or ill,
On this one can depend.

The idle convert is in graver danger than the unconverted idler.—Horne.

Do not grasp at the stars, but do life's common work as it comes, certain that daily duties and daily bread are the sweetest things of life.

No man is born into the world whose work is not born with him; there is always work, and tools to work withal, for those who will, and blessed are the horny hands of toil. —Lowell.

If I could get to the highest place in Athens I would lift up my voice and say: "What mean ye, fellow citizens, that ye turn every stone to scrape wealth together, and take so little care of your children, to whom ye must one day relinquish all?"—Socrates.

The most perfect and best characters, in my estimation, is he who is ready to pardon the moral errors of mankind as if he were every day guilty of some himself, and at the same time, as cautious of committing a fault as if he never forgave one. —Pliny.

It seems to be a hard thing for some Christians to confess their wrongs. In case of difficulty with a brother, or with the church, some say: "I am no worse than some others in the church; why not call upon them to confess their sins?" But what has that to do with our case? If all others in the church were to confess their errors, how can that help my case? God's law is: "Confess your faults one to another, and pray ye one for another that ye may be healed." And certainly this is the road to forgiveness. Why not out with it, and obtain relief and pardon? It ought to be a pleasure to us to confess and forsake our sins.

A Practical Christian

To be a practical Christian, one must be active —willing to work.

A wealthy Vermont man who became very active in church work was asked what led him to devote himself so industriously to the work of the church. His reply was very significant. He said, "There are so many ready to eat the grapes that I thought I ought to help to hoe the vines." There is food for reflection in that answer, and he who takes it to heart will hunt his hoe and use it, The church is a vineyard, and the field is ours to cultivate and render fruitful. If the vintage is to be adequate, each member must be interested and active, sowing, cultivating and harvesting. There is work for each and all. Too many are ready to eat the grapes, but too few are using their hoes.—"Peniel Herald."

"HE PRESERVETH THE WAY OF HIS SAINTS"

He keepeth the path of judgment, and preserveth the way of his saints (Prov. 2:8).

He will keep the feet of his saints, and the wicked shall be silent in darkness, for by strength shall no man prevail (1 Sam. 2:9).

For it is written, He shall give his angels charge over thee to keep thee (Luke 4:10).

Praising God and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added daily to the church such as should be saved (Acts 2:47).

Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also called: and whom he called, them he also justified, and whom he justified, them he also glorified.

For the Lord loveth judgment, and forsaketh not his saints, they are preserved for ever; but the seed of the wicked shall be cut off (Psa.37:28).

To preserve anything is to make in such a manner that the substance will keep and not spoil. So it is that God preserves his saints, or keeps them, causing them to stand firm unto the end, and not to be hewn down or tossed to and fro by every wind of doctrine that blows. Thus kept the wickedness of this world cannot injure or spoil us.

Sister Edna Pearson.

What are you going to do with the evil habits? Fight them one by one, this is one way. What did you do last winter when the panes of the window were covered with frost and you could not see out of them? Did you scratch them off with a knife? that would take too long. Heat up the room and the frost goes off the pane. Warm up the soul with the love of Christ and the bad habits will run off. That is what Chalmers calls the "expulsive power of a new affection."

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 68 CLEVELAND, O, NOVEMBER 21, 1916 NUMBER 48

THE SAINTS SHALL JUDGE THE WORLD

The word "world" spoken of in this article is translated from the Greek word kosmos, and means the future ruling by the kingdom that is promised to "the people of the saints of the most High" (Dan. 7:27). This kingdom is to be "under the whole heaven," and not in it or elsewhere. This kingdom will break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms. The Apostle John in Rev 11:15 saw when all the kingdoms or governments of this world will come under the rulership of the kingdom. It is the mustard seed kingdom that will be planted in the new earth and fill the whole world. It is the leaven that the woman hid in the meal that leavened the whole. It is the stone that the old king saw that was cut out without hands (it will not be of human origin), which smote the image and ground it to powder The ruler in this divine government will be Jesus the Anointed, and those saints which have been raised from among the dead and the living ones who have been changed.

Many in these days reject this divine plan of the ages. That this is true is evidenced from the statement of the Apostle Peter in Acts 3:20,21, where he states that Christ will remain in heaven until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began. Paul in the letter to the Ephesian church speaks of "the ages to come" in which God will show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus (Eph. 2:7). There are many other scriptures presenting the same blessed truths.

The question. How will their ruling be brought about? has been presented to our mind. The object of the writer is to give a few of the details in the work that will bring universal peace to the inhabitants of the earth, or to fill the earth with the glory of the Lord. One of the prophets has said that when God's judgments are in the earth, men will learn righteousness. This teaches that Jehovah is ruling and that his law is being sent out from Mount Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people. The effect of the law and the word of the Lord will cause them to beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Men will cease to manufacture munitions of war, as it will be contrary to law. Men who attempt it will meet with swift judgment. The courts of justice in that age will be presided over by the saints. Perjured plaintiffs and witnesses who come into court will be sentenced by the judge, and meet with as swift justice as did Ananias and Sapphira. There will be no systems of courts in that age. There will be no appeals, as the judge will not judge after the seeing of his eyes, nor the hearing of his ears, but being of the resurrected or changed saints will be able to render a righteous judgment. The judge in Adam and Eve's case needed no witness to prove their guilt; neither did he who judged Cain need anyone to accuse. He knew what had taken place, and then and there passed a righteous judgment. Cain felt the weight of it as he cried out, "Mine iniquity is greater than may be forgiven me" (see marginal rendering). When wicked men begin to see that justice is being rendered they will either learn righteousness or meet with swift justice. When the murderer learns that he can not conceal his guilt but will be sure to be detected and brought into court and punished, crime will cease. However, men must learn that Jehovah's judgments are in the earth. This will necessitate the distribution of the saints through the earth. The rulers of the different countries must be visited by one of the representatives of the new government, and informed that Jesus is ruling in Jerusalem and demands that they yield to his laws. The saints in the coming age will be Jehovah's ministers, as were the apostles his witnesses to the uttermost parts of the earth. There is no force compelling men and women to accept the gospel and obey it. The promise is eternal life and a place in the kingdom of God.

Let us imagine a few things, that will take place under the future ruling. Our people will choose their rulers until the distribution of the saints. Our congress will be in session. Our president will occupy the White House with the thought that he will serve his full term as chief executive officer of the nation. A saint appears and states that he and his cabinet must yield to the law from Mount Zion, and the word of the Lord in Jerusalem. Congress is visited by a saint and informed that their laws are unjust, and that they must adjourn and submit to the one supreme ruler, who is Jesus the Christ. No doubt their astonishment will be equal to the king of Babylon when he saw the hand writing on the wall of his banquet hall. "Thou hast been weighed in the balance and found wanting." In that night was the king slain. Swift jutice follows the decrees of Jehovah.

Opposition to the saint's demands will follow. The exercise of power will teach some that he is not human. The president may order his body guard to arrest the stranger as a dangerous person. The chairman of the House and the President of the Senate may order his arrest and expulsion. Swift justice will follow this opposition. The Supreme Court is informed that they will no longer be permitted to interpret the laws as they are of divine origin. It will require more than one judgment to convince the rulers that a new order of things is on hand. The militia may be called out and military rule declared. Every opposition will bring a just punishment. The one man power will be felt and an order be published that the new government will possess and direct all functions of the government. This will bring the opposition from corrupt corporations Wall Street will no longer continue their unjust practices of enriching the rich and oppressing the poor.

The promise is, "He shall judge the people with righteousness, and the poor with judgment. He shall judge the poor of the people; he shall save the children of the needy, and break in pieces the oppressor" (Psa.72:2-4). The new government will be administered by the saints and for the people. Governments that have existed from the beginning have been of human origin, and have failed to bring righteousness to the people. Under the new order the earth will be beautified and made a fit place for the saints inheritance, and the abode of those who learn righteousness through the judgments of Jehovah. The incorrigible will be punished with death. Under the Mosaic law the punishment followed conviction. He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses (Heb. 10:28). So it will be in the new age. When the wealthy learn that their gold is of no value, as it will not purchase them one extra privilege more than the poorest subject in the new order of things, he will learn righteousness or reap the wages of sin, which will be death.

It will require time to accomplish all that Jehovah has purposed through Jesus the Christ. His purposes must be understood by his saints in order that they may execute them. Armies and navies will be of no value then. If every army in the earth were brought together, they could not defeat one saint. One will be able to put ten thousand to flight. Each state under our form of government must be brought into submission to the new constitution of things. The new order will require a cleansing of our social arrangements. There will be no political parties therefore we will not be vexed by political campaigns. The tenure of office will be eternal. He shall reign for ever and ever, every knee shall bow and every heart shall confess that he is Lord over all. In that day there will be no religious differences to separate households. During the age to come men will seek after the Lord. The spirit of the times will be "Come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob. He will teach us of his ways and we will walk in his paths." May the Lord come soon and relieve the distress of the inhabitants of this sin cursed earth, is our prayer.

TWO EXTREMES REFUTED

Amos tells us: "The days will come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and the hills shall melt" (9:13). This shows that one crop will be reaped while the other is planted, or while the plowing and seed sowing is going on. "The harvest is the end of the age: and the reapers are the angels" (Matt. 13:39). Then while the angels are reaping out the offenders from the kingdom, the plowing and seed sowing is being done for the next age. But the prophet continues: "And I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God" (verse 14-15).

Ezekiel most beautifully corroborates this, in his prophecy concerning the sheep of the house of Israel: "And I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, my servant David; he shall feed them, and he shall be a shepherd to them. And I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a prince among them; I the Lord have spoken it" (Ezek. 34:23-24). Here we have it clearly stated that after Israel's return to be no more pulled up, David is to be a prince and shepherd among them. When shall this be? "Behold a king shall rule in righteousness, and princes rule in judgment" (Isa. 32:1). When will a king reign in righteousness if not in the kingdom of God? "Do ye not know that the saints shall rule the world" (1 Cor. 6:2)? "If we suffer we shall also reign with him" (2 Tim. 2:12). "He that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne" (Rev. 3:21). "And we (the saints) shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5:10).

All these great and precious promises show that when Jesus reigns the saints reign with him, and as David is one of them, he will be a prince with them in the kingdom of God; and as he is to be a prince over restored Israel, the proof is conclusive that they will also be in that kingdom. But let us continue to read Ezekiel: "And I will make with them a covenant of peace (the covenant mentioned in Jer. 31:31), and will cause the evil beasts to cease out of the land: and they shall dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods. And I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season; there shall be showers of blessing. And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land, and shall know that I am the Lord (they shall all know him from the least to the greatest, Jer. 31:32), when I have broken the bands of their yoke, and delivered them out of the hands of those that served themselves with them. And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen (which has been the case throughout this age), neither shall the beast of the land devour them (because, as we have seen, they become docile and harmless), and they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid. And I will raise up to them a plant of renown, and they shall be no more consumed (as they have in this age) with hunger in the land, neither bear shame of the heathen any more" (vers. 25-29).

The plant of renown here mentioned is the Christ at his second advent, and afterward that the prophecy is to be fulfilled, for David will not be resurrected till then, and he is to be there, as the prophet clearly declares. Who then can doubt that mortal Israel restored will be in the kingdom?

Isaiah also says of this time: "For behold the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many. They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens behind one tree in the midst, eating swine's flesh, and the abomination of the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the Lord. For I know their works and their thoughts: it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come and see my glory. And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow to Tubal and Javin, to the isles afar off, that have not learned my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles. And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord out of all nations upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the Lord. And I also will take of them for priests and for Levites, saith the Lord. For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your (Israel's) seed and your (Israel's) name remain. And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh" (Isa. 66:15-24).

Here after the Lord comes to judgment and slays many, is left Israelites to be carried home to Jerusalem, and Gentiles to hear of the fame of the Lord. Shall we say it is not true? Shall we contend that every one but the saints will be destroyed at the advent? It would be folly to set aside these plain scriptures. The Lord hath spokeen, and so shall it be. One thing we must be careful to note, namely, that the people left are never said to be resurrected people, but those left of the nations gathered at Jerusalem, and others who are hale and hearty at home. Then the ignorant dead are left out of the probation of the future age, and the resurrected wicked have, as we have seen, no hope, for they are raised to condemnation, shame and everlasting contempt, and the second death. The Jew who lives at that time will be the Jew of the restoration, if he does not rebel, and the Gentile who will be willing to accept the kingship of Jesus, will be among the left of the nations.

"OF WHOM THE WORLD WAS NOT WORTHY"

Paul in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, brings to our view, and holds up for our example many, who by the faith that was in them, fought valiently the battles of God and gained the victory over the opposer. He speaks of Abraham, the friend of God and the father of the faithful; then of Isaac, Jacob and a host of others, of these he says the world was not worthy.

I think sometimes we are prone to stop here, or at least with the early and middle ages of the Christian era as furnishing us these sons of God of whom the world is not worthy.

Before going farther on this subject, listen to the words of Jesus: "If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you" (John 15:20). "The world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." Some may say that in these scriptures our Lord is speaking only to and of his chosen apostles. Then listen to these words of inspiration: "All who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution" (2 Tim. 3:12).

The saints of God are appointed to affliction (1 Thess. 3:3). It is through much tribulation that they gain an entrance into the kingdom of God (Acts 14:22). Listen again to the direct words of Jesus: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me" (Matt.15-24). Here we have the words, "any man." They take in all who will follow Jesus in any time in the Christian era. And if any follow Jesus he must tread the same path Jesus trod. He must follow in his footsteps. What did the Lord daily meet in that pathway? The hate of the world and persecution. Again, if we follow the Savior we will take up the same cross he bore; and this will surely bring to every one who so walks that which came to the Master—our names will be cast out as his was.

"Of whom the world was not worthy." Was this peculiar only of the patriarchs and apostles of old? No; every true member of Christ's body is one of whom the world is not worthy. Every true child of God has given heed to the command, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world" 1 John 2:15). He has come out from the world; he is not of the world, and the world hates him as it did Jesus because he is not of it.

Did all persecution cease with the death of the apostles and the martyrs of that monstrous system of iniquity that practiced and prospered, and was drunken with the blood of the saints for nearly 1260 years? No, because the Spirit says "All who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." This is a plain statement. If we believe it we are forced to the conclusion that if those who profess to be the children of God are not persecuted it is because they are not living godly in Christ Jesus. We do not need to go far to prove the truth of this conclusion.

Look at the nominal churchs: does the world hate them? No, because the great majority of the sects calling themselves the church of God are so closely hand and glove with the world that very little difference is discernable between them. I remember a little piece of Fanny Fenn I read years ago. She said (it was Easter time) we saw piety as she alighted at the church door. Then she went on to describe her Easter costume, and it was as near like that of the woman of the world as two peas are alike. The spirit says to the daughters of God: Adorn yourselves in modest apparel not in costly array." The Spirit says to the pastor of God's flock, "Preach the word." What are pastors of the sects preaching? Fables and doctrines of men. The Spirit says, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead." How is it with the present day churches? Why there is not pleasure enough outside, so many times extra rooms are added to the church building where the pleasures of the world may be indulged in. The world sees very little difference between them and itself -and the world loves them. Are we too harsh in our judgment? No, because Jesus says the world will love its own. "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord."

If this is true of organizations is it not equally true of individuals? Here is one professing to be a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus dressing in the immodest dress of the worldling, joining in all the pleasures of the world- plenty of money for all these things, but never a dollar for the cause of God! Is it any wonder the world pats such a one on the back in good fellowship? Such a one is not persecuted because he is of the world, no matter if his name is on a church book.

Thank God his called out ones are not of the world, they are separate from sinners. And of such the world is not worthy. Just as surely as one walks worthy of his high calling, is instant in season and out of season to speak the truth to his neighbor ever so meekly, if he reprove evil ever so gently, be very sure he will be cast out by the ungodly. Peculiar, singular, God's people are a peculiar people. if so, they cannot be of the mass. I know a man who dedicated his life to God, when young he began preaching the word of truth. He had very little to live upon, but he continued to work for the Lord until he was an old man. He did not speculate in the things of this world and become rich. He laid up his treasure above. He did not seek the friendship of the world, but was a friend of God. This man could not be loved of the world for he was contrary to it. The world is not worthy of such a man. All who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall (not may), but shall suffer persecution.

There is something peculiar about persecution of the godly in Christ Jesus. It always arises inside the church. The first martyr for the truth was killed by his own brother. Jesus was murdered by the professing church. The same church persecuted Stephen to death. It persecuted Paul, Peter, John and a host of others of whom the world was not worthy. Who persecuted unto death thousands of God's children? Was it not the church claiming to be infallible? How is it today? God's word changes not. Today all who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.

If a man of God sets his face steadily towards truth; if he will not compromise with sin; when called to come down and "talk" it over if he says, "I am doing a great work, why should I stop it and come down to you?"--be very sure he will be traduced, slandered, persecuted by those who say they are of the synagogue of the Jews, but are not. Beware when all men shall speak well of you, for so did they of the false prophets. Rejoice when they shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for his name's sake. If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him. The servant is not above his master. Then let every child of God take up his cross and follow Jesus. Let him not be weary in well doing. Let him make no compromise with evil. Let him not give place to error for one hour. If an angel from heaven teach any other doctrine than the plain word of God teaches, receive him not into your house, neither bid him godspeed. Be not partakers of other men's sins. Reprove, exhort, rebuke with all authority from the word of God. But be sure you will suffer persecution.

There is one that will shortly appear for your joy. Then shall every man's work be made manifest to angels and men. Then will it be shown that of such men the world is not worthy. That the coming of this One is near at hand we will endeavour to show in our next article, not by our own wisdom but by the sure word of God.

THE LAST GREAT DAY

By S. Roxana Wince

It is coming, surely, swiftly, just as the Mount Pelee disaster came. Those wild, wicked revellers were warned and had time to escape, but they did not believe, they would not flee, and like the Sodomites, were engulphed in a sea of fire and perished.

Even as I write the last day scenes are enacting. God's controversy with the nations is going on. He is settling the Eastern question by the arbitrament of the sword, and never will peace come till that question is settled. Fiercer and still more fierce will the battle rage till the land that he declares is his, and not to be sold forever, is put into the hands of the twelve tribed children of Abraham in everlasting fee as per Ezekiel xlviii chapter, and the name of the city shall be "The Lord is there." Millions of men are in the controversy now, but Russia declares she will have 10,000,000 in the field, when the war comes that is to follow swiftly on the heels of the present war. And yet men will not believe, will not flee to God for refuge. Fondly dreaming that peace and safety will come, they go on their way, heedless of warning cries, intent only on present pleasures and present good.

Yet my dear young friends who are yet out of Christ, such a course is like dancing when the house is on fire. Stop a moment and think: On whose side will you want to be when the Savior appears in the clouds? What things will then appear worth while? What then could you, would you, want your life to be? Remember you can make no changes when that great day comes, you can undo nothing, add nothing to your life. The opportunity was yours to believe, to obey and to serve, but it is gone, and will not come back. For you "the summer is past, the harvest is ended." You have had your "day of grace," you can have no second chance: "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for what a man soweth that also shall he reap." If you choose to sow to corruption, it is corruption that you will reap; if to life everlasting, you will reap life everlasting.

What seems of supreme value to you now, will be worthless then. The pleasures of the dance, of the theatre, the joy of social position, of great wealth, of costly jewels, of beautiful clothes, of grand houses, fascinating books, musical and secular education, will wither into nothing when you look into the face of Christ.

I want you to be saved, I have set my heart upon your salvation this very year. I am living, writing, praying, giving, denying myself, in the hope that you will be brought to God. It is so unwise to live a life of sin; so unwise to say 'you do not believe the Bible, do not believe in God." The time will come when you will believe, if not now. I pray you to reconsider the matter while you have time. "How can you escape if you neglect so great salvation?"

REFLECTIONS ON SUNDRY TEXTS

Comments and Criticisms Solicited

I have read what the brothers wrote in answer to my request for an explanation of Matt. 10:23, which reads: "But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another, for verily I say unto you, ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of Man be come."

I would like to suggest a few thoughts as to what seems reasonable to me the Savoir had reference to when he said that to the apostles. We know he did not refer to the time recorded in Matt. 25:31, which reads: "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory," for that has not taken place yet. He evidently had reference to some appearing or coming that would be in the near future. In Col. 1: 15-18, speaking of Christ, it reads: "Who is the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature." 18 verse: "And he is the head of the body the church, who is the beginning, the first born from the dead, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence." I think he had reference to his appearing to them after his resurrection, and not following them up and coming to them, as he had often done before.

There is a coming spoken of in Matt. 16:28 that is similar to the one referred to above. It reads: "Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom." We know his kingdom has not really come yet, but was shown to Peter, James and John in a figure. We are still praying for it to come, and the sooner it comes the better. It will do away with the injustice this old world is subject to at present, with all the graft, sin, and misery; the poor getting poorer, and the rich getting richer, with wars and starvation; while the earth furnishes enough to supply the needs of all, if the conditions were right.

In conclusion, I wish to thank the brothers for what they wrote, and solicit comment or criticism on this, if they see fit to make any.

With love and best wishes, desiring all the truth I can get.

I am your brother,

H. B. Hathaway.

MORTALS IN THE NEW EARTH

Peter, after speaking of the burning day, says: "Nevertheless we according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Pet. 3:13). The promise Peter had in mind no doubt was Isaiah sixty-five seventeen, and onward, which reads: "For behold I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice for ever, in that which I create: for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall no more be heard in her, nor the voice or crying. There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed."

This text shows very clearly that mortals still exist after Peter's burning day: for if all were immortal saints there would be no children to die, nor sinners to curse; but both are here spoken of. But let us read further: "And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessd of the Lord, and their offspring with them.

These verses show that the people of that age will live to be very old, and that children will not be born full of trouble, as they are in this age; but yet there will be births,which would not occur in an age where immortal saints only dwell; for the resurrected, and immortalized saints, "neither marry, nor are given in marriage" (Luke 20:35).

She learned the gospel of the kingdom with a ready and willing mind, and in December 1893, she was baptized into Abraham's faith by Brother J. F. Wagoner. She fell asleep in Jesus in the faith of the gospel, reposing confidence in God's promises of Jesus soon coming, the resurrection of the dead, everlasting life, and the establishment of the kingdom of God under the whole heavens. Sister Sutherland was a good, kind Chrietian woman, always had a warm welcome for all whom she would meet. She was true to her church and as a general rule, was in attendance at Sunday School when her health would permit. But now her place is vacant in the home, and in the church, where she will be greatly missed. She had memorized and was fond of the 23rd Psalm, which was read at the funeral, and a number of other scriptures, showing that the things which are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen, are eternal Phil. 3: 20-21 was quoted showing that when Jesus comes our vile body shali be fashioned like unto his glorious body.

Brother Robt. G. Huggins, of Cleveland, Ohio, conducted the funeral services which were held at the Carpenter Cemetary, where she was tenderly laid away to rest to await the glorious resurrection morn, when she shall come forth from the tomb to wear the crown of life with all the faithful ones.

THE LITTLE GIVERS

By Auntie Wince

The dear little lambs: God bless them! Auntie Wince is happy to see their names in the list of givers for the Lord's Linograph. She thinks of the little lad of Galilee and his basket, every time our boys and girls come forward with their dimes and quarters. For if his barley loaves and fishes were so greatly blessed by the pitiful Savior, will not your gifts be? I do not want you to forget the story,Lester and Velma; nor do I want any of my little friends to forget it. You must keep think ing about it so you will remember it, and what Jesus meant to teach us by telling it. That is what one of my teachers told me was the way to do if I want to have perfect lessons.

The money you give for the linograph, is like the little Galilean lad's barley loaves and fishes when put into the hands of the Lord. You could not make it buy very much, a towel, a book, or a toy, perhaps, unless you were old enough to make your dimes and quarters grow more dimes and quarters by planting seeds and raising fat heads of lettuce, and snowy radishes to sell. But you cannot do that in icy winter weather, even if you were old enough. So you will have to say "Dear heavenly Father, I want to do something for you. I want to work with you to make the world a better world. I want to help tell people that you are going to send Jesus back to this world, to be its king and to make everybody glad and happy. Won't you take the paper that the linograph prints with my money, and give them to men and women who have never been told what they must do to be saved, so they will read your book and mind it? Then they will tell other people about the gospel of Jesus, and these people will tell still others, and by and by there will be ever so many who will be minding you. Hear me, dear heavenly Father, and answer my prayer, for Jesus' sake."

And he will, my dear little ones, just listen: A littel child once bought a tract that cost only two cents, and sent it to India on a big ship. The men who took it gave it to a man who had never before heard about Jesus and his kingdom. He read it and wanted to know more, and when he had learned the sweet story of how God forgives sinners, he was baptized, and then he and the little tract kept working, till a large company were brought to believe in and mind our precious Savior. He can do the same thing with what you give him. But don't forget to ask him, he wants us to ask for what we want. Do not be afraid, he will hear you. He has telephones that you cannot see, stretched all the way up to where he lives, and you can talk to him over there. They are telephones without any wires, much like those that men use when they send messages to ships far out on the sea.

Just think how long the gospel of Jesus has lived on earth, and how many men and women and little children have believed it, just because those who loved it have given their money to have it told! You know about Jesus, because somebody gave something to have the Bible printed and given to you. Jesus is happy to have you give. He needs your gifts and the gifts of young people older than you, just as much as he needs the offerings of the fathers and mothers. What you give fills out the measure, and more because it encourages the grown up people to give still larger gifts because of you.

PAUL CONSISTENT WITH HIMSELF

Why did Paul "desire to depart, and to be with Christ," by translation, if he could just as well have been with him by dying (Phil. 1:23)? We are aware we have touched a tender spot in the theology of our opponents, by this reference to Paul's desire. They construe Paul's language into a desire to die, that his soul might be with Christ. But such a construction is without a shadow of proof; for first,Paul saith not a word about "his soul," nor any other man's soul or spirit, in the entire epistle. Second, he speaks of death in the next chapter as a calamity, and says, "Epaphroditus was sick, nigh unto death; but God had mercy on him," and restored him to health. Had Paul believed Epaphroditus, had he died would have been "with Christ, which is far better" than being here, how could he say, "God had mercy on him" in keeping him from dying when he was "nigh unto death?" Did Paul think it would be "far better" for himself to die than to live, and just the reverse for Epaphroditus? Strange logic that! Paul's "desire to depart" was manifestly a desire for translation.

It was a "desire" perfectly innocent in itself, but which he knew would not be likely to be granted to him, as the whole connection shows; for in the third chapter he points the Phillipians to his death and resurrection, saying, "Being made comfortable unto his (Christ's) death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead" (verses 10.11). Thus it is manifest that he did not expect to die; and hence, though he desired a translation, he did not expect one; nor did he expect to be with Christ till "the resurrection of the dead;" for he saith in the same chapter: "Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." No hint of expecting Christ to "come at death," when the "vile body" goes to corruption.

Thus we see, that though Paul desired a translation—which would be "far better" than either "to live in the flesh" or "to die"—yet he did understand that he would die; and he labored and suffered, "if by any means" he "might attain unto the resurrection of the dead," which he taught would be when Christ shall come from heaven; for, saith he to the Thessalonians: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the arch-angel, and with the trump of God and the dead in Christ shall rise,"etc.

Such language is not to be misunderstood, mistaken, nor perverted to accommodate the theology of an immortal soul, that is never named in all the Bible, and concerning which the apostle's language, of "desire to depart and be with Christ," is a simple perversion, and is contradicted by the entire epistle, as well as by all his teaching concerning the resurrection.

Thus we have disposed of this text of our opponents, from which they infer the consciousness of the dead, and find it avails them nothing, but when taken with the context, and entire argument of Paul, is strongly confirmatory that the only hope of a future life is by resurrection or translation.

If it still be urged that Paul said, "to die is gain," we reply, to die might be gain to one who had "five times received forty stripes save one," who had been "beaten with rods, stoned, thrice suffered shipwreck, in journeyings often, in perils by his own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, inperils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings oft, in cold and nakedness," besides numberless other trials; "to die" might be "gain" to such an one, even though an undisturbed sleep in unconsciousness till the resurrection. A minister in these days, with $5,000 salary, a comfortable home, and called by men Rabbi, or Doctor of Divinity, might not see how it would be gain to die, unless he was going at once to heaven; and it may be doubted if he would think even that gain enough to make him in a strait to die—as any physician might testify who attends him when ill—but Paul's salary was a very different matter; and he might think it gain to die, and rest till the resurrection: though he might desire, by a translation to depart and be with Christ, which would be far better than either to live or die. Such might have been his view of the matter.

To take the common view of Paul's discourse here, is to make him say, in one breath, that he knew not what to choose—to live or to die—and in the next, to declare he was in a great strait to die: i. e., he did very much choose rather to die than to live! Can any rational man suppose that Paul would talk in such a contradictory strain? Between life and death, as a means of gain to Christ and his cause, Paul said, "What I shall choose I know not;" but there was another thing he did greatly desire and choose, if it were consistent for his Master to grant it, viz: by a translation to depart and be with Christ, so that he would neither live here, in this mortal flesh nor die. This Paul did choose; at the same time, he declares that he was aware that he should "abide and continue" as he was, in this present state, for the benefit of the church.

The view we have taken is further confirmed by Paul's language to the Corinthians, where he says: "We which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh knowing that he which raised up the Lord Jesus shall raise up us also by Jesus," etc. (2 Cor. 4:11,14). It is the change of mortalty to immortality that Paul everywhere speaks of, and looks for; to take place either by resurrection or translation, and not a soul, disembodied, in bliss anywhere.—Sel.

EVANGELISTIC REPORT

To the Brethren Scattered, Greeting:

We arrived in California Sept. 3rd, and found that a goodly number of the brethren from Phoenix, Ariz. were spendnig their vacation on the coast, so tried to get in touch with them, and succeeded in finding Brother Joe Miller and Brothers Ray and Horace Saylor's folks. We hoped also to see Brother Perry's families, but missed them. We had a very fine visit with those we did meet, and as they were all ready to leave for home we accompanied Brother Miller's folks to San Bernardino, which is at the foot of the mountain pass. From here we took a side trip up into the beautiful Yucalpa valley, where Brother Allender lives and spent the night with him. It is needless to say that we were royally entertained, as any one that has visited them can testify. After a brief visit and a ride through the fine apple orchards of the valley we returned to San Bernardino, where Brother Saylor joined Brother Miller, and started for the desert trip to Phoenix.

After bidding them goodbye we boarded the train for Pomona, where we called on Brother Adamson, and made final arrangements for the purchase of the new tent, and then proceeded to Los Angeles where we ordered a tent 24x36, 7 foot walls. In a few days all was in readiness, and we shipped the tent to Tustin, a small suburb of Santa Ana. On the 18th of Sept. we put up the tent, and began preaching. Our attendance would average about twenty, but we were unable to get a steady attendance. A few of the First Day Advents came regularly, and were a great help to us, and were very hospitable, which we appreciated very much, as we were practically strangers in a strange land.

On Oct. 19th we moved the tent up into Santa Ana, and began preaching. The 19th we had an experience that was the first of the kind in all our tent work. We gave permission to ask questions, and as we were discoursing on the subject of "What is God," we were asked in quoting a scripture if it applied to Jesus when he was with the Father before he was born into the world. In our replying that we did not so understand it, two of our audience went away and reported that we did not believe in the divinity of Christ, and never came back. A few nights afterwards we had a delegation from the Church of Christ, some eight or ten. We were discoursing on the fifth universal kingdom. After the sermon we were asked by a man if we did not believe that the wicked were to be put in hell and tormented for ever. We informed him that we did not understand the scriptures taught such an idea, he then raised his voice to a very high pitch and proceeded to give us a tongue lashing in no uncertain terms remarking, "I thought you were preaching the gospel." We invited him not to jump to a conclusion so quickly but to come and get our line of thought before he condemned us; but he said, "What is the use if you do not believe that the wicked are to be tormented for ever; you are not preaching the gospel." So they all stayed away. We thought of the apostle when he said that God would send a delusion that they should believe a lie; but in the main the attendance was steady, and we had the satisfaction of inducting into Christ last Sunday two good earnest zealous people, and a class of ten or fifteen organized. We met here Brother Cade and family and Sister Stearns, the mother of Sister Cade—all formally from Floyd Ia., where Brother C. C Ramsay was pastor for many years. It was pleasant to call up recollections of the old times and the good meetings held at New Hartford, Ia., before the division came in the body over the views regarding the restoration of Israel as a nation. We preached in all twenty sermons in Santa Ana, and feel that we had a most profitable meeting.

On Sunday October 22, we had an all-day service; brethren from Long Beach, Palms, Los Angeles, Pomona, Brea, Anaheim, came with lunches and joined us in a real family dinner; also our folks from Zelzah came down, and we had a fine visit, preached three times to very good crowds.

We feel encouraged to go on. We have every thing first class to work with, and hope that we may start a permanent work in California. The work is being liberally supported. Below we give a financial report.

PRAYERS FOR THE DEAD

Prayers for the dead will become a part of the ritual of the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States, if the special commission on the revision of the Common Book of Prayer of that communion has its way.—News Clip.

This is going Romeward. Where does the "Protestantism" of the Protestant Episcopal church come in? Why pray for the dead? They "know not anything" (Eccl. 9:5). "There is no work, device, knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave (sheol, the unseen) whither thou goest" (vs. 10). They cannot "work" to improve their condition, and those of them who shall appear at the judgment seat of Christ will be "judged every man according to their works" (Rel. 20:12,13). Their works having been done in this life, their character was formed, and nothing remains but for the judgment to "render to every man (of them) according to their deeds" (Rom. 2:5-7). Those who did good will come forth unto the resurrection of life, and those who did evil, unto the resurrection of damnation (John 5:28,29). They themselves cannot pray, not knowing anything; neither can they "work" to make amends for neglected duty; nor can the prayers of others change either their own condition or the mind of the Judge. They must appear before the righteous Judge in the condition in which they were when their probation ended at death. Not only is the tendency of the Protestant Episcopal church Romeward: it comes from Rome. A "Protestantism" that does not protest counts for nothing.—A. H. Zilmer.

Through with Politics

Frequently when a man gets into politics he finds the came so alluring that he wants to remain in permanently, but this is not the case with Lindley M. Garrison, formerly secretary of war in President Wilson's cabinet. When he visited Baltimore on private legal business some time after his resignation from the cabinet, someone asked him if his trip was of any public interest. He replied: "Not a bit. I am out of politics for eternity."

Well Fixed for necessaries

Jape Penticoff came to seek aid from the city-fathers. "I gotta haff a sack of flour," said Jake. "I'm all out, and my family iss starfin."

"All right, Jake," said the official. "If you need flour and have no money, we'll get you a sack. But see here,Jake, there's a circus coming, and if we get you flour are you sure that you will not sell it and take your family to the circus?'

"Oh, no," said Jake: "I already got tat safed up. Yas, I got money to go to te circus." Youth's Companion.

The Weight of Numbers

Malachi O'Rourke, a familiar character in Chicago, had occasion to appear before a police magistrate to answer a charge of larceny. After hearing the testimony af two witnesses, who said that they saw Malachi take the goods, the judge said:

"Well, Malachi, I think you are guilty."

"An' what makes your honor think that? asked the Celt.

"These two men, who say they saw you take the goods."

"An is that all?" asked Malachi, in surprise. "Why, your honor, I can bring 200 men who will swear they didn't see me take the goods."—Case and Comment.

"If you have anything to say or write, say it or write it in a plain, simple manner. Do not be verbose; do not aim at a florid style; above all things, avoid the grandiloquent. Words were not designed to obscure thought. High-sounding phrases do not indicate the scholar. Monosyllables are abundant; the Anglo Saxon is essentially vigorous."

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

A BRIGHT PAGE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Tidbits of Pleasant and Useful Information

Gathered from Everywhere

A man who had made a huge fortune was speaking a few words to a class at a business college Of course, the main theme of his address was himself.

During the Civil war the only merchandise that was allowed to openly pass between the Union and Confederate lines were Bibles. The Christian Herald reports that more Bibles were printed in 1866 than in any year of the following two decades.

An anonymous letter was recently received by the U. S. treasury department containing a check for $150. The writer, a Civil war veteran, said that when a young man in the Union army the government had overpaid him that amount. Officials of the department say that this is one of the oldest debts ever cancelled by a contribution to the conscience fund.

There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus (1 Tim. 2:5). Christ is the only mediator, and he can only be a mediator for those that come into relation to him through the one gospel. To come into relation with him one must believe the gospel and be baptized into Christ. When one is baptized into Christ he is baptized into the only church that saves through faith. E. W. Knapp.

Voting

God will not cast away a perfect man, neither will he help the evil doers(Job 8:20). Can man be perfect in the sight of God and vote? Does voting for man please God? No. But it does please man, and therein is the greatest argument against voting. "For if I yet please men, I should not be the servant of Christ' (Gal. 1:10). No man can serve two masters (Matt. 6:24). "For one is your master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren."—E. W. Knapp.

AN IMPORTANT POINT

"All my success in life, all my financial prestige," he said, proudly, "I owe to one thing alone—pluck Just take that for your motto—'Pluck, pluck, pluck!' " He made an impressive pause here, but the effect was ruined by one student, who asked impressively:

"Yes, sir, but please tell us how and whom did you pluck?"—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 68 CLEVELAND, O. NOVEMBER 28, 1916 NUMBER 49

"LIFE'S SUNSET"

A little more tired at close of day,
A little less anxious to have our way;
A little less ready to scold and blame,
A little more care for a brother's name;
And so we are nearing the journey's end,
Where time and eternity meet and blend.

A little less care for bonds and gold,
A little more zest in the days of old;
A broader view and a saner mind,
And a little more love for all mankind;
A little more careful of what we say,
And so we are faring a-down the way.

A little more love for the friends of youth,
A little less zeal for established truth;
A little more charity in our views.
A little less thirst for the daily news;
And so we are folding our tents away,
And passing in silence at close of day.

A little more leisure to sit and dream,
A little more real the things unseen;
A little bit nearer to those ahead,
With visions of those long-loved and dead;
And so we are going where all must go,
To the place the living may never know.

A little more laughter, a little more tears,
And we shall have told our increasing years;
The book is closed, and the prayers are said,
And we are a part of the countless dead.
Thrice happy, then, if some soul can say,
"I live because he has passed my way."—Sel. by

SOME MISUNDERSTOOD PASSAGES OF SCRIPTURE EXPLAINED

"Her Soul was in Departing"

The first is found in Gen. 35:18; "And it came to pass as her soul was in departing." What was her soul? The language quoted above was used in describing the death of Rachel, the wife of Jacob. The term "soul" has a variety of meanings in the Scriptures. The first or primary meaning is "a creature that lives by breathing," as in Gen. 2:7, "The man became a living soul," also in Gen. 12:15, "The souls they had gotten in Haran;" Ex. 12:6, "Souls can eat: Lev. 5:1-2, "If a soul sin:" "If a soul touch any unclean thing;" 4th verse, "If a soul swear;" and many other places in the Scriptures where it means the person.

A second ueaning, the life of man. Psa. 33:22, "Redeemeth the soul (or life) of his servants:" Psa. 7:5 David speaks of his enemy persecuting his soul and taking it. It is used for desire, love, inclination. Gen. 23:8, "If it be your mind;" in Hebrew, "If it please or be agreeable to your soul." Prov. 27:7, "The full soul," that is, a person whose desire or appetite is satisfied. Souls are strangled and die. Job 7:15, "My soul chooseth strangling and death." Eze. 18:4-20, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Rev. 16:3, "Every living soul died in the sea."

The terms "immortal soul," "undying soul," "deathless spirit," or "immortal spirit," are not in the Bible anywhere, only in the minds of people who have been taught that way. It was the breath of life which caused man to live: when the breath leaves him he dies. So in the case of Rachel, "Her soul was in departing," it was the breath of life which was leaving her, not herself leaving the body. The same is true in 1st Kings 17:21,22. In the 17th verse we read: "His sickness was so sore that there was no breath left in him." It was the breath which went out of him, causing him to die, so in the 21st verse, Elijah prays, "Let this child's soul, or breath, come into him again."

The term "spirit" also has many meanings in the Scriptures. Cruden's Concordance gives more than twenty different meanings to it. When applied to man it signifies spiritual zeal (1 Tim.4:12). For judgment, authority and consent (1 Cor. 5:4). It is taken for the Gospel (2 Cor. 3·6-8). The thoughts affections and care as in Col. 2:5, "Though I be absent in flesh, yet I am with you in the spirit," or mind. Psa.51:10, "Renew a right spirit within me." David had sinned, and desired that his mind and thoughts might be right in the sight of God. Sometimes it is taken for teachers, either true or false, as in 1st John 4:1, "Believe not every spirit (or teacher) for many false teachers are gone out into the world." For passion, wrath, or anger. Ecc. 10:4, "If the spirit of the ruler rise up against thee."

The primary meaning of the word, however, is the breath, the respiration, the animal life that is in beasts and man alike. In the Old Testament, the Hebrew word is Ruach. In the New Testament the Greek word is Pneuma, and in the Latin it is Anima, that which animates or makes alive. In Ecc. 3:18-21, in the 19th verse, "yea, they all have one breath." In the 21st verse the same Hebrew word "ruach" is translated "spirit:" "Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" He had just said they all had one breath, and that they all went to one place, so he asks the question, "Who knoweth that one goes up, and the other goes down?" The people at that time believed that man had an immortal spirit or soul which did not die, just as many do today. In Ec. 8:3-6 Soloman tells us: "For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything: the memory of them is forgotten: also their love, and their hatred and their envy is now perished." As David says in Psa. 146:3-4, "In that very day his thoughts perish." In Ecc. 12:7, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit (breath) return to God who gave it." God gave the breath to man, causing him to live. When the man dies, the man, made of the dust of the ground, returns to dust, and he ceases using the breath which caused him to live, so it returns to God who gave it, and may be used by others In Eze. 37, and many other places in the Old Testament, the term "ruach" is translated "wind." Ninety-five times it is so used. In John 3:8 the Greek word "pneuma" is translated "wind." It is the Greek term meaning the same as ruach in the Hebrew. It is used many times in the New Testament. There is another word in the New Testament which is translated "wind" 28 times; it is "Anemos," and has practically the same meaning as pneuma (Matt.7:27; 8:26). In the Old Testament the Hebrew word "nephesh" is used, while in the New Testament the Greek word is "psuche," meaning the same thing, animal soul, or body, breath and life. In one case it refers to the future life. Matt. 10:28: "Are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." This passage is explained in Luke 12:4-5. In the Emphatic Diaglott it is translated as follows: "Be not afraid of those who kill the body, but cannot destroy the (future) life; but rather fear him who can utterly destroy both life and body in hell (gehenna)." Gehenna is the place where the wicked are destroyed after the day of judgment, after the thousand years reign of Christ and his saints on the earth (Rev. 20:12-15).

The Spirit Commended to the Father

The second question (Luke 23:46) is,What did he mean by my spirit in the sentence "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit?" The word translated "spirit" here is "pneuma," and is properly translated "breath" or life, which is the result of breathing. The same word is used in Luke 8:55 "And her spirit came again." In the Emphatic Diaglott it is rendered, "And her breath returned."

The Spirits in Prison

The third question (1 Pet. 3:18-21) is about the spirits in prison. In the 18th verse, in speaking of Jesus it says: "Being put to death in the flesh, but quickened (made alive) by the spirit (of God): by which (the spirit of God) also, he (Christ) went and preached to the spirits (or persons) in prison, which were sometimes disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited, in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water, the like figure," etc. Christ was made alive by the spirit of God. By this same spirit, Christ went and preached to the spirits in prison. How did he preach to them? He sent the Holy Spirit upon Noah, and he did the preaching, while he was building the ark (Heb. 11:7; 2 Pet. 2:5; Gen. 6th chapter). In Gen. 6:3 we read "And the Lord said, My spirit shall not always strive with man, yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years." So Peter speaks of them as "spirits in prison," because the Lord had limited their days to 120 years. The term "spirits" is used here the same as in 1st John 4:1: "Beloved, believe not every spirit (or teacher), for many false teachers have gone out into the world." The preaching was done before the flood, and the people were given an opportunity to repent. Christ did not do the preaching to them in prison, but God sent the spirit upon Noah that he might know the flood was coming, unless the people should repent, so he warned them, but they did not repent and were destroyed by the flood of waters. As Noah was saved by the ark so we, now, are saved by baptism. It has no reference to any preaching which was done when Jesus was here the first time. He could not preach while dead, because he was in the grave, the same as Jonah was in the whale's belly (Matt. 12:40). How many could Jonah preach to while in the whale's belly? To nobody, of course; then how many could Jesus preach to if he was three days and three nights in the heart of the earth? Psa. 16:10: "For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (grave), neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." Peter quotes this on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:24-32). Read this carefully and you will see that the soul of Christ was in the grave (hades in the Greek), but not left there—it was raised up on the third day. David was not speaking of himself but of Jesus, for David is both dead and buried and his soul (or person) is still in the grave, and will remain there until he wakes in the likeness of Christ (Psa. 17:15). David has not ascended into heaven (Acts 2:34). There was a reason for Noah preaching to the antedeluvians because they could have repented before the flood came, but what object would there be in Jesus preaching to them, after they had been dead thousands of years, and, as is commonly taught, been suffering the torments of hell-fire all the time: was there any chanceof of their being converted after death? No! for in 2nd Peter 2:9, "And to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." Also see 2nd Peter 3:7, Mal. 4:1, Matt. 13:40-50.

"My Tabernacle"

The fourth question pertains to 2nd Peter 1:14: "Knowing that shortly I must put off this tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me." The word translated "tabernacle" here is skenoma, and the meaning, as given in Young's Concordance, is "dwelling place." Cruden's Concordance says, "In this place Paul was speaking of his human body." The 15th verse shows he was speaking of his decease, or death. If Peter was about to die then, or put off this tabernacle, what would be the result to himself? Was there an immortal Peter dwelling inside the fleshy one? In this chapter he is teaching us how to obtain an entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, which in 2nd Tim. 4:1,

Paul says is to be "at his appearing," when he will judge the quick (or living) and the dead. In Matt. 25:31 we read the time when Christ shall take his throne is "when he shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him." Then Christ's kingdom will be upon the earth; his throne will be the throne of his father David" (Luke 1:32-33). In Luke 19:12-28 we find when he returns he reckons with his servants, and reigns over his enemies, giving his servants positions in the kingdom, some ruling over ten cities, and some over five,

What else does he promise to give his people? In 1st John 2:25, "This is the promise which he hath promised us, even eternal life." Then eternal life is one of the rewards for right living, and is not something we already possess. In Rom. 2:6-7, "Who will render to every man according to his deeds. To them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek glory and honor, and immortality, eternal life." This is the reward they receive, not something they already possess. In 1st John 5:10-12, "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." Then it is not in us yet, is it? In Col. 3:3-4 we read, "For ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Then the righteous will not appear with him in glory until he appears. It seems as though they would if they went to heaven where he is when they died, does it not? Jesus tells his Apostles in John 13:33 that "whither I go ye cannot come," but in John 14:1-3 he tells them "He will return and receive them unto himself, that where I am there ye may be also." Paul speaks of this in 1st Thess. 4:13-18 and there shows it takes place at the resurrection. He says: "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then they which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished:" not gone to heaven and left their bodies in the grave.

In the little pamphlet you sent me the author says, "Going to heaven when you die is not the reward of the righteous." That is true, if he would just stay with that statement, for God has never promised any such reward to his people. The Savior says (Matt. 5:5), "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Nothnig is said about their ever going to heaven. I should think it woudl be quite a reward if they could go to heaven and rejoice with the redeemed there while their bodies laid in the grave.

In the chapter we started with, 2nd Peter, 1:4, Peter says, "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature." The divine nature, or immortal nature is promised to us, but we do not possess it yet, although so many are claiming they have it now. How many have immortality now? In 1st Tim. 6:16 we find that God only has immortality, until the appearing of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. "Dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen or can see," until that time when the righteous will be made immortal (1 Cor. 15:51-54).

Jas. 4:14 tells us what our present life is: "For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." Jesus promises to reward the righteous with eternal life. This reward is given when he returns (Rev. 22:12; Matt. 16:27). In Lev. 12:10-14 we are told that the life of all flesh is the blood, and not a never dying soul or spirit. The breath of life or atmosphere which we breathe, keeps the blood in motion, and keeps it pure. We cease to breathe; the blood stops, and we die. If the blood is drawn from the body, when it is all gone, the person is dead, proving that the blood is the life. In 2 Cor. 5:1-4 we find Paul again speaking of "Our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved." That is, when the shock of death comes, what is the future hope of the Christian? Is it that we are transported instantly to heaven? "We have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens." What is this building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens? Is it another body which the saints enter when this body is laid in the grave? If so, then what will he do with the two bodies at the resurrection? Can he dwell in both (Isa. 26:19)? However, the apostle clears up the mystery for us, reading in the next verse: "For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven. If so be that being clothed, we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened, not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon that mortality might be swallowed up of life." Then the building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens, for which we are waiting, and with which we earnestly desire to be clothed, is eternal life, which when received, "mortality," or this present dying condition, will be swallowed up of life:" Clearly teaching that we have mortal life now, and when this is dissolved or we lose it, we wait to be clothed upon with eternal life from heaven: which will be when Jesus comes again to not only give eternal life to his people, but also to "Change their vile bodies and fashion them like unto his glorious body (Phil. 3:20-21). Also read Rom. 8:13-23, which teaches clearly that, "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die: but if ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." That is, live eternally, and that "The whole creation (man included), groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now: and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the spirit: even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our body." Then is when they will be clothed with this house from heaven, which was Paul's hope (2 Tim. 4:8), and also the hope of all of God's people (1 Thess. 4: 15-18). John 5:28-29; Heb. 2:14-15; Luke 14:14; 1 Cor. 15:23; John 11:23-26, also show that not only will the righteous dead be resurrected, but also those who are alive at that time and believe in him, shall never die (1 Cor. 15:51-52). The hope of Isaiah was in the resurrection, Isa. 26:19, "Thy dead men shall live," not that they were alive at that time, for they had to awake to sing.

REVERENCE

By S. Roxana Wince

It is a strange thing to me that a puny, mortal man should set himself up to judge what is, or is not inspired of the word of the Lord. Such a man cannot have faith, even in the passages that he has acquiesed in as divine. They will have no power over him to govern or change his life, because in setting himself up as a judge in the matter, he has in reality taken a seat higher that God, and has exalted his fallible reason above that of the All-wise, Omnipotent Jehovah. It is impossible to have faith in that , which had man not passed judgment upon it, would be no more divine than a stump speech by a would be president. It cannot be in the man like burning coals of fire, to destroy the dross and make to spring from his lips words that shall send many feet on missions for the Master. All the faith a "Higher Critic" can have, is faith in himself. "As is the sentence so will be the faith: and as is the faith, so will be the life." If any part of the Scriptures are not inspired, how do we know that the other parts are? How can we be certain of anything?

"The arm of God is palsied for you," when you come to the Bible with reverence and unbelief in your hearts. The word will not profit you because you hear it "as the word of man, and not as the word of God, which it is, truly working effectually in them that believe" (1 Thess. 11:13). When reverence for God's word dies out among a people, and its doctrines, its inspiration and its historical facts are attacked and denied, that people suffer to an extent beyond all human computation. They lose in morality.They no longer regard as before the rights of each other. They suffer in temporal affairs; they become physical and mental degenerates. We cannot toss the Bible out of the window, and keep sunlight, purity and joy in the house. God's word is always the word of God, even though he use men to convey it to man. All Scripture from the first word of Genesis to the last word of Revelations, is alike from God. We must accept it "as written and for the purpose written." God has set his word above all his name, and to add to it or take from it, is to have the plagues added to him that are writen in the book, and our part taken away out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things that are written in this book (Rev. 22:18,19). We cannot cut out and slash at God's book with impunity as we might at the works of Voltaire and Tom Paine. Let Higher Critics beware. They will not be found guiltless when the Lord comes.

It is a dreadful thing to stand up in a pulpit consecrated to the Lord, and there, as the anointed servants of the Lord, impeach the veracity of his word, and undermine the faith of the peaple therein. Such men do what they can never undo: just what the infidel Nietzche has done for Germany, for although they do not "write an eternal indictment of Christianity on every wall" and "denounce it as the great curse, the one corruption: the one great instinct of revenge, for which no means are too treacherous, too small," they are taking a course that will make the world infidel.

The Emperor William I had Nietche's book suppressed and destroyed, "he could not and would not permit it to reach his people, but its satanic seed had been sown in his own Royal Household, there to bring forth an over abundant fruitage when in death he no longer wielded the Scepter of his country." For not many moons after the ascension to the throne of Kaiser William II this diabolical book again was being issued from the press, and thousands of copies—some assert millions—were given free to the masses as a gift from this new and young Emperor, in order that they might understand and imbibe the doctrine inculcated therein.

We have seen the result, Beware! are not such books as Nietzches and the Higher Critics, the foretold "spirits of devils?" It is 2520 years since Nebuchadnezzar had his image of gold erected on the plain of Dura; and in 1915 the Kaiser had erected in the streets of Berlin another monster image not of gold, but of wood, and impersonating his most successful general—Hindenburg—as the image, of likeness of the God of Force. "God was dead," Nietzshe said, and so the Kaiser believes and acts. "No image is to eclipse his glory' or "stand higher than he in the eyes of his people." The story is an object lesson that cannot be ignored.

I am just now reading the much doubted, scoffed at books of Moses in our family worship, but I shall not go into detail as to what are considered as mistakes and flaws by the Higher Critics, or wherein they profess to find discrepancies and errors in later books. I shall say but little about these daring assumptions and reckless assertions. Some man says they accept the ten commandments as given by God, but the rest that Moses wrote they are not so sure of. There are so many pagan ideas mixed with it. "Moses' father-in-law was a pagan," etc.

I have read the Pentateuch at least once every year, from the time I was six or seven years old, and have never found any pagan ideas therein, but everything right the reverse, everything commanding and inculcating, not the worship of idols that have eyes, but see not; ears but hear not; noses, but smell not; mouths, but speak not; hands that handle not; and feet that walk not; but the worship of the living and true God that made heaven and earth. The nation of Israel is set forth in these books as ruled directly by this living and true God. He it is, who is their lawgiver. Not once are we left to infer that Moses was the maker of these laws. Everywhere we are met by the repeated statements: "And the Lord spake unto Moses saying:" "All that the Lord hath commanded you by the hand of Moses," etc.

Not a law was given, without our being assured that is was the Lord that was speaking. He spoke through Moses. And even this instrument of his was not to be treated with irreverence, as Aaron and Miriam found when they spake against him, because of the Ethiopian woman he had married, and claimed, that the Lord had spoken by them, just the same as by their brother. Miriam became a leper, for this. Yet her sin was a small one beside that of the Higher Critics, for the Lord most certainly does not speak through them, no more than he spake through the mouths of Korah, Dathan and Abiram and their company. These men of Levi heeded not that by the word of the Lord through Moses, they had been brought "before the Lord for an offering of the children of Israel, that they might execute the service of the Lord. That they were wholly given to the Lord," seemed "a small thing to them;" they sought the priesthood also. There was no reverence in their hearts for the statutes and commandments of the Lord, and the sons of Reuben and the princes of Israel who joined them were just as guilty, murmuring against Moses because they had not been brought into the land of milk and honey, when they themselves were to blame for not going up at the earnest solicitation of Caleb and Joshua. 15,000 smitten because of this irreverent treatment of the word of the Lord! And as they prayed that they might die in the wilderness, so died they. Because of unbelief they could not enter the land.

THANKSGIVING

By S. Roxana Wince

I thank thee first of all dear Father, that
Thou hast given to me an humble share
In thy great work, hast sent thy light and truth
To "guide my steps to Holy Hill," that I,
Might give that "light and truth" to other
Souls, and they, in true repentant faith
Find, through gate of glad obedience
Rest and peace.

I thank thee next, dear Lord,
For power to move thy saints to greater
Deeds, to larger trust, to faith so firm
That Satan, cunning though he be, can Never move their feet from off the Rock,
I thank thee for their glad response to Plea for free-will offerings from their Hands, that work for honor of thy name
Might not be halted, nor heathen say
Mocking our failure, "Where is now thy God?"

And, O I thank thee for the answered
Prayer, for goodly gift whereby we Still may send "Glad Tidings" near and far.
We dedicate it now to thee, a
Holy thing, that no unconsecrated hand
May touch, or turn to other use, save
That which serves thy purpose. It is now
Thy Linotype! we say the words with Reverence, and joyful tears, and songs,
With shoutings, such as rose from Israel's

Lips in days of old, o'er finished temple.
Bless this thy Linotype O Father!
And let through it, thy light and truth go
Forth to fields afar. Let not thy paper
Die, till he whose coming advent it
Proclaims, shall in the clouds appear But
O our Father! give to us still greater
Harvest, that when Jesus comes, we all
May bring with joy the sheaves our gifts
Have won for him, and lay them at his feet.

LENGTHY SERMONS

Many preachers of talent and of unimpeachable character are today idle on account of their lengthy sermons. Their discourses are methodical and profound but too long. Consequently these brethren are not in demand and they wonder why.

But should they reduce their one hour sermon to forty minutes they would be surprised at the beneficial result. May it not, then, be well to suggest a remedy for this weakness:

1. Eliminate needless preliminaries. Many preachers waste the first ten or fifteen minutes in an unnecessary preamble. Cut this out.

2. Leave out all words and sentences not needed. Verbosity is a serious fault in both speakers and writers.

3. Avoid digressions. Take a subject and stick to it. Don't try to preach on two or three subjects at one time.

4. Don't be precise in every detail. You can safely assume that your audience need only the main points and they can think out the rest. Precision is tedious.

5. As correlated to these things we might add that lengthy and tedious services are a fruitful source of failure in Gospel work. Close the meeting at flood tide. Meetings should begin sharp on time and close approximately on time.—M. C. Burt.

EDITORIAL

The mystery of suffering is more lucid than the fact of well-being.

Sunday, Nov. 20th, we had with us for communion service, Sister Annie Burton, of Salem, O.

Preach always your best—even if to a garret meeting with five old women. If you have five ragged children to teach on Sunday, prepare all week for them.—Alex. Whyte.

With regret we report the removal of Sister Blanche Covert, and her daughter Ruth, to Los Angeles, Calif. We commend these sisters to our Californian brethren; and hope against hope that their absence from us will only be temporary.

Brother J. H. Anderson writes, dating Nov. 20th: "I expect, the Lord willing, to leave for Virginia today. Have just closed a two week's meeting at Brush Creek, the best meeting I have ever held at Brush Creek. Five were baptised. Hope some brother or sister will send you a report. My new address is route 1, Woodstock, Va."

On the evening of Nov. 20th, after a sermon on "The Gospel Message," two dear friends were baptized into the likeness of Christ's death, burial and resurrection, namely: Mrs George Watt, formerly Unitarian, wife of Brother Watt; and Adam Keith, formerly neutral, husband of Sister Keith. We pray they may both run with patience the race for life, which they have now entered, and be crowned in the final day of judgment.

We have heard many prayers that began with an extravagant and exhaustive superfluity of superlatives, which called to mind the usual method of approaching an Eastern potentate; and that concluded with a series of cut and dried—very much dried—formulas which called to mind the precise and ponderous phraseology of a legal document. Be brief; boil them down; "let thy words and very high authority could be quoted against be few." We are not heard for our much speaking, vain and empty repetitions. Prayers are really cant when they are not the normal and natural expressions of the heart.

THE HAPPINESS OF THE UNHAPPY

"Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also" (Matt. 6:21).

2. As thou livest so thou diest.
3. As thou diest so thou continuest.

NO SENSE
SO UNCOMMON AS COMMON SENSE

Old John Brown, of Haddington, used to address his students of the first year to this effect: "Gentlemen, ye need three things to make ye good ministers: Ye need learning, and grace, and common sense. As for the learning, I'll try and set ye in the way of it; as for the grace, ye must always pray for it; but if ye havena brought the common sense with ye, ye may go about your business."—"The Salt Cellars."

WHERE IS CHARLES T. RUSSELL?

The sudden death of Pastor Charles Taze Russell, Editor of "The Watch Tower," has created a profound impression upon his many friends throughout the world. Hundreds of letters and telegrams received, further evidence the love and esteem in which he was held, and express unqualified desire to cooperate in continuing the great cause for which he stood so many years.

Brother Russell left Brooklyn in the evening of October 16, to fill appointments in the West and Southwest, but was obliged to start homeward before his scheduled time, owing to ill health.

It was on a Sante Fe train at Pampa, Tex., that he died. Brother Menta Sturgeon, who accompanied him on the trip as his Secretary, telegraphed the information to the headquarters of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society at Brooklyn, adding that "he died a hero."

The body lay in state at Bethel Home Saturday, and at The Temple throughout the day Sunday.

In the afternoon at the hour of 2, funeral service was held for the congregation, and in the evening a service was conducted for the public.

At about midnight the body was taken to Allegheny, Pa., where in the Carnegie Hall, at 2 in the afternoon of Monday, service was held by the Pittsburg congregation, of which he had been resident Pastor for many years.

Interment took place in Rosemont United Cemeteries at Allegheny, in the Bethel Family plot, according to his request.

We rejoice to know that instead of sleeping in death, as the saints of old, he is numbered among those whose "works follow with him." He has met the dear Lord in the air, whom he so loved as to lay down his life faithfully in His service.—Zion's Watch Tower, Nov. 15, 1916.

Editor's Comments

If we had read the above obituary in some orthodox journal, we would have understood it intuitively and easily; an immortal soul would have made intelligible its contradictory and theological nomenclature. But Russell has represented for years that he believed in man's mortality and his unconscious condition in death. With no immortal soul to reckon with, we are left in Egyptian darkness as to what has become of Russell. Is he dead or alive? Is he in the grave or in the air? Is he conscious or unconscious?

On the first reading you are led to think Russell is dead. Such expressions as these deceive you into this idea: "The sudden death of Pastor Russell:" "It was on a Santa Fe train at Pampa, Texas, that he died;" "He died like a hero," etc. So far as words are concerned, the "pastor" is clearly dead.

His body is without doubt dead, as the following expressions prove: "The body lay in state at Bethel House Saturday;" The body was taken to Allegheny, Pa.;" "Interment took place in Rosemont....in the Bethel Family plot," etc. Putting these two sets of expressions together, we reach two conclusions, apparently fair conclusions, since he has denied the immortality of the soul a thousand times:

1. Pastor Russell "died like a hero," and is therefore dead.

2. His body has died, was laid in state, and was later intered in Rosemont United Cemeteries at Allegheny, Pa.

Now if the "pastor" had an immortal soul, it may not have died; if he had an immortal spirit, it may be in heaven, or the air, or somewhere, in the exercise of its conscious faculties. Without such a soul or spirit there is not the ghost of the pastor left alive in life and consciousness. Hold your breath now and read this paragraph: "We rejoice to know that instead of sleeping in death" —what? He is not even asleep! "As the saints of old"—this after Russell has preached for years that there were no "saints" back there! Mr. Russellite obituatarian, you have fallen into a mortal sin! "He has met the Lord in the air!" The Bible only uses the expression "caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air" once (1 Thess. 4:16-18), and in this connection: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." Seriously now, Was this Scripture fulfilled when Russell died at Pampa, Texas, a few days ago? When "he died like a hero," did "the Lord himself descend from heaven?" Did any Russellites hear a "shout," the voice of the archangel, or the trump of God? Did the dead in Christ rise; and were they caught up in the air, and "together with them" "we which are alive?" Instead of the dead meeting the Lord in the air when they die, it is when they "rise;" and instead of the living dying like heroes, they "remain"! gone, get behind us, Russellite Perversions and Entanglements of God's Holy Word!

"He died like a hero;" "He has met the dear Lord in the air," whom he so loved as to lay down his life faithfully in his service." The same "he" all the time, and the same "his." "He died;" then "he" is dead: "he has met the dear Lord in the air" now "he" is alive: "he so loved as to lay down his life." The same "he" that died, loved, and laid down his life—"HE has met the Lord in the air!"

PRAYING FOR BILLY SUNDAY

A Methodist After an Adventist

One who evidently reads or sees our paper sends this rather quaint note, with the request that the Editor shall make some reply to it:

"I am a communicant of the M. E. Church, and am surprised to see in the "World's Crisis" a notice of Billy Sunday's campaign in Boston, and a request that Adventists join with the thousands who are to offer prayers for the revivalist and his work. I also notice that the "Crisis" office will keep on sale the Billy Sunday books. If you Adventists believe as you talk and preach about the immortality of the soul, how can you put such things in your paper? Your church calls it the devil's lie. Now how can you ask your people to pray for such work? Billy is helping us Methodists along in the conversion of the world. Please tell us in the 'Crisis' next spring how many new members have been added to your church from Sunday's preaching."

Editor Piper's Reply

If this party is serious in this request, we can but express our surprise that one who knows something of Adventists should hold exactly this view. Whatever differences of belief there may be between Billy Sunday and the views of this denomination, we see nothing incongruous in praying for him and his works. He may not believe in such an intermediate state as we hold to, nor may we preach the same brand of hell that Mr. Sunday offers in his vivid sermons. This, however, is not so very important. Our people have been able to win men and have seen the fruitage of revivals in the presentation of their views. Billy Sunday has certainly had the testimony of a splendid work of grace following his preaching. He has been able to win men, to stir cities, and has had an influence over our entire country. Some Adventists may not be over generous in according either prayer or praise to workers outside the body, but personally, we are in favor of praying for anybody who is doing good work in bringing men to Christ and to a better life, and we believe this reflects the sentiment of the body of which we are a part.

If this friend has good reason to think that Billy Sunday is aiding his own people in the conversion of the world, we would not take away any small part of the satisfaction it may give. We are in serious doubt, however, about any considerable progress in that direction. It will take a good many Billy Sundays, and more denominations than are in the field today to accomplish that stupendous task. We are inclined to think that the King will be here before that dream of universal peace is realized.

Yes, brother, whether we get many converts, few or none, we are willing to pray for Billy and his work. And if his preaching on certain points is more lurid than ours, we can at least rejoice in all the good he can do, and that, after all, is the principle consideration. (The World's Crisis, Nov. 8, 1916, page 3).

Editorial Comments

From the communications published above it appears that the Adventists are identified with those who say "A confederacy"—a wrong which is forbidden in these explicit words by an ancient prophet: "The Lord spake thus unto me with a strong hand, and instructed me that I should not walk in the way of this people saying, A Confederacy" (Isa. 8:11.12 . With a "strong hand' God has "instructed" us to "not walk in the way of this (federated church) people." Despising this divine instruction, and casting God's words behind their backs (Psa. 50:17), we find the Adventists are full-fledged supporters of orthodox fables as embodied in the ministry of Billy Sunday. A purblind Methodist can see they are streaked through and through with inconsistency, and are guilty of endorsing doctrines which they do not believe, and he is not afraid to tell them so. They are selling the works of Billy Sunday, and are praying for the success of his revival in Boston. Billy preaches the immortality of the soul, consciousness of the dead, heaven the home of the saints, eternal torment in hell for the wicked, etc., and is "helping the Methodist along in the conversion of the world"—all "lies" according to the doctrine of Adventists. Are they then selling books which teach "lies?" It looks like it! Are they praying for the success of "lies?" It seems so!

Well, it is refreshing in these times of dissimulation to find a Methodist who is ready to rebuke people for compromise of principle. And what does Editor Piper have to say in self-defense when a Methodist shows him wrinkles in Adventist consistency? Simply this: "Some" Adventists may not be generous enough to pray for Billy, but "personally" he is in favor of praying for him, and he believes "this reflects the sentiments of the body of which he is a part."

"But," objects the Methodist, "he believes and preaches the immortality of the soul, and you call that the serpent's lie."

"We see nothing incongrous in praying for him and his work," responds Editor Piper.

"What! nothing incongrous in praying for the success of a lie?" replies the Methodist.

"You are not over generous," says the Editor.

"But then Billy does not believe the dead are unsonscious, like you," persists the Methodist.

"He may not believe in such an intermediate state as we hold to," admits Editor Piper.

"And he teaches eternal torment," continues the Methodist.

"He may not preach the same brand of hell in his vivid sermons, as we do," confesses the Editor.

"Then, too, Billy is helping the Methodist along in the conversion of the world. What do you think of his mission?" asks the Methodist.

"Well," says the Editor, "'he has been able to win men, stir cities, and he has influence over our entire country.'"

"Since you grant he has made a splendid start," goes on the Methodist, "may I ask if you think it feasible that Billy and the Methodist will convert the world?"

"We are in serious doubt about any considerable progress in that direction....We are inclined to think that the King will be here before that dream of universal peace is realized."

"You think his mission is doomed to failure, and still you are praying for him and his work! You are praying for the success of what you do not believe, are you?" queried the Methodist.

"W-e-l-l, y-e-s, I sup-suppose so," replies the Editor, blushing down to the roots of his hair, "but that is an awkward way of putting it."

"Then you put it rightly and uncouthly," requested the Methodist.

"Mr. Sunday preaches vivid sermons, he wins men, stirs cities, and a 'splendid work of grace follows his preaching.' He does good in bringing men to Christ and to a better life. We rejoice in all the good he does, and that, after all, is the principle consideration.'"

"Am I then to understand that success is the 'principle consideration'?" quizzed the Methodist seriously. And then he continued: "In Acts 8:9-11 we have this account of evangelist Simon: 'He bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one: to whom they all gave heed, from the least to the greatest, saying, This man is the great power of God. And to him they had regard, because that of long time he had bewitched them with sorceries.' Now had you lived in Samaria when this 'great' evangelist did, and for whom all 'had regard, from the least to the greatest,' you would no doubt have been captivated by his 'vivid sermons,' and his phenomenal success you would have called a 'splendid work of grace.' You would have joined the chorus of voices raised by the bewitched, 'This man is the great power of God,' and would have prayed for him and his work. 'Philip went down to Samaria, and preached Christ unto them' (Acts 8:5). He did not go there and federate with the bewitched Samaritans, nor did he hold "union" meetings with the 'Great,' 'Power of God,' Evangelist Simon, D. D. And when he had 'preached Christ' there, he did not send his converts to the bewitched, sorcerized Samaritan church, but the result of his meeting is stated in these words: 'But when they believed Philip preaching ,the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women' (verse 12). And— "

"Oh, you lack generosity," broke in Editor Piper, nervously. "Doing good is the principle thing. Your lecture on doctrine tires me; talk ethics and exhilerate me."

"But witchery is not a good thing," protested the Methodist. "Billy preaches the immortality of the soul, and you call that the serpent's lie. Is preaching a lie doing a good thing? and does a splendid work of grace follow his preaching this lie?"

"And Billy gives very vivid sermons on hell; he wins men, stirs cities, and has an influence over our entire country by teaching eternal torment for the lost."

"We do not preach the same brand of hell as Mr. Sunday preaches," says Editor Piper; "this, however, is not very important."

"And then Billy preaches consciousness of the dead going to heaven, etc., the conversion of the world, and many other things which you repudiate as utterly false," significantly remarked the Methodist, "and I am surprised that you believe one thing, and are praying for another."

"But you forget ," said the Editor, that to do good is the "principle consideration." "Not at all," said the Methodist, "but I am unable to understand how preaching lies can do any good. And allowing that it can, we still have the rebuke of an apostle on the practice: 'And not rather (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) Let us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just' (Rom. 3:8). You may say 'this is not very important,' but it not only makes lies permissible, but actually commendable, since you pretend to do evil and reap good, and that God cooperates and blesses for good the falsehoods preached by Billy, and you are praying — —"

Just here Editor Piper interrupted with this argument, very convincing to himself, but unfelt by the Methodist and others who think:

"x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x x."

Our minds are endowed with a vast number of gifts of totally different uses—limbs of mind, as it were, which, if we don't exercise, we cripple.—Ruskin.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother:

I am so glad that you stand up so bravely for the truth. "There can be no washing of water by the word, when the word is absent;" "No obedience of faith when there is no faith." I rejoice so greatly too in what you say about the word of God. Your thoughts on inspiration are clear and convincing; also as to the authority of the Bible. Surely "when the world rejects the Scriptures as God's word, they reject the authority of God, and the only divine standard in the world." That sentence is worth its weight in gold.

And just as important is the thought that "we must not take our own way," but go to "the volume of the book" for guidance as Jesus did, not doing our own will but the will of the Father.

Your Bible lessons are worthy of high commendations and ought to be widely circulated and used. I pray that God's blessing may rest upon them, and upon your own dear busy self, and that many may be brought into "the obedience of faith" thereby.

OLD ANTIOCH CHURCH

Inquiry having come to me from various sources for information as to final disposition made of "Old Antioch," owing to the widespread knowledge of the old church landmark, I will give a brief history of it from the time of abandonment in 1913 until now.

It served well its place for the space of fifty years, and within its sacred walls was heralded forth the truth by nearly all, if not all of the many grand speakers for the church, but like all things else, its glory departed, and it is now only a memory.

Good church buildings had been built and are in use in Plymouth and Argos; Antioch being a country church midway was maintained in use a number of years, more to please some of the patriarchs of the faith than for the real benefits derived therefrom. In 1911 occurred the death of Sister Mary Ann Shirley, who had all her church life maintained her membership here, and in her will was found left for the upkeep and maintenance of this church she best loved, a legacy of $250,00.

Those who still retain their membership in the old Antioch ecclesia assembled themselves there and elected three trustees, two from the Argos ecclesia and one from Plymouth, who received the money, and when the church was abandoned sold the church and grounds for $225,00. The legacy kept on interest for four years at six per cent drew $60,00, making the sum of $535,00 for distribution, was this year divided by giving to Plymouth church $125,00, and Argos retained $410,00.

The party who purchased the property has not decided as yet just what disposition he will make of it, and it stands where it has for so many years undisturbed, apparently beaming down its kindly benign benediction on the passerby. And so brethren may the truth and life and light radiate from our lives that our memory may be held in reverence as is that of the old church for the good done in service to the end.

A BIBLE STORY FOR THE LITTLE FOLKS

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, and the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light, and there was light. And God saw the light that it was good: and God divided the light from the darkness, and God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day."

God did all this the first day, and the second day God made the firmament and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament. And God called the firmament Heaven.

The third day God separated the water from the land. The waters he named Seas and the dry land he named Earth. The same day he said let the earth bring forth grass, herbs and fruits. The fourth day God made the sun, moon and stars. On the fifth day he made the fish and all the living things in the sea, also the fowls that fly in the air. The sixth day God made the cattle, the creeping things and beasts. And last of all, on the sixth day God made man and he has told us how he made him and just what he made him for. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Then man was a lifeless soul before God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. "And God said, Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness, and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth and subdue it, and have dominion over every living thing that moveth upon the earth. And God saw everything that he had made, and behold it was very good."

God made everything very good. Is everything very good at this present time? Even you little children would answer, No. Where did God put man? "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden; and there he put the man whom he had formed. And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil. And the Lord God took the man and put him in the garden of Eden to dress it, and to keep it. And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

Here there is no explanation, but if we take that day spoken of as a twenty-four hour day, we must understand that it was the sentence of death pronounced on Adam that day; but it may have been a thousand year day. If so we find by reading God's holy word that Adam died before the 1000 years had expired. "But forget not this one thing, beloved, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day" (2 Pet. 3:8). "For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past" (Psa. 90:4). God made everything very good, man not excepted. He told Adam just how he would be punished for disobedience before he had disobeyed.

"Now the serpent was more subtile that any beast of the field which the Lord God had made. And he said unto the woman, yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden? And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the trees of the garden, but of the fruit of the tree in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it lest ye die. And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die; for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof then your eyes shall be opened; and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil. And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof and did eat. And the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked and they sewed fig leaves together and made themselves aprons. And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day: and Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord God, among the trees of the garden.

"And the Lord God called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where art thou? Adam said, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid, because I was naked; and I hid myself. And God said, Who told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree, whereof I commanded thee that thou should'st not eat?" (Gen. 3:1-11).

Now children, do you suppose that Adam really believed that he could hide his sin from God? He could not, neither can we. So we should never do, say or think anything that we know would be displeasing to our heavenly Father.

And God said unto the serpent, Because thou hast beguiled the woman and caused her to disobey, thou art cursed above all cattle and above every beast of the field: upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life. And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: and it shall bruise thy head and thou shall bruise his heel."

Here the seed of the woman refers to Christ. This is the first promise we find of Christ's coming. Some men teach that there is a personal devil abroad in our land, but cannot tell where he is. God never fails to make plain his statements. In the third chapter of Genesis he speaks of a serpent, and tells us how he travels and what he eats. And in Revelations 20:2, "He (an angel) laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil and satan, and bound him a thousand years." Again, in Genesis 3:17 we see that it was through Adam's disobedience that God put the curse on the ground: "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee, and thou shalt eat the herb of the field. In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken, for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

"What a Sunrise Will it Be!"

We do not think enough of Christ's second coming. What would be said of the wife who, when her husband was away in another country, could be happy without him. On the contrary, the loving wife longs for her husband's return. "Oh, when will he come back!" is her frequent exclamation. Wife of the Lamb, church of the Savior, where is thy waiting, hoping, longing for the second coming of thy Lord? Is this thy blessed hope, as it was of the primitive church? O Christian, every morsel of that bread thou eatest at the sacramental table, every drop of wine thou drinkest, is the voice of Christ, saying to thee, "I will come again, and reveive you to myself," and should draw forth thy longing desires, "Come, Lord Jesus; even so come quickly!" The night is long, and dark, and stormy, but the morning must come; and, oh, what a sunrise will it be!—John Angel James.

Natural Immortality Absurd

According to the plain statements of the word of God, man's claim to immortality is groundless. God "only hath immortality" (1 Tim. 1:16). Immortality is deathlessness, it is living for ever, and God sent forth our progenitor Adam from the garden of Eden, "lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live for ever" (Gen. 3:22). Lest the man should for ever—can words be plainer? And "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life" (John 3:16). Is it not a denial of these words to teach that men have eternal life whether they believe on him or not? The Scriptures insist that the faith which is obedience to what God hath spoken, is essential to the obtaining of eternal life. Poets, priests, and people fondly dream that death is the gate of life! That portal is resurrection. And there can be no resurrection of the dead if there be no dead to be raised. Without resurrection there can be no living again.—Decimus, in Exchange.

He who heeds the warnings of the good is wise. Sow an act and you reap a habit; sow a habit and you reap a character; sow a chracter and you reap a destiny.

What a great help an earnest true friend is, encouraging, inspiring, defending, saving us from despair and error and disaster. Alas, life is poor without friendship. Christ is a friend! Whoever takes him as such and returns his confidence will find himself growing nobler every day.

Repentence means that you will put on the beautiful clothes that Christ gives. Just as soon as you are willing to do this you may be a soldier of Christ. He has beautiful white garments of purity. He has warm soft garments of love. He will give you a shield of righteousness, and a sword of prayer, and a cap of safety. Repentence is not only putting off your rags, all your bad habits; it is also putting on the beautiful and splendid uniform of the Christian life, without which we cannot hope to enter his service.

Books of the Old Testament

The following if committed carefully to memory by the children, and repeated occasionally, will enable them during all their lives to keep in mind the order of the books of the Old Testament. Very few are able to keep the order without some help of this kind:

The great Jehovah spoke to us
In Genesis and Exodus;
Leviticus and Numbers see
Followed by Deuteronomy.
Joshua and Judges sway the land,
Ruth gleans a sheaf with trembling hand;
Samuel, and numerous Kings appear,
Whose Chronicles we wondering hear;
Ezra and Nehemiah now
Esther the beauteous mourner show;
Job speaks in sighs, David in Psalms,
The Proverbs teach to scatter alms.
Ecclesiastes then comes on,
And the sweet Song of Solomon.
Isaiah, and Jeremiah then
With Lamentations takes his pen.
Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea's lyres
Swell Joel, Amos, Obadiah's.
Next Jonah, Micah, Nahum, come,
And lofty Habakkuk finds room.
While Zephaniah, Haggai calls.
Rapt Zechariah builds his walls;
And Malachi with garments rent
Concludes the ancient Testament.—Sel. by Brother Titman.

VOLUME 68 CLEVELAND, O. DECEMBER 5, 1916 NUMBER 50

OUR REWARD

God in heaven, we implore thee,
To forgive our many sins;
Make us fit for thy dear kingdom,
With a life that never ends;
May we ever work for Jesus,
Follow in the path he trod;
We will seek the glorious promise,
Given to the saints of God.

We will strive to live for Jesus,
Do the thing that pleases him;
Strive to overcome the tempter,
Live a life that sure will win;
We must leave all worldly pleasures,
And accept the gospel plan;
And live near our blessed Savior,
To obtain the promised land.

In that land there'll be no sorrow,
Neither sickness, pain, nor death;
And to gain that glorious promise,
We must serve him unto death.
When he comes to earth in glory,
May we hear his joyful call:
"You have served me true and faithful,
I will serve you one and all."

PETER'S DAY OF FIRE

Is the Fire Literal or Symbolic?

Dear Restitution:

As you come to us in your weekly visits laden with many good things, we feel adverse to offering a criticism to anything found in the contributions by your able correspondents, yet it often occurs that some writer crosses a cherished belief of ours, which causes us to go back and reread. So we have a case in hand in a sermon by our Editor printed in a late number and criticised in a friendly manner by Brother Parker.

The sermon referred to dealt with Peter's fire. Now the question is, Is it a literal or figurative fire? I think we will all agree that it is not essential to an entrance into the kingdom of God to believe it one way or the other. The really essential thing is for us to believe the truth, and to be prepared to withstand the fire of whatever sort. This is proven by Isa. 33:14-15, which says: "Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" The answer comes "He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly, he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, and shaketh his hand from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil." These are the ones that are to see the king in his beauty. The only excuse we would have then for offering a friendly criticism would be that one error might beget another and finally result in disbelieving an essential truth.

My thought then is this: The change in the future is not so much in the atmosphere as in us. It is well known to science that diptheria bacteria cannot work upon a sound throat, but if by some means the throat becomes inflamed, they at once begin work. So with consumption and other disease. We by inheritance, contract or by accident, become weakened in body, and are unable to cope with these invading disease germs. The food we eat has a building up power, and keeps us living until something happens to some vital organ. So the weakness then is in ourselves. Just as Paul says of the law, "It was weak through the flesh," or in other words because of the infirmities of man, it was powerless and incapable of imparting life.

To illustrate: a consumptive lives in a certain locality where the air is too heavy, and he is ordered to a locality where the air is lighter. The reason for this change is because of the diseased condition of the lungs. Other people remain in the same locality, eat the same food, and breathe the same air, without any ill effect. So we discover that the air has nothing to do with it as long as the people are healthy.

So we view it in the age to come: our organisms will be made perfect, therefore will not contaminate and will be capable of living in the present or any kind of air. Paul says: "We are changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." And we find this change to be from corruption to incorruption, from mortal to immortal. In this condition it would make no difference about the air, heat or light; it would have no effect upon us.

In view of this, then, let us examine 2 Pet. 3. Peter is reminding us of the words of the Savior and the prophets, that in the last days men were going to scoff at the idea of Christ's return to the earth, and in their argument that all things have continued from the creation. Then in verse 5 he says they were willingly ignorant of the fact that by the word of God the heavens and earth were of old, standing out of the water and in the water. Here he refers to the flood, for in verse six he says: "Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished." The heavens and earth in verse five refers to the conditions existing then. The people that were drowned then, were the "earth under the water" and Noah in the ark, "standing out of the water." Another chapter refers to this as a type of baptism.

So the sinner, as he stands in the water, leaves as he goes under the water, the old man, or the earthly man perishes; and as he stands out of the water, he is a new creature in Christ Jesus. Conditions for him have changed. Literally he is the same flesh and blood, but living in a different atmosphere, figuratively speaking. "But the heavens and the earth which are now, are reserved unto fire;" that is, present conditions are awaiting destruction. Here our brother argues, that the water was literal, so the fire must be literal also. But this does not necessarily follow.

The lesson taught, which is a dissolution of present conditions, is the main thing. The political and ecclesiastical heavens which are of earthly origin, are to be dissolved. We read of the kingdom of heaven because it is of heavenly origin. These earthly organizations are going to make a strenuous resistance which will make the future age, during their dissolution, like a lake of fire. For proof of this we find in verse ten: "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in which the heavens (political and ecclesiastical) shall pass away with a great noise (contention or resistance), and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." It is the elements of present systems that make them defective, and they are to be purged (burned) out. In verse eleven this thought is made plain: "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved." That is the present heavens and earth, or worldly systems. Both church and state are to be dissolved. "Fervent" in verse twelve means ardent, that is, these systems are going to hang on tenaciously, ardently or fervently, and try to save themselves from this dissolution. Jesus said, "I came to send fire on earth, and what if it already be kindled?" The opposition that he set up against the systems of his day, both church and state, started a fire, and the smoke of that fire was plain to be seen. This same fire exists wherever the true word is preached. This same truth will go on into the ages to come until it consumes and dissolves all earthly systems.

We see then that this is not literal fire. It is friction between truth and error. As further proof of this we turn to Hebrews 12th chapter, which we quote at length, beginning at verse 18: "For ye are not come to the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor into blackness and darkness and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words, which voice they that heard entreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more; (for they could not endure that which was commanded, and if so much as a beast touched the mountain it shall be stoned or thrust through with a dart, and so terrible was the sight that Moses said, I exceedingly fear and quake). But ye are come unto Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, and the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels; to the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God, the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than that of Abel. See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven; whose voice then shook the earth, but now he hath promised saying, Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven."

The writer here has brought the old and the new systems to view. When God spoke from heaven the earth trembled—man in his earthly state shook and quaked. Now he says he is going to shake things up once more, both heaven and earth. The writer then proceeds to tell us what that signifies in verse 27: "And this word yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved." It seems to me there is no escape from the conclusion that the establishment of God's kingdom shakes up and removes all earthly systems, and to show how ardently they hang on and resist this shaking up, he uses the word "fire;" in other words, it is a heated conflict. God's word goes on and accomplishes that "whereunto it was sent," which results in his kingdom filling the whole earth. Every system that comes in contact with God's word and principle, causes a friction that will finally result in their dissolution. The elements which are faulty are eliminated, true principles injected, and a perfect government ensues.

This is the new heavens and the new earth of Rev. 21:2-3. To prove this he says, "The former things have passed away." This is a quotation from Isa. 65:17,18, which reads: "For behold I create new heavens and a new earth." He further explains what he means by saying, "But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create; for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy." Not a new earth, nor a new heaven, light and air; but a new order of things as to systems. This seems plain to me. So we hope in our study if we can't quite agree on the non-essentials of this subject, we shall agree in the essentials. We submit the foregoing for thought, also in love.

SOME MISUNDERSTOOD PASSAGES OF SCRIPTURE EXPLAINED

Visions, Revelations and the Third Heaven

Your fifth question is found in 2nd Cor. 12: 2-4. In the first verse we read, "I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord." The word, "revelations" comes from a Greek word Apokalupsis, which means an uncovering. The word "vision," as used here, comes from the Greek word, optasia, which means sight or appearance; so the words "visions" and "revelations" would mean an uncovering by sight or appearances; so the Lord instructed his people concerning the future by uncovering the conditions which will prevail in the future life, lifting as it were, the covering or veil, so they could clearly see what the future state will be. In the 2nd verse he says: "I knew a man in Christ, above fourteen years ago," that is, the incident he is telling had happened to a man in Christ some fourteen years before the time when Paul was writing; but he adds in parenthesis, "whether in the body I cannot tell; or whether out of the body I cannot tell, God knoweth." The term used here for body is "soma," and sometimes refers to the human body, and sometimes to the body of Christ ,the church. Adopting either meaning, Paul did not know whether the man of whom he was speaking, whom he had known some fourteen years before, was still in the body or not: whether he was yet alive or had died. "Such an one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man, whether in the body or out of the body, I cannot tell, God knoweth. How that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful (margin, possible) for a man to utter. Of such an one will I glory."

What is meant by being caught up to the third heaven? Paul does not explain it here, but by turning to 2nd Peter 3:3: "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days, scoffers, walking after their own lust, and saying, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. For this they willingly are ignorant of, that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth, standing out of the water and in the water; whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished (the flood). But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word, are kept in store, reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men." The heavens spoken of here are the atmospheric heavens surrounding the earth. We find two conditions of the heavens and the earth here spoken of: the first, the condition of the heavens and the earth before the flood, but these were changed by the flood of waters; second, the heavens and the earth which are now: but Peter says "They are reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." At the tenth verse we read: "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the nigh; in which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." At the 13th verse, "Nevertheless we, according to his promise (Isa. 65:17), look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." This new heavens and new earth will be the third condition, or the third heaven to which the man spoken of by Paul was caught away to. At that time the wicked will have been destroyed by fire, the curse will be destroyed from off the earth, the earth will be pure, and its inhabitants the redeemed of Adam's family, the angels of God, and the "Tabernacle of God will be with man, and he will dwell with them." See Rev. 21:1-8, which describes the future glorious condition of the earh and its people. This is the wonderful vision of revelation given to the man, of whom Paul says "of such an one will I glory." The man was not caught up so far as direction is concerned, but was caught away, carried on to that time when the earth will be the paradise of God So the man of whom Paul speaks, not only was priveledged to see the perfect condition in that future paradise, when man and the earth shall be redeemed from the fall, but also to hear the unspeakable words, which it is not now possible for man to utter. The repentant thief will be there, for when dying on the cross he appeals to the Master, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Jesus answers, "Verily I say unto thee today, Thou shalt be with me in paradise." Jesus has not yet come into his kingdom, the earth is not yet the paradise of God, so the promise to the thief has not yet been fulfilled, but will be at the time appointed, "when he comes into his kingdom."

Soul and Spirit Divisible, therefore Different

The sixth question is found in Heb. 4:12, "Dividing asunder of soul and spirit." It is plain that soul and spirit, in this case, cannot be the same thing, or they could not be divided, any more than the joints and marrow, are the same. In the Emphatic Diaglott it reads as follows: "Cutting through even to the separation of life and breath, and of joints and marrow, and able to judge the thoughts and intentions of the heart." The word translated "soul," or "life" here is "psuche:" while "pneuma" is the Greek word for spirit or breath. In the preceeding verse Paul says, "Let us, therefore, labor to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same manner of unbelief." Man received the breath of life, and became a living soul, could exercise all the faculties of a living being: man is now on trial, and, if faithful to the word of God, although he may die and lose life, it will be only temporary, for Jesus says in John 10:10, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." And in John 6:40: "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day," while those who are disobedient to the word of God, will not only lose this life, but when they live again, are brought up to judgment at the second resurrection, and they will suffer the second death, or the second separation of breath from body, which will result in loss of life that will be eternal (Luke 12:4-5; Psa. 37:9-11; Matt. 3:10-12; Rom. 6:23; Rev. 21:8; Heb. 9:27; Prov. 11:7).

Body, Soul and Spirit

The seventh question is based on 1st Thess. 5:23: "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." The Greek word translated "spirit" here is "pneuma," and when applied to man, the primary meaning is breath. In Luke 23:46 Jesus, when dying on the cross exclaims, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit" (pneuma) or breath. Why did he commend his breath into the hands of his Father? That it might be restored to him at his resurrection, when he was made alive after the power of an endless life: then the breath was restored to him by the Father, and he lived and was seen, and conversed with his disciples (1 Cor. 15:5-8).

Psuche is the Greek word translated "soul," and is here, as we find in the Emphatic Diaglott, properly translated "life." The return of the breath to the body resulted in the restoration of life to the whole orgenism.

The word "body" (Greek, soma) here has reference to the whole physical organism: but the body is to be changed at the resurrection (Phil. 3:20,21): "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." In 1st Cor. 15:50 we find that "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," but in Luke 24:39 we learn that Jesus after his resurrection was flesh and bones: his blood was shed on Calvary, so in the resurrected state the blood, which is now the life of the body, and the most corruptible element in it, will be lacking, and then "This corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, and death is swallowed up in victory." His people will then be like him (1 John 3:2). "And as the Father hath given to the Son to have life in himself," so it will be with his peeplo (John 5:26-29). As the Lord's people are now, in this life, subject to corruption, to dishonor, to weakness, to sickness and death, so they will be raised from the dead, to incorruption, to glory to power; they will be spiritual beings, possesed of the divine nature, bearing the image of their heavenly Redeemer; immortal, made alive after the power of an endless life; are "born of the spirit," are "the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." "God shall wipe all tears from their eyes: there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain" (1 Cor.15:42-54; 2 Pet. 1:4; Heb. 7:16; John 3:8; Luke 20:36; Rev. 21:4). Paul was not praying that the Thessalonian brethren should not die, but that their spirit (breath), soul (life), and body might be "preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." That they might use the breath, life, and body which God had given them, in a blameless way, in his service, and though they should die, as the people to whom he was speaking did, yet the "Righteous hath hope in his death" (Prov. 14:32), and "shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just" (Luke14:14). This he had just explained to them in the preceding chapter (1 Thess. 4:13-18). At death the "breath returned to God who gave it" (Ecc. 12:7). "Death has passed upon all men" (Rom. 5:12), so all die and lose this life. "The dead know not anything" (Ecc. 9:5), so this life ends, and the body returns to the dust of the ground (Gen. 3:19). Paul says: "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come" (1 Tim. 4:8). Jesus has promised his people eternal life, and to raise them up in the resurrection at the last day. Then "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise; awake and sing ye that dwell in dust. The earth shall cast out the dead." They awake and sing, showing a restoration of breath and life to the body, reconstructed from the dust of the ground. The crown of righteousness and life are now laid up for God's people to be given them at the appearing of the Lord (2 Tim. 4:8; Col. 3:3-4). When this glorious event shall happen, then Paul's prayer will be answered.

"Lord Jesus, Sustain My Spirit"

The eighth question is founded on Acts 7:59: "And they stoned Stephen, calling upon God, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."

The Greek word for spirit here is pneuma. In the 60th verse we read, "And when he had said this, he fell asleep." Stephen fell asleep or died. We have shown already that the dead are unconscious between death and the resurrection. Paul says, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then they who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished" (1 Cor. 15:18). Job in speaking of himself exclaims: "O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave, that thou wouldst keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldst appoint me a set time, and remember me" (Job 14:13)! Then he asks the question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" It is very plain if the man did not die, he could not live again; it would be just a continuation of the same life. Job, however, answers the question for us: "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come: Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee; thou wilt have a deside to the work of thine hand." So the days of the appointed time which Job had to wait were to be spent in the grave, and the appointed time until the Lord would call and Job would answer, would be until "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." So it will be with Stephen: he will sleep until the Lord comes and calls him from the grave to the glorious change of eternal life. So Stephen's petition would logically be, that the Lord Jesus might reserve for him the breath of life, until that day, when the Lord would call, and the saints of God would rise triumphant from the tomb. Stephen does not request that the Lord would receive him, but that the Lord would receive his spirit, something possessed by him. The Emphatic Diaglott in a foot note makes the following explanation of this passage: "Sexai (the Greek word rendered "receive") may also be rendered sustain or support. Booth in his Lexicon of primitive Greek words gives this as one of the significations of the word. The prayer of Stephen then would read, "Lord Jesus, sustain my spirit, or assist me to suffer."

You ask me to give my opinion of the paragraphs you marked in the paper you sent in your letter. In the paper referred to he questions the authority of the Old Testament writers on this subject. In the explanations I have given of the preceding questions, you will notice that references have been given from both the Old and New Testament Scriptures. They do not conflict in doctrine, as both were given by divine inspiration, and the Old Testament is equal in authority with the New. 2 Tim. 3:16 Paul says: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." In Acts 24:14 Paul says, "Believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets" Heb. 1:1: "God who at sundry times, and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son," so it was the word of God whether spoken by the prophets in the Old Testament, or by his Son and apostles in the New Testament. In Luke 24:27 the Savior quoted from Moses and all the prophets concerning himself. He thought they were good authority, and I believe it better to take his word for it, than the word of the man who wrote the pamphlet. "Let God be true, but every man a liar" (Rom. 3:4).

A. L. Corbaley.

DO NOT WORRY

"Therefore I hated life, for all is vanity and vexation of spirit" (Eccl. 2:17).

Worrying is something which brings irritating care and anxiety. All people are not alike. Some parents, when they see their child associating with those that are going the downward road to destruction, "worry;" and they are so constituted they cannot help it. They have such love for it they cannot bear the thought of their child going to destruction; they cannot sit idly by and not worry; and it is right to worry when the one we love is drifting away.

The wise man said, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it. " Such is not always the case: our hearts are called to bleed over the wayward son or daughter. They cause us great anxiety, which is worry. We cannot help it, and we think if the stern laws that God gave the Israelites were enforced today, it would redeem many (Deut. 21:18).

In our daily walk and work, we encounter many things that worry. What kind of a school would the teacher have of he did not strive to teach the pupil to improve his mind, and be good morally; and when he sees his efforts are not heeded, it worries him. When the farmer sows his grain and his living is depending on that crop, it is a source of anxiety to him until it is secured. "Do not worry." Can the average man or woman that have themselves and others to support. sit idly by with folded hands and not worry? No, they cannot! One of the first commands was to work, and to Adam and all of his race has this law sounded in our ears: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return to the ground." Paul in writing to Timothy says: "If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." Many of us do worry when we are compelled to work.

But we think our lesson is intended to teach us to live such Christian lives that we need not worry for the future. First, we must obey Christ, repent of our sins, believe in God's plan of salvation, accept Christ as the one through whom God gives eternal life. It is a fact we cannot get eternal life in any other way. We must be baptized into Christ, and become an heir to the promise. Then if we are sincere, and believe the true gospel, the gospel taught by Christ, Paul and others, then our names are recorded in heaven. And if we do nothing to cause our names to be blotted out, and we die in Christ, we may be assured that when he comes to earth he will raise to eternal life all those who are recorded. If recorded, why worry?

A WEDDING

The many friends of our young sister, Miss Mabel Chaplin, of Arkansas City, Kans., and also of our brother John Fisk, Jr., of Sherwood, Oregon, will no doubt be surprised and pleased to learn that on Nov. 14th, at Portland, Ore. they were united in holy wedlock, at which service Mr. Barrick officiated. They left immediately for Sherwood, Oregon, where Mr. Fisk has a neat little home prepared for his bride. Sister Mabel is a daughter of Brother and Sister A. J. Chaplin, of Arkansas City, Kans., and Brother Fisk is the son of Brother John Fisk, also of Arkansas City, Kans.

Brother and Sister Fisk are both bright intelligent young people. Sister Fisk, for a number of years, was book-keeper and stenographer, and very efficient in her line; Brother Fisk, as a teacher in the public schools of Kansas and Oregon, has been very successfull; and best of all, they are both firm believers in the Abrahamic faith and are earnest Christians, and they can walk together in Christian love down life's pathway.

LOVE

What is love? Love is the fulfilling of the law (Rom. 13:10). If any one loves the world and its various vices, does he fulfill the law? Yes: What law? the law of destruction. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. And the world, and lust of the world passeth away: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever (1 John 2:15,17).

If any one joins a church that teaches a "false gospel," and believes it with all his heart, and is very enthuseastic in proclaiming it, does he fulfill the law? Yes, the same law, that the devotees of the dance hall, card table, etc., do. "The law of destruction."

God is love (1 John 4:8-16). What is the duty of man to God? Love him and keep his commandments (Eccl. 12:13; Deut. 10:12-22). When man does this, does he fulfill the law? Yes; the law of salvation. Salvation is of God, and if man loves God's plan of salvation, and obeys him he will be saved. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace, shall be with you all. Amen (2 Cor. 13:11).

The end of Biblical teaching is thus expressed in Prov. 22:20,21: "Have not I written to thee excellent things in counsels and knowledge, that I might make thee know the certainty of the words of truth; that thou mightest answer the words of truth to them that send unto thee?" These words, if they are taken as an expression of the purpose of the Scriptures, and the end of their teaching, inculcate the thought that it is our priviledge to attain a certain knowledge of truth; and that we are fitted to give intelligent answers to those who send to enquire of us. Compare Solomon's words in Proverbs with Luke 1:4, where they are substantially quoted; and 1 Pet. 3:15, where the same doctrine is taught. Doubtless Peter had this proverb of Solomon's in mind when he penned the words of 1 Pet. 3:15.

THE DESCENDING ANGEL

An Exposition of Revelations 20:1

Brother Huggins:

Will you please harmonize Rev. 11:18;Dan.12:2; and John 5:29, with Rev. 20. The first three passages explain that the dead, both the righteous and the wicked, are rewarded at the resurrection, while Rev. 20:1 says that none but the saints are resurrected at Christ's coming.

Your Brother and Sister, striving to know the truth more fully,

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Byers.

Editor's Reply

No one can read Rev. 11:18; Dan. 12:2, and John 5:29, with a mind free from strain of theory and prejudice, and not agree with Brother and Sister Byers that by three witnesses of infallible authority is proven that the dead, "both the righteous and wicked," are rewarded at the same time. The kingdoms of this world become "the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ" (Rev. 11:15), at the advent of Jesus; and at the same time is the "time of the dead" (verse 18). The sounding of the seventh trumpet (verse 15) brings the kingdom and the resurrection. There are only seven trumpets; the seventh is therefore "the last trump" (1 Cor. 15:52), which brings in the "time of the dead" for the righteous admittedly. Not for them only, however, for after our text speaks of "the time of the dead," it adds a description of who is meant by them: "Thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great;" and "saints from the least to the greatest," both living and dead, are then rewarded. The same text with the same authority, cleanness and force, teaches that the corrupters of the earth are "destroyed" at the same time. Without one doubt the reward of the righteous and the punishment of the wicked are simultaneously bestowed.

But there are "none but the saints resurrected at Christ's coming; the 20th of Revelations says so," asserts the objector. Well, if you read the chapter closely and critically you will find that the apostle gives no inuendo, inference or hintlet that "none but the saints are resurrected at Christ's coming;" these words and the idea expressed by them are not in Rev. 20. In this chapter the seer does not see the resurrection of any one, good or bad. There were no chapter divisions in the original Greek copies of the New Testament; and while they are useful and convenient in our copies, they sometimes exert an influence upon the unsuspecting reader that is detrimental to a clear understanding of the sacred text, rupturing what should be held in closest continuity. Rev. 20 is a marked example of what we mean. Instead of reading the chapter as independant of former chapters, and as abruptly introducing the Lord's coming, the resurrection of the dead etc., the word "and" in the first verse connects the 20th chapter with the foregoing 19th chapter. The angel descending from heaven in Rev. 20:1, alreary has in his hand the "keys of the abyss." Now a "key" in symbolic prophecy is representative of power to open and shut. This same angel in Rev. 18:1, is said to have "great power; and the earth was lighted with his glory." This angel, representative of Christ and his glorified body, has already been raised from the dead (Rev. 11: 18)), he is already singing redemption's psalm (verse 9); he already has the "key" or "great power" to dethrone and bind with a chain the kings and potentates of the dragon,beast and his image; but as yet he is not reigning on the earth. "We shall (not are reigning) on the earth" (Rev. 5:10); but not till his "great power" subjugates all hostile dominions. With a key or power in their hands they can open or shut and none can hinder (Rev. 3:7). Christ has already come, and liberated his people from the tomb with this key (Rev. 1:18); and they now, possessed with "great power," will reign on the earth soon as they have open a door in the heavens of the political firmament or apocalyptic "heavens" (Rev.4:1). This opening in the firmament of political power they accomplished by destroying Babylon, the Beast and the False Prophet (Rev. 17:18,19). After this work of changing the kingdoms of this world into the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ (Rev.11:15), the angel of "great power" erects the throne of David in Jerusalem (Jer. 3:17); and from this place of authority he descends "from heaven" (Rev. 20:1).

When potentates leave their capitals on warlike expeditions, they are said to "descend" upon the countries they invade. So with this angel: he descends from the heaven of his government at Jerusalem upon the territories of the Dragon, the Beast and False Prophet with a key of "great power;" destruction is inflicted by his terrible and invincible hosts, and the remnants that escape being made food at "the supper of the great God" (Rev. 19:17), are now locked by the key or bound with the chain of the descending angel. No wicked are in the picture, not because they have not been raised; no righteous are seen by the prophet in the act of being raised from the dead; not because they have not been raised, but for the simple reason that the scenes of this vision are all post-resurrectional. The resurrection of the righteous and the wicked, the destruction of the ungodly, the marriage of the Lamb, have already occurred; therefore none of these historical events appear in the vision of the reign of Christ and his glorified brethren for one thousand years. But more comments next week.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother Huggins:

Enclosed find post office order for $5.00 as a Thanksgiving offering for the Linotype Fund.

Our Master knows our faith, and our faith must be shown by our works. We are so near the goal that I feel we must reach it by Thanksgiving. When our hearts are full of gratitude, let us offer a prayer for the things that have made us glad, and let love be our aim.

Sincerely, Ettie Fry.

Brother Huggins:

Sister S. Roxana Wince sent me in a letter a few days ago the following lines—of whose authorship I know nothing—but I think they are too good to be cast aside. They are in part as follows:

"I send you two more Harvest Home offerings, praising him from whom all blessings flow.

His hand has sown the skies with stars,
Setting his thoughts in gold,
Crowning this nation's life and ours
With blessings manifold.
His love, his truth, his care
Are higher than our needs,
And deeper than our prayers."

C. A. Goss.

Editor The Restitution:

We always enjoy reading the reports of meetings in other places, especially if they have good news to tell. Our little class here at Burlington, Kan., is again rejoicing over another addition to our number —this time a young man by the name of Carl Gilbert. Brother W. L. Crowe, of Chanute Kan., has been with us again for a week's meeting, with above result, and others are interested. The brethren and sisters feel much strengthened. One cannot listen to Bro. Crowe's deep, spiritual talks without being built up in the most holy faith. His last message to us was "Rejoice in in the Lord, and again I say, Rejoice." And dear brethren, why should we not rejoice? we who are expecting our blessed Lord at any moment. "Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is." "And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch."

LINOGRAPH FUND CORRECTIONS

By one or another of the many ways in which printers are prone to error, our issue of Nov. 7th failed to give credit to Minnie Rogers for a donation of 50 cents. To check with the accounts of the Treasurer, that week should have shown total as $1485.00 instead of $1484.50, as appeared.

The issue of Nov. 14th gave Emeline Stiers credit for $10.00 instead of $1.00, but the footing was correct as it appeared.

Another error in the same issue gave Brother A. E. Shaw credit in this Fund for $21.00 instead of $20.00. This error was caused by misreading his letter. The $1.00 was intended for two hymn books. Total reduction of last week's total, 50 cts.

Though great care has been exercised to keep accurate records of all donations to the Fund, both on the part of the Editor and our Treasurer, Brother Goss, still some little "mix ups" have occurred. We ask the brethren to be patient with us, and bear in mind that we are giving voluntary service and our own time to the work after the usual and ordinary day's work is done.

Again we ask that all remittances be made to The Restitution Publishing Co., whether money orders or checks. Attention to this little detail will save both the Editor and Treasurer some annoyance and frequent delays in getting our accounts made up.

Lesson XIII

Subject, Eternal Life

Memory Text

"The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23).

1. "And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever; therefore the Lord sent him forth from the garden of Eden" (Gen. 3:22,23; 5:24).

2. "The blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality" (2 Tim. 6:15,16).

3. "Who will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor and immortality (incorruption R. V.) eternal life" (Rom. 2:6).

4. "In hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie, promised before the world began" (Tit. 1:2).

5. "Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life" (1 Tim. 6:12).

6. "This mortal must put on immortality" (1 Cor. 15:5).

7. "And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life" (1 John 2:25).

8. "And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life" (1 John 5:11,12).

Practical Truths

Is man by nature immortal, that is, possessed of unending life? If not, is there any means whereby he can obtain power to live forever; how, when and where? These practical questions are answered in this lesson.

We learn that man through sin was driven from the "tree of life," whose fruit gave the power to "live forever;" that God only hath immortality; that it is a gift of God; a subject of promise; to be sought for, hoped for, and put on; that the only immortal Being, the Father, has given this life to the Son, and the Son transmits through the "incorruptible seed" to all who receive him by faith; that without this union with God through Christ, there is no possible way for a mortal to put on immortality; that sin leads to death, and there cannot possibly be such a creature as an immortal sinner.

Notes on the Lesson

Sin.—Unrighteousness; conduct at variance with Divine law; that which is opposed to godliness (God-likeness). Its first manifestation was disobedience of law, and the penalty or wages of necessity followed (Gen. 3). Sin is a moral disease; and as a cancer in the body will inevitably destroy it, so sin, if not cleansed, will bring eternal ruin. An antidote for this moral poison has been provided (John 1:29; 1 John 1:7; Matt. 26:28; Rev. 1:5).

Gift.—As the effect of sin without an antidote is eternal death, eternal life comes to mankind who are all sinners as an absolute, unearned free gift (Rom. 5 and 6 for the Apostle's argument leading to a conclusion in this text).

1. Tree of Life.—A provided means for the continuance of life. Through disobedience man was driven from it lest he might by eating become an immortal sinner. Mark the words "live forever." It is sometimes taught, and without any valid foundation however, that eternal life in its Biblical sense means eternal happiness, and that all mankind has the power of endless existence by nature. The Greek word zoe translated life is used in classical literature to denote existence, and it is presumption to give it a different meaning in the Scripture. By banishment from the tree of life our first parents lost the power of living forever, of perpetuating their existence. This right to partake of the fruit of the tree of life is to be restored to overcomers (Rev. 2:7).

2. God only hath immortality.—This term "immortal" is never applied to the natural man. The power of endless existence is a Divine attribute, and if man would obtain it he must go to God in the appointed way.

3. Seek for Eternal Life.—A course of godly conduct apart from sin brings its reward of eternal life, and with it glory and honor. This is the divinely appointed way of seeking. That which we seek for we do not possess.

4. An Object of Hope.—"What a man seeth why doth he hope for?" Hope is based on faith, and faith rests upon the promises of God which cannot fail.

5. To be Seized.—Eternal life is a subject of warfare, the pursuit of which requires all of a soldier's courage, fortitude, and armour (Eph. 6:11-17). How foolish to thus contend for something already possessed!

6. Putting on Immortality.—As a new garment, immortality is to take the place of mortality. incorruption to succeed corruption, at the resurrection day. 2 Cor. 5:1-4, shows how mortality is to be swallowed up of life.

7. Promise of Eternal Life.—Would God promise eternal life to those who already possess it?

8. Eternal Life Conditional.—Jesus is the way, the truth, and the life (John 14:6); the resurrection and the life (John 11:25); brings life more abundantly (John 10:10). As a sinless being he is free from the law of sin and death, and has received from God, the "fountain of life," the same self-existent life (John 5:26). By union with Christ we become partakers of that life (John 6:27, 33, 40. 50, 51, 68; 14:19).

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. Law of Sin and Death.—What is sin? What effect followed the first sin? Without a remedy what effect will inevitably follow a life of sin? What precaution was taken following the first sin? Will access again be given to the tree of life? Is there an immortal sinner? Is there a way of escape from the law of sin and death (Rom. 8:2)? Is there an antidote for sin? What is it?

2. God the Fountain of Life.—Is man by nature immortal? Is there an immortal Being? Are the terms "eternal life," "immortal," "immortality," "incorruptible," or their equivalents, ever applied in the Scriptures to the natural man? Are these terms ever applied to the soul or spirit of man? Who is the fountain of life (Psa. 36:9)?

3. Christ the Way of Life.—Has God given to any one the power of eternal life? To whom? Will Christ give this life to others? Is there any other possible way of life? (Acts 4:12. for "saved" Syriac reads "live.") Where are we told that Christ is our life (Col. 3:4)?

4. Called, through the Gospel.—Through what great and precious promises may we be partakers of the Divine nature (2 Pet. 1:4)? What is the power of God unto salvation (Rom. 1:16)? Why is it called the gospel of Christ? Can we receive the blessing promised in the gospel while living a life of sin? Do we regard repentance toward God, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and baptism in water, as conditions to be complied with on the part of all men in order to obtain eternal life?

REVERENCE

By S. Roxana Wince

Going back now, to the allegation that "we cannot be sure that the other laws beside the ten were given of God, because of the many pagan ideas mixed among them," let us question the doubters as to what those many pagan ideas were? I have turned over the leaves of my Bible in vain to find them. Is it in the offerings and sacrifices that these ideas are found? If so I retort that animal sacrifice was instituted in the garden of Eden, just after the fall. Not else could a sin covering have been given to Adam and Eve, in the coat of skins that the Lord made to clothe them (Gen. 3:21). Not else would Abel have brought the firstlings of his flock and the fat thereof; nor would Cain have been told that "a sin offering couched at the door." There were no pagans, or pagan ideas then. The pagan idea of sacrifice was borrowed from the ritual of Holy Writ, and not that of Holy Writ from Paganism.

Nor was Jethro a pagan, for "he rejoiced for all the goodness which the Lord had done for Israel, whom he had delivered out of the hands of the Egyptians;" and Jethro said: "Blessed be the Lord who hath delivered you," * * * * "Now I know that the Lord is greater than all gods, for in the thing wherein they dealt proudly he is above them."

"And Jethro, Moses' father-in-law took a burnt offering and sacrifices for God; and Aaron came and all the elders of Israel to eat bread with Moses' father-in-law before God." a thing he would not have been permitted to do had not he himself been a priest of the Most High God, or at least, one of his devoted followers.

The discoverers of pagan ideas in the Pentateuch may point to the making of the golden calf, but what is there in that episode to show that Moses had the remotest thought of mixing the pagan ideas of the Egyptians and Babylonians with the theocratic laws and ritual of Israel? He knew that the image of a three year old calf, though it might be looked upon by his people as a symbol of the divine presence, was in reality, no such thing; that it was only the god Apis of the Nile, and that the making of it was in direct violation of their God-given code. God had sanctioned no such symbol of his presence. The calf had nothing to do with bringing them out of the land of Egypt, nor could it lead them on to Canaan. Aaron might call the feast held in its honor, "a feast to the Lord," but Moses looked upon it as a horrid orgy to an idol god; and to show his hatred and contempt for the thing melted it into ingots, ground these to fine dust, mixed this dust with water, and made the people drink it.

That was the way Moses mixed pagan ideas with the Pentateuch! Israel had sinned a great sin in making them gods of gold, and retribution followed swiftly; for there fell of them about 3000 all blotted out of God's book; and this, with the threat of future visitation, and with the refusal to accompany them any farther on the way to the promised land. The angel of his presence might go with them; he would not. So if disobedient irreverence of "the word spoken by angels" "receives just recompense of reward," in every instance, "how shall we escape who neglect so great salvation spoken by the Lord, and confirmed by them that heard him." And how shall we escape if we treat any part of that word, whether in the Old or New Testaments, as if it were a mere football made for us to play with?

God has said to Israel: "I am the Lord thy God. Thou shalt have no other gods before me"—in my presence, beside, or except me. "Thou shalt not make any graven image, thou shalt not bow down thyself to them." They were to make no mention of the name of other gods, were not to "seethe a kid in its mother's milk," eat blood, leave blood uncovered from animals slain for food, or sow mingled seed in their fields, because all these things the pagans around them practiced with magical rites, that the gods might give them fruitful seasons. God sought by the hand of Moses to eliminate all pagan ideas from his Book, instead of mixing them therewith. Blood was "the life of the flesh:" it must be treated with reverence. God had said to Israel, "I have given it to you to make an atonement for your souls." What about those men who drink blood as a cure for tuberculosis? God allowed but one case of it, and that was in the way of sacrifice.

No Israelitish child might be dedicated to Moloch, the calf headed god of the Amorites. To do this, was to profane the name of God, by giving his name to a god that was no god. It was the custom of these children of Lot to build a fire within the idol statue, and then, shake their babies. This was called "passing them through the fire," they, superstitiously thinking that the little ones would not then die in infancy. God would not have any such pagan ideas mixed with the religion of his people; so he ordered that the man who gave any of his seed to Moloch, should be stoned to death, he being pushed backward from a precipice on to a large stone, and if not killed, other stones were dashed down till the work was complete.

Pagan ideas indeed! That was the way God dealt with such ideas. Every attempt to practice the idolatrous rites of the heathen was sternly frowned down and rigorously punished. There were abominable customs and appalling vices connected with pagan worship. And so hopelessly had these customs and vices corrupted the inhabitants of the land of Canaan, that there was no remedy, no healing for them, "their cup of iniquity was full." To save the rest of the world extermination must come. Had not God safe-guarded his people by allowing no mixing of pagan ideas with their law and ritual, and by the most stringent statutes against every rebellious offender, there would have been not a single nation left on earth today to stand up for liberty, righteousness and truth. It takes drastic measures to stay gangrene and to stop the flow of incestuous blood.

But despite of all that God did to save his people from being corrupted and destroyed by "pagan ideas," the baneful work of irreverence and disobedience went on. Neither the Ten Tribed House of Israel, now the Two Tribed House of Judah, hearkened to the word of the Lord, and because of their sin, were cast out of their land to suffer "the seven times" punishment threatened in Leviticus 26:18. 2520 years of punishment for adopting pagan gods, ideas and practices, and forsaking the God who had been their refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble! A fearful medicine!

The 2520 years expired for the Ten Tribed House, in 1800 A. D. Judah's "seven times" runs out when Gentile Times are fulfilled. Thank God the end is so near! God is reckoning with the nations now for their irreverent treatment of and blasphemous rejection of his word. They have proscribed it, burnt it, criticised it, cursed it, and "would have none of his counsel;" and now he who sitteth in the heavens "laughs at their calamity," and "mocks at their fear."

I tremble, I fear, I protest against all irreverent criticism of the word of my God. The lesson drawn from Israel's story is a warning to me of what will come in the future from the godless tampering with the Bible by faithless shepherds. There will be just such a state of affairs as Jesus foretold—an absence of faith that will be appalling. O that we who are looking for the Master may hold fast our faith, may keep our feet firmly set on the Rock, looking ever away to the promised reward! Let us watch; let us study; let us keep much on our knees. Hebrews 10:23.

THE INSPIRATION OF BEING NORMAL

There is a man up the street who works hard every day. He is habitually courteous, he is not nervous, he does not avoid people. I can tell by the way he says good-bye to his family that he is no ogre in the house, but a beloved father whose return is already anticipated. This man does not complain of his job; he is too manly to be envious, too occupied with the day's work to be uncertain of the here and now. He represents the class that we are told is being "exploited." I have never seen the doctor's carriage at his door. He and his family are well. They work; afterwards they enjoy themselves and sleep in a way no prophets, least of all the celibate oracle, ever slept. I was sharply conscious the other day in passing the house that this laborer was a continual source of inspiration to me. I have an affection for him. We should have little to say to each other if we met. The weather, the tax rates, and chances of candidates at election would exhaust us. But what the prophets prophesy in anguish of soul, and elaborate ideally in apocalyptic visions, this man is.

A BRIGHT PAGE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Tidbits of Pleasant and Useful Information

Gathered from Everywhere

"Those friends thou hast
And their adoption tried
Grapple them to thy heart,
With hooks of steel."

The crime of the nation against the individual is not that it demands his sacrifices against his will,but that it claims a life of eternal significance for ends that have no eternal value.

The worship of science is a religious mania, and its fruits are like the fruits of a religious mania. The world is familiar with them: torture, persecution, bloodshed, indiscriminate assassination, and the sins of the spirit which are far worse than real murder.

Is the whisker a sign of irrepressible manliness, or is it merely a decoration, an ornament? Is it, to change Shakespeare slightly, an excrescence of strength? An increment of valor? Judicious observation and experience lead me to think this is far from being the case.

If the law were to edict that man and wife should never be together for more than six months in the year, it would be broken every day, and men and women would stand hunger and stripes to come together for twelve months in twelve. If love of home were made a crime, a family life would arise more touching than anything Queen Victoria ever dreamed.

To the charge that the study of literature is not an intellectual discipline, we can answer that the great masterpieces of literature bring us face to face, no less than do the greatest philosophical theories, with the profoundest questions of human destiny. The problems presented alike by philosophy and by tragedy, concerning human fate, human responsibility, challenge the intellect as far as it can go, and further.

We need songs here in America, but our poets seem better able to write everything else. I have a friend who thinks that they are too refined or too good. "How," says he, "can we expect our poets to be passionate if they haven't any passions? How can they sing love lyrics if they are too refined to admit that they have ever been in love? How can they lament with plausibility if they have never done anything to lament over? The Heines,the Villons the Burnses of the world have been great lovers and great sinners; it is they who can touch the popular heart."

Religion a Joy

Religion does not consist in drawing a long face and heaving sighs as we pass on the journey of life, but is brightness and joy, the outcome of a Christian career.—Brother Titman.

"How can I be sure that I love Christ," asked a young girl. "Do something to please him every day," was the wise answer; "and then he will be sure of it, which is better."

WAYS IN WHICH A MINISTER CAN KILL

The Mid-week Meeting

I know these are infallible specifics for killing a prayer meeting, for I have tried them all myself.

1. By wool-gathering. Let a minister come into the prayer-meeting without knowing what he is going to say, and the atmosphere is chilled. When the subject of the meeting is one in which he seems to be feeling his way as he proceeds, instead of being one which has been kindled into white heat in his study and baptized with an unction from above, the people will set their weather-gage accordingly. Icicles do not generate heat.

2. By "occupying the time." Some ministers do not open a subject; they exhaust it. Their expositions are so studied and complete as to leave nothing for the brethren to say. The lay-brother sees all his thunder stolen as one after another of the points of his pastor's address is unfolded; and each one said so much better than he thinks he can say it, that he is dumb. Nobody but Boswell ever liked to play the role of an echo; but to have anybody play the role of Boswell to you, it would be necessary that you should be as wise, oracular, and pithy as Johnson. Open the subject briefly, suggestively; and at the close of the meeting add whatever you choose to give completeness to the theme.

3. By unfortunate musical selections. Eschew the somnolent music of the Mason-Hastings school. Run from the thin and ungrammatical pieces of the "Gospel Hymn" variety, so irritating or nauseous to the musical sense. Shun compositions which are all accidentals and no melody, a bewildering indefiniteness of excruciating harmony. Music in a prayer meeting should promote the devotional spirit.

4. By scolding the people. Is the prayer-meeting slimly attended? What matter! the Lord is present. Numbers didn't make Gideon's strength. Don't scold. One can believe the old miracle when he remembers how many prayer-meetings have been slain by the "jaw-bone of an ass"! Radiate heat, scatter sunshine, wreathe in smiles when you are the pastor of the church at Laodicea. Be patient, hopeful, cheerful.

5. By nagging the people to take part. If the people haven't come to prayer-meeting with a full head of devotional steam on, he labors in vain who tries to get it up there and then. Instincts of devotion and motives of service are not manufactured. An interesting prayer-meeting depends on antecedent conditions. "Pauses" are only prevented by increasing spiritual culture among the people, by a little forethought and ready tact; they are only the more embarrassing when the subject of remark.

These directions are all ingredients of the infallible recipe for having a poor prayer-meeting. It will work every time.—DeWitt Mallary.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Two lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction" and "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates for baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

"Denying the Faith"

A sermon. Both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"The Death of Christ"

A doctrinal sermon, setting forth scripturally the reality of Christ's death. 3 cents each, or 12 for 25 cents.

"Paradise Lost; Paradise Regained"

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

"The Bible: Its Principles and Texts"

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor, the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers: more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volume. $1.10 the copy.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 68 CLEVELAND, O, DECEMBER 12, 1916 NUMBER 51

THAT WORTHY NAME

Alice B. Curtis

Thy name is like a diadem o'erset with jewels rare,
Most precious to thy people it is found,
'Neath sorrow's crushing burden we breathe that name
in prayer,
And bless thy name when peace and joy abound.

High, high above all other names thy name is like a star,
The star of hope to Adam's fallen race,
And all who call upon thy name in lands both near and far
Shall find in that sweet name full saving grace.

Thy name like precious ointment sheds a perfume
o'er the soul,
Though life's trials may be pressing thick and fast:
It sooths the fretted spirit like a grand anthem's roll,
Can uplift the heart from discords of the past.

No other name is given whereby we must be saved;
In thy name the Jew and Gentile both must trust,
If we now walk in Jesus' name who once were sin-
enslaved,
We shall share the resurrection of the just.

And whether few or many if in his name we go,
We need not fear the angry hosts of sin:
In that name we set up banners all undaunted, for we know,
With our Leader we the victory shall win.

He will call his name upon us, that holy, holy name;
We shall be his people, he will be our God;
He has given us the promise if we share his toil and shame,
We shall reign with him in Eden's bright abode.

We are watching for his coming, when we'll see him face to face
And his blessed name we'll evermore hold fast;
We will surely win the crown of life through his most wondrous grace,
And our praises through eternity shall last.

IMMORTALITY AND THE PROPHETS

S. H. Thomas

Last night in earnest meditation. I in my humble lodgings sat, my Bible on my knee. In vain had been my search, and lifting up my tearful eyes to him who knoweth all things, even the end from the beginning, I raised my thoughts in silent prayer: "Oh God, maker of heaven and earth: thou who can toss the mountains as a ball, or gather the sea in the hollow of thy hand: give me light upon this great question of immortality, and of the mystery that stands behind the portals of the grave. Is death but a friend that sets free a captive soul? or is he the dread enemy of our race, who holds beneath his iron hand, secure in lands of forgetfulness the great, the good, the pure, the noble, and likewise the low and beastly of our kind? Oh that I had lived in the days of the blessed Christ, or the holy prophets of old, that I might enquire of them touching this most vital question."

And as I prayed behold a wondrous thing did happen. The narrow walls of my lowly room faded away, and in their stead a chamber that might grace the New Jerusalem. The magnificence was beyond the power of discription; its ceiling like the heavens, and set with blazing diamonds like the stars. Its walls, and balconies of burnished gold, and studded thick with dazzling gems, and precious stones. And as I marvelled at the change, methought I heard strains of music, sweeter far than ever heard by mortal ear. Nearer and yet nearer came this heavenly harmony, and as I gazed in speechless rapture for the source of this marvelous melody, I saw (and falling prostrate at the sight) a heavenly host advancing through the portals of the temple. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and all the early prophets stood before me, and king David also. Yes; and Peter, Paul, and others—all were there, one vast and awesome pageant. And at its head stood Jesus Christ, my Lord and king, his eyes as flaming fire, his countenance kind, and gentle, yet as the sun when he doth shine in his brightness. At this noble and apalling sight, my speech forsook me, and I hid my face in fear, when lo, I heard a voice sweet and low like running waters, or as the voice of spring say:

"Son of man, thy supplication has come up before me. Thy prayer is heard. Behold Jesus, and the prophets are before thee. Cast aside therefore thy fears, rise and question them."

And as I heard these gracious words, behold the strength returned to my palsied limbs, my trembling tongue regained its speech, and standing on my feet, I spake as follows: "Oh Jesus, Lord, and king of all the earth! Be it known to thee and thy noble associates, that much discord, and strife, exists among the children of men, concerning the state of the dead, and the nature of the soul, and I am come to thee for knowledge. Is it a fact, that the soul is immortal by nature, and remains alive and conscious, after the change which we mortals call 'death'? Is it a fact, dear Lord, that death is not death, but endless life in bliss, or misery, as the children of men do teach?"

Son of man, the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life; In death there is no remembrance of thee, in the grave, who shall give thee thanks (Psa.6:5); God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him shall not perish, but have everlasting life (John 3:16). But be it known unto you, that these rewards and punishments, are not meted out until the resurrection morn. The state of all the dead, between death and that great day being that of forgetfulness. A peaceful, dreamless, sleep: marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in which all that are in the grave shall hear my voice and come forth. They that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of condemnation (John 5:28)."

"King David, thou sweet singer of Israel, what is thy testimony concerning the dead? Are our loved ones who have gone before, now playing on golden harps before the throne of God?"

"When man dies; his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish (Psa. 146:6). In death there is no remembrance of thee (God), in the grave, who shall give thee thanks? (Psa. 6:5). For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything (Eccl. 9:5)."
anything (Eccl. 9:5)."

"Then king David, you do not expect to go immediately at your death, to your reward?"

"Son of man, as for me, 'I shall be satisfied, when I awake in his likeness' (Psa. 17:15).

'Paul thou great apostle of the Gentiles, what is thy testimony concerning the soul? Has man an immortal part, which therefore cannot die, and which even God himself cannot destroy, but by virtue of its undying nature must of necessity continue in conscious existence after the dread calamity we men call death?"

"Mortal man, I call heaven and aerth to witness that Jehovah, God, the only potentate, the king of kings, and Lord of lords, He only hath immortality (1 Tim. 6:15,16)."

"Oh Paul, most reverend sir, dost thou tell us then that death ends all, that the dread sleep is endless slumber?

"Nay, nay, my son, 'For as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive' (1 Cor. 15:21). Be it known unto thee ,that the only hope of all mankind rests upon a resurrection of the dead, for 'if there be no resurrection of the dead, then they which sleep in Christ are perished' (1 Cor. 15:18)."

"I crave your pardon, Paul, but if they who sleep in Christ be now in heaven, and playing on golden harps before the throne of God, as men teach, how can'st thou say of them, 'they are perished if there be no resurrection of the dead?' Wherein would they profit by a resurrection of this vile body of sin and death, and a second union therewith, if their lives be already cast in such pleasant places?"

"Son of man, as has been said, so say I, 'the say I, 'The dead do not praise the Lord, neither any that go down into silence' (Psa. 115:17); 'For there is no knowledge, nor wisdom, nor device, in the grave whither thou goest.' The children of men do greatly err in this matter. The state of the dead between death and the resurrection, is a calm a dreamless sleep, and its duration, though it may span long centuries, is to the comprehension of the subject, but the flash of a sunbeam, the twinkling of an eye."

"Solomon, thou son of David, upon whose kingly brow doth wisdom sit enthroned, give us of thy knowledge concerning this matter."

"Son of man, as has been said, so say I, 'the liv-dead know not anything' (Eccl. 9:5). Their work has ceased; no device have they, nor knowledge, nor wisdom. These possessions belong to life; death is forgetfulness, a land of darkness, as darkness itself, without order, and where the light is as darkness."

"Father Job, thou who art famed among men for thy patience and loving kindness, tell me, I pray thee. Do God's people take on a mantle at death? Do they still watch over the destinies of their children and loved ones on earth, while enthroned in the high courts of heaven, as men teach?"

"Son of man, your teachers are blind, and do greatly err, for as king David has said, 'man dieth and returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish.' 'His sons cometh to honor, and he knoweth it not; they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them' (Job 14:21)."

"Isaiah, thou faithful prophet of the most high God, what is thy testimony concerning the state of the dead? Is it a fact they are not dead, but alive in heaven, singing praises before the throne of God?"

"The grave cannot praise thee (God); death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit, cannot hope for thy truth' (Isa.38:18). Son of man, the prophets of God know nothing of an immortal soul in man, as a present possession, nor of conscious existence for the dead, between death and the resurrection. Let your sages and wise men seek wisdom at the feet of a little child, which mourns the loss of a fond and loving mother and refuses to be comforted, because she is not. Mortal man say not to those who mourn, 'The dead still live.' Seek not with pagan lies and groundless fables to comfort those who weep. But rather point with joyful hope to resurrection's glorious morn, and shout with us the gladsome truth, 'Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for the earth shall cast out the dead' (Isa. 26:19).

Then, he who is my king, raised up his voice and said: 'Fear not; I am the first, and the last: I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hades, and of death' (Rev. 1:17,18). Behold, with these 'keys,' I will come in due time, and open wide the doors of the grave, and let down the bars of hades. I will say to death, 'Give up;' and to the enemy, 'Hold these not back.' And my voice they shall heed, and come forth, my sons and my daughters, out from the land of silence, gloom and forgetfulness; out from under the hand of the enemy shall they come with leaps shouts of joy and gladness. For have not I said? O grave, I will be thy destruction?"

And as he spoke these words of hope, for death cursed man, I closed my eyes in silent praise and adoration; and when again I gazed, behold, the vision grand had passed. Again I sat within my humble cot, my Bible open on my knee: I had been dreaming.

SOME GENERAL FACTS CONCERNING THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD

D. C. Robison

In the Corinthian letter Paul states that, we preach Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God (1 Cor. 1:24). This evidently is the answer to the question, "Where shall wisdom be found, and where is the place of understanding" (Job 28:12)? The writer gives an answer also in verse 28: "Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil, is understanding." This is the wisdom that bringeth salvation.

The wisdom referred to by Paul and Job is found in the gospel of the kingdom of God. The apostles were sent out under the commission to preach this gospel to every creature, and to baptize those who believed it. To them is promised salvation. Those who believe not are to be condemned. John states that he that believeth not in him is condemned, because he believeth not in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

With these Scriptures before us we are privileged to state some general facts concerning the gospel of the kingdom of God. Mark states that Jesus went about all Galilee teaching in the synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God. To analyze this text in the spirit of wisdom, is to believe it unto salvation. To do this we must determine the meaning of the word "gospel" as used in the text. In a general way gospel means "good news, glad tidings." In a limited sense it means much more. The word "gospel" is first limited by the phrase "of the kingdom." The word "kingdom" is also limited by the phrase "of God." The word "gospel" is further limited by the phrase "of the kingdom of God." If we accept the statement made by Jesus in John 6:63, we receive the text as spirit and life words. It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life. This necessitates that we search the Scriptures to determine their teaching concerning the kingdom herein spoken of.

We might suggest the question, is it to be a literal or spiritual kingdom? The prophet Daniel (2:44), in comparing the kingdom that God will set up, makes it as literal and universal as the four Gentile kingdoms. The statement is that God will (future) set up a kingdom that will stand forever. The four preceeding kingdoms were destroyed and passed to other people. These four kingdoms are to be destroyed. Each of these kingdoms had a king and associate rulers, subjects, territory and laws by which the subjects were governed or ruled. A kingdom can not exist without the above named parts. Isaiah says: "A king shall reign in righteousness, and princes rule in judgment." Jeremiah in speaking of this king says (23:5): "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." Each of these prophets claimed that they were Jehovah's messenger and were guided by the holy spirit. This makes their words "spirit and life." The prophet Daniel in describing this kingdom further says (7:27): "The kingdom, the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions (rulers) shall serve and obey him."

For further proof and the purpose of more fully identifying this king, we call your attention to the testimony of the angel who appeared to Mary and announced that she should become the mother of the long expected one. The announcement was as follows: "Thou shalt bring forth a son, and call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and he shall be called the son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there is or shall be no end." These proofs not only state that a king shall reign on the earth in judgment and justice, but they identify that one as Jesus the Son of God. He wore the crown of thorns and will assuredly wear the crown that is now awaiting him. He now occupies his Father's throne; then he will sit upon his own throne. He will reign for ever. When he comes and establishes his throne the great work of restitution will begin, the result of which will be to remove the curse that rests on the earth because of sin, and fill the earth with the glory of the Lord. A righteous race will then possess the earth, and nothing shall harm on all the earth.

The cry of bigotry and infidelity is raised by the nominal church people when we assert that the above is the only true analysis of the text: "Jesus went through Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God." He announced himself as the Messiah of the prophets, and the annointed of the New Testament. Their kingdom can not be identified as the church, neither can it be the reign of grace in the heart. The glad tidings of this kingdom are that the kingdom that was overturned in the days of the prince Zedekiah (Ezek. 21:27) will be restored to Israel through the rightful claimant, Jesus the Christ. The twelve apostles will rule over Israel (Matt. 19:28), and David shall be their prince (Ezek. 37).

THE ISOLATED ONES

By Auntie Wince

Sister B. F. Cook, of 3015 F Street, Sacramento, California, has greatly stirred my heart, telling me of those whom the iron hand of circumstances has cut off from all of like precious faith. It is hard for the old soldiers even to live thus as it were alone, but not half so hard as it is for the young people who at the nerve-racking stenographic machine toil all day in an office and store, and, holding themselves aloof at eventide from the party, the play-room and the dance lest they displease

Jesus, soil their garments and lose the crown, make practically but few or no friends of their own age, have no one to talk to about their hopes and aspirations, no one to study the Bible with them, no dear boys and girls to join them in exhortation, in song and in prayer. No wonder they grow despondent and melancholy.

Just think of the situation they are placed in—no preacher to counsel, not a sermon to listen to, no joy of companionship in worship, no Bible class or Sunday School to attend! Put one of Uncle Sam's young recruits in a like position and how long would he stand?

Brothers and sisters, such things are dreadful! The dear lambs of the flock, dying—actually and literally dying—just because we don't care enough for them to feed them with the living bread, orphans as to fathers and mothers and brethren in Christ, and some of them as to own parents.

> "Nobody smiles when they reach > their lonely room,
> Nobody whispers, I am glad you > have come,
> Nobody lingers with tenderest
> care,
> To brush back the locks of their > clustering hair.
> No one in accents so loving will > say,
> 'Darling, you are weary enough > for today,'
> Though the shoulder is bowed with > the burden it bears,
> And they are so weary, there's > nobody cares!"

quite as they ought to care. I have not cared myself as I might, but only because I did not know I have felt for those who stood alone, because I am "in the same boat;" but I had not reached out the helping hand for the simple reason that I did not quite see how the money that was allotted to me could possibly be stretched to cover another field of work.

But something must be done; this pitiful state of things must be changed; the hand of God must be grasped and his aid be enlisted for his children. There are certainly ways and means whereby they can be helped, or maybe help themselves. Self-help is best: it gives most joy. But many are not in a position to help themselves. They do not have books, and papers and quiet hours as I have, nor hosts of friends to talk to them by way of letters. Nor do they have much time to teach others the truth that they may win companionship by that means. What, then, can they do? or we do for them?

First, find if there are any others who, like Paul, have "hope of the promise made of God unto the fathers," either in the great city of Sacramento, or in other cities, towns, villages and country districts where believers live. If so, let those in Sacramento hunt up Brother and Sister Cook and that dear, lonely, little toiler, and meet together as often as possible for Bible study, communion service, and for song and prayer. Let those in other places do the same, inviting others to join them in their studies. If commodious rooms cannot be had, the little rooms at home can be utilized, and in summer time, the park or woods. But let there be no profitless dissensions in these little gatherings. We must be Christ-like, must have the spirit that was in him, or we can do each other no good, nor can we become instruments of salvation to others. Angry discussion has no place in the prayer circle. It is a holy place, for God meets with us there. Let it not be defiled by unholy passion, or angry words. Let the key-notes of such meetings be goodwill, joy and trust and the lessons be "plained down" so even a child can understand

It does not take many to have a meeting with God, "He is in the midst when two or three are gathered together in his name," and I have heard of blessed meetings and of great results where there was but a single soul to meet with God, and that soul but a young girl of thirteen or fourteen years. There were no meetings in her neighborhood. She loved God; she wanted others to love him, so she went to the school house every Sunday and held a meeting all by herself. People who saw her go Sunday after Sunday, began to wonder what it meant, and went to see. Nothing daunted the child kept on with her Bible-reading and prayers. It was just what she had been asking God for more people came, their hearts were touched, they too began seeking after God, blindly perhaps in many things, but the best they knew, for it was in pioneer days. A Sunday school was organized, with that slip of a girl as its superintendent. Then a preacher was sent for: the repentant ones were better instructed and baptized, a church was organized, and a house of worship was erected, and all as the result of the precious meetings held by that little maiden with God.

This is a true story: the events therein narrated happened in the great state of Illinois. Can not other young people seek God's help in the same way? Is he not just as ready to hear and answer now as he was then? He is, if we would only put him to the test.

The truth of the matter is, we are not as anxious to be saved as we should be, nor do we have the burning desire to save others as we ought to have. Look at this poor Hindu woman: She has walked seventy miles with her child in her arms, just to find the missionary who years before had been to her villiage and had read to her mother and sister about Jesus. Four years had passed since he had been there, but not one of them had bowed to an idol since. Now she has found him. she is at the mission-station, she will hear him again. All that evening he talks to her and reads from the Book, but the very next morning she is in his wife's room before she is dressed, "weeping in great distress." "I want salvation for my soul," she says, "only tell me more about Jesus Christ—that is my life."

"But you were told much about him yesterday," said the mission lady, "was not that enough?"

"Oh no! I can never hear enough. He is the savior of sinners, and I want to be saved, I have not heard enough yet: that is why I ask for a teacher for my villiage, I cannot read, but he could read to us." "All day long the woman listened and asked. she went to the Sunday service; she waked up in the middle of the night and begged someone to read 'just a little of the Bible' to her."

"When Monday morning came and she must go home, she lingered. 'All this way I have walked,' she said, and here I have heard much to make me glad; but I must go back to my husband and mother. They are in the dark, and I—what do I know? I cannot tell them much, and I cannot get a teacher. I want him for my mother and my poor husband and for my villiage, she broke down in bitter sorrow, and she and the missionary's wife wept together."

It is a sorrowful tale, and illustrates just to a "T," how deeply we need to feel and care, not only for the needs of "the Isolated Ones," but for the needs of "a world of sinners lost."

But what if no one of like faith can be found to meet with, and comfort the lonely saints? what next shall we do? "Pray the Lord of the harvest that he send laborers into his vineyard:" that is the Lord's command; obey it. But if the far away missionary could send no teacher to the Hindu woman's villiage because the money was lacking, can we answer the cries of our "all alone" brothers and sisters? Of course we can! They themselves lay by in store the means wherewith to pay the preachers who now come. Where are the young men who ought to be out in the field as heralds of our coming king? Where?

But, lacking preachers, what next shall we do?

Get the names of our isolated friends, especially those of the young people, answer their questions, ask questions, show them how to study the Bible, how to live so as to be a power in the world for God, and how to instruct others. Write them helpful letters and little sermons that come from the very heart. Mail them papers and clippings from papers.

Get them to be missionaries by putting up what are called "silent preachers" (wall-hangers with many compartments) filled with truthful tracts. We can all share in this great work. Let us get at it, I have written two letters to Sacramento; who will write the next?

OBITUARY

George Huffer Benge, oldest son of Robert and Elizabeth Benge, was born September 15, 1864, near Hillisburg, Indiana. He grew to manhood under the care of his parents, and was married to Alice Haines, June 18, 1887, and they went to housekeeping in the neighbourhood of the father. To them were born eight children, namely: Bennie, Bessie, Luther, Effie, Dean, Jennie, Stanley, and Dorothy. Bennie died at the age of three with brain fever.

Brother Benge heard the gospel message and was baptized by Brother J. F. Wagoner, in April, 1894, and united with the church of God at Hillisburg where he remained a faithful member until death. His life has been consistent with his profession as a Christian, ordering his conduct in accordance with the teachings of the Master Teacher.

He has been in poor health for the past five years, but nothing was noticed unusual up to the day of his death. He came from his work at the noon time and went into the wood room, but not returning when expected, his daughter, Effie, in looking for him, found him seated on a box, leaning against the wall, dead. He had reached the age 52 years, 2 months, and 11 days, having died at his home in Frankfort, Indiana, Nov. 24, 1916

He leaves his beloved wife and seven children of his household; his father, one brother, William Benge, of Alexandria; three sisters, Mrs. Agusta Heaton of Elwood, Mrs. Martha Parker, of Kokomo, Mrs. Pearl Jenkins, of Michigantown.

In the activities of his life he had made many friends and neighbors that will miss his association and kindly influence. He was a devoted father and greatly attached to his family, and gave the thought, care and labor of his life, wrought out of the best of his ability, for their support and wellbeing.

Funeral services were held from the Hillisburg church, at 10:30 a. m., Sunday, Nov. 26, 1916, conducted by the writer. Brother Benge had recently expressed his anxiety and desire for the coming of Jesus. We therefore spoke words of comfort upon this theme from 1 Thess. 4:14-17, to the sorrowing relatives and an appreciative audience. Burial was made in the Michigantown cemetery where we laid Brother Benge to rest to await the coming of the Lord from heaven.

CHRIST'S COMING

What will be the state of the world when the Lord Jesus returns? "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the Ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. Likewise, also, as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed" (Luke 17:27-30). Now since God has given such a testimony in his word, we ought seriously to consider the remarkable fact, that the Lord Jesus is to come to this world, when things will be going on as in the days of Noah, and as in the days of Lot. The coming of the Lord Jesus is sufficient to cause fear in every heart that has not yet received forgiveness of sin, and that seriously considers the circumstances and consequences to be such as they are; for though it is very easy now to forget God, and the name of the Lord Jesus, yet in the day when he shall appear, it will be impossible to do so. In that day it will be said by unconverted men, to the rocks and mountains: "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath has come: and who shall be able to stand" (Rev. 6:16,17). —Prophetic Times.

"THE FIRST RESURRECTION"

Rev. 20:5.

"This is the first resurrection." On the strength of this statement it is contended by some that the unworthy will not come out of the grave when the "blessed and holy" emerge from the tomb. This idea results from giving the word "resurrection" too limited a meaning. Primarily the word anastasis, resurrection, means that the dead are to stand up again in life, but the resurrection of the righteous means infinitely more than the mere act of rising from the dead. While "resurrection" involves the rising out of the tomb, it comprehends more than this. Since the coming forth of the righteous is a coming forth to life (John 5:29), immortality (1 Cor. 15:42-46) and to "thrones" (Rev 20:4) in the kingdom of God, it is clear that resurrection is but introductory to kingdom glory, and therefore in its fullest meaning comprehends the whole post-resurrectional state. Thus, "In the resurrection whose wife shall she be" (Matt. 22:28); that is, in the state, the immortal state, to which the dead will rise. Paul preached Jesus and the resurrection (Acts 27:18). Certainly his message was not confined to the mere act of rising from the grave. To merely emerge from the tomb is not necessarily a good thing. Lazarus and others were brought to life, and they emerged from their tombs; but they did not attain to the resurrection (state preached by Paul and Jesus. They only received a renewal of mortal life. Now when Jesus comes again the amenable to God's law emerge from the tomb; but the act of rising will not be to them a gladsome event; they would prefer to be left for ever in the oblivion of hades; for they pray for rocks and mountains to cover them and hide them from the face of the Lord their Judge. "They that have done good (shall come forth) to the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil to the resurrection of condemnation" John 5:29; that is, one class comes out of the grave to one resurrection-state or condition of things. Everything depends upon the state to which the rising of the dead is the introduction. Paul and Jesus preached the resurrection state of incorruption and immortality. Emerging from the grave but introduces into this state. The act of rising is involved; it is the resurrection primarily, but as employed in Scripture it requires the life, glory, and kingdom of the righteous, the shame, punishment, and death of the wicked, to complete their resurrection-state.

The "first resurrection" spoken of in Rev. 20:5 then is not the first ones to emerge from the grave. There is no mention of the act of coming out of the tomb; for they had already emerged from hades when John saw them. What is the first resurrection, John? "I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given to them * * * they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. This is the first resurrection." John sees certain persons on "thrones," immortal rulers in "judgment" for a thousand years; and in describing this scene he calls it the first resurrection. Many will participate in this resurrection who will never go into the grave or emerge from it, viz: "those who are alive and remain." Resurrection is a work of such broad significance that it comprehends a state and time to which the persons seen are introduced by rising from the dead, whether they are entombed in graves or living on the earth in mortality.

To this interpretation of Rev. 20:5 only one objection can be raised. It is claimed that "first" implies a second; and therefore the righteous are raised "first" and then after the thousand years the wicked are raised. But this objection only has weight when it is assumed that "first" is used in the sense of time. Protos, here translated "first," is elsewhere translated "chief," and means according to Young, "foremost." We repeat then, that John does not say the act of rising is the first resurrection, for no such act is shown, but the resurrection state to which they had already attained. It is the first then, not in order of the dead emerging from the grave; but of rank and blessedness, just as the uppermost rooms at feasts were the first rooms; so, best robe for the prodigal was the first robe; Philippi, the chief city of Macedonia, was the first city; Paul, the chief of sinners, was the first of sinners. Read Matt. 20:27; Mark 7:21; 20:44; Luke19:47; Acts13:50; 25:2; 28: 7-17. Protos is translated "chief," as well as "first," which shows the word refers to dignity and rank and not time. See Acts 17:12; 27:4; 25:2; 1 Tim. 1:15; 1 Cor.15:3. In this sense Christ is declared to be the "first" raised from the dead (Rom. 8:29; Rev. 20:9; Col. 1:18; Acts 26:23; 1 Cor. 15:23). "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection" (the chiefest and highest resurrection). Every one who is the subject of this "better resurrection" (Heb. 11:35) will be seated on a throne as judge with Christ during his reign; he will be immortal and have kingly honors; while the unworthy will only emerge from the grave to be ashamed before him at his coming," and be enveloped again in death—the second death from which there is no deliverance.

The Restitution:

Please accept this little offering of two dollars for the Linograph Fund.

A Well-Wisher.

Dear Restitution:

My subscription runs out next month. I do not want to miss a number, so am sending post office order for $1.50 for The Restitution for one year, and $1.00 for the Linograph Fund. May the Lord soon come to reward his faithful ones, is my prayer.

Emma Sissle.

Brother Huggins:

Enclosed you will find $10.00 order to be applied on the Linograph Fund, from which we hope much good will come in carrying the good news of the kingdom, soon to be established on the earth, and which will break up all earthly kingdoms with all their present wicked rulers when Jesus comes.

Eliza Rahe Oliver.

Dear Sir:

As this is my first attempt to put my mind on paper, I hope you will not expose my ignorance, if you should look upon it as such. I did not pen it for publication unless in your judgment it is worthy of a place in your paper. Otherwise you have a waste basket, please use it.

I would like to hear from some Bible student on "The house of many mansions."

I have been reading The Restitution for some time, and welcome it as a friend in my home.

Respectfully yours,

Richard Reed.

Dear Brother Huggins:

Herewith I enclose money order for $10.00, my "mite" towards the purshase of the linograph. I had hoped to make it larger, but a decided shrinkage in my income of late makes it imperative to practice a stricter economy, if I would owe no man anything. Regret it is so. Credit the amount on your list to Brother R—.

I am much pleased, and you must be much gratified, to see the Fund getting so near the purchasing point, thanks to the united efforts of the lovers of the dear old paper. Keep up the good work. Give us a paper correct in its get up, faithful to the teachings of the Bible, and all must be well in the outcome.

With my best wishes,
Your brother in the hope of the gospel,

Brother R—.

Dear Restitution:

Please find enclosed $6.50; $5.00 for the Linograph Fund, and $1.50 for the renewal of my subscription to The Restitution.

I am not well versed in the doctrine of the "Church of God," but I feel like I may pick up a few crumbs from this dear good paper.

I wish to state that I have received my two "Manual of Praise" song books, and am very much pleased with them.

Wishing ever for the success of the Church of God, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

"IN MY FATHER'S HOUSE ARE MANY MANSIONS"

In the beginning God made man in his own image, made him of the dust of the ground: therefore we have the natural man made of earth, earthy The second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy: and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual."

From Paul's argument there is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. The natural body is subject to dissolution, and must be put off so as to give place to the spiritual. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." House, figuratively speaking, means body; both natural and spiritual. Since the natural body is subject to pain, sickness, sorrow and death, and the spiritual body is exempt from them, we can feel the force of the statement: "Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard, neither hath it entered into the mind, what God hath in store for those who love him." Since God gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have eternal life, we conceive the idea that eternal life is a gift from God, and will not be bestowed upon a natural, mortal, earthy body, but will be given a spiritual body susceptible to it, fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body. This life (eternal) is hid with Christ in God, God's body, which is spiritual, and is promised to all the saints or children of God. Therefore many bodies spiritual are in the one body spiritual (God's), and will be given to those who are worthy when his dear Son comes from heaven the second time to fulfill that glorious promise of rewarding everyone according as his works shall be.

The orthodox version about the house of many mansions, seems to be a building in heaven, prepared for the church members to which they soar at death, leaving the old house behind. My idea of this text is that it contrasts the natural and spiritual bodies by use of "house" and "mansion." Thus showing the spiritual to far surpass the natural, as the mansion surpasses the house or hut.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LEAF

Lesson XIV

Subject, Eternal Life II

Memory Text

"Fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life" (1 Tim. 6:12).

1. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3:16).see verse 14 and 36.

2. "Verily, verily I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life" (John 5:24) see verse 25,26.

3. "In the world (age) to come, life everlasting" (Luke 18:30).

4. "As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father; so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me. * * * He that eateth of this bread shall live forever" (John 6:57,58).

5. "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting" (Gal. 6:8).

6. "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption" (1 Cor. 15:50).

7. "Being born (begotten R. V.) again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever" (1 Pet. 1:23).

8 Keep yourselves in the love o God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life" (Jude 21).

Practical Truths

We learn from the Bible that this eternal life is secured in this life as a germ or seed through the new begettal, and will be manifested in the world to come, when access will be given to the tree of life. The word of God or the gospel of our salvation is the message of pardon and justification from sin through our Lord Jesus the Christ. Eternal life therefore cannot be a constitutional or inherent possession (for we have all sinned and therefore must die), but is to be gained by faith and obedience through Jesus the life-giver. "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life," is the reproof of Jesus to the Jews; and those who stay away from him are devoid of the eternal life which through him is offered to all. Those who live a life of faith in the Son of God have the promise of a resurrection to that life.

Notes on the Lesson

Fight of Faith.—The Christian is a soldier, but the weapons of his warfare are not carnal. His weapons are truth, righteousness, the gospel, faith, salvation and the word of God and prayer; with these he may indeed fight a good fight againt all wickedness.

1. To Perish.—God's love prompted the opening of the war of life. The alternative is to perish. This term "perish" is a very strong expression and the original Greek bears out the same meaning as the English, which is, the complete destruction of the individual. The words, eternal life, just as forcibly cover the meaning of "existence" and in no sense can the original terms convey the meaning of happiness except as that in a condition of the eternal state.

2. A Present Possession.—The child of God who is "begotten again by the incorruptible seed, which liveth and abideth forever," can positively claim the possession of eternal life. The life is in the seed with all its characteristics, and the life transmitted by an incorruptible seed must be a life that abideth forever. This life is transmitted by the word of God or gospel (1 Pet. 1:23-25; James 1:18; John 1:13; John 3:3-7). All who are thus begotten again are adopted into the family of God as his children (Gal. 3:26; 4:6,7). The test of this Sonship is manifestation of the Spirit of Christ, and being led by the Spirit (Rom. 8:9, 14-17; 1 John 3:14,15). This indwelling seed or spirit of life which in this age transforms our natures to bear the divine likeness, will complete its work through the power of God, by ultimately transforming the physical also (Rom. 8:11).

3. Time of Manifestation.—The Divine life secured in this age by the implanted seed will not be manifested bodily until the age to come; at the resurrection day when Christ returns (1 John 3:2; 1 Cor. 15:22,23; 51-55; 1 Thess. 4:16,17; Col. 3:3,4; 1 Pet. 5:4). This will be the springtime of the new or spiritual creation, for which the whole creation is waiting, the time of manifestation of the children of God (Rom. 8:19-23).

4. Bread of Life.—The new creature in Christ Jesus (2 Cor. 5:17), who walks in "newness of life," (Rom. 6:4) must have food for the development of the new life. This food.is Christ, i. e.: his words, his example, his spirit; and for drink, the water of life which flows from the fountain of living waters (Jer. 2:13; Psa. 36:9; John 4:10-14).

5. Seedtime and Harvest.—The flesh and the Spirit are at warfare, the one is of earth and the other of heaven (1 Cor. 15:44-49). A life spent in sowing seeds of fleshly lusts will reap a harvest of death, whereas a life of loving sacrifice and purity ends in life everlasting (Rom. 6:20-23; Gal. 5:19-24; 1 Cor. 6:9; Eph. 5:5; Rev. 22:15).

6. Flesh and Blood.—A term used to denote mortality. In this state we are mortal, and would die out of an eternal kingdom. In order therefore to be in consonance with the nature of the kingdom, its inheritors must be made incorruptible and immortal.

7. Born Again.—Begotten again in the Revised Version which is the proper rendering. In the process of life, begetting precedes the birth; so too, in the eternal life. We are begotten now by the word of truth, and pass through a period of development, then are born or brought into the eternal life at the resurrection, when we are born of the spirit and are spirit beings (John 3:5; Rom. 8:11; Luke 20:36).

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. Conditional Immortality.—Do the Scriptures teach that man can earn eternal life? Is it a free gift? Are there any requirements before the gift can be received? What reasons have you for believing eternal life is not possessed by unbelievers? Are men taught to seek for eternal life? Why does Jesus enjoin the searching of the Scriptures? (John 5:39). Is it an object of hope? Is it to be striven for? Is it to be put on? Is it a subject of promise?

2. The Incorruptible Seed.—What change must come over the natural man before he can become immortal? Before this spiritual birth is there a begettal or seed planting? What is this seed of eternal life? What is its nature? How is it planted? What relation do those who are begotten of the word bear to Christ? To God? What is the proof or our sonship? Is there change wrought in this present state, by the implanted seed? What will be the final development?

3. The Bread of Life.—What is a person termed who has been united to Christ? (2 Cor. 5:17). What food is necessary for development of this spiritual life? Can life be sustained without food and drink? Can there be healthy life in a child without growth? What is the final object of attainment of a new creature in Christ Jesus? (Eph. 4:13).

4. Seed-time and Harvest.—What will be the harvest of a life spent in fleshly, sensuous pursuits? What will be reaped by one who follows the leadings of God's Spirit? When is the harvest time? (Matt. 13:39, for "world" read "age"). When is the sowing time?

THE ONE TRUE REQUIREMENT: LOVE-DISCIPLESHIP

Geo. Edw. Faber

"I did behold, one came to him and said, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" (Matt. 19:16-22).

Wisdom personified says: My son, give me thine heart." This is one of God's many calls to the unsaved. No plainer illustration of its import, no simpler setting forth of what it is to become a Christian, can be given than is furnished by the incident in the gospel of the young man who lacked one thing, and, lacking that thing, lacked all!

Among the multitudes of souls who are far from Christ, there are many, very many, who quite fail to perceive the real barrier between them and salvation. Of these, this young man is a type.

1. Consider some mistaken requirements.

1. A good moral life. It seems amazing, yet it is true, that even to the present hour, though contradicted by a Gospel that has been moving up and down the world for nearly nineteen hundred years, men assume themselves justified in a conventional morality and rectitude. Hence, treating this as the divine requirement, they trust in it as the ground of their acceptance with God. This was the case with the young man; and though his example is more praiseworthy than thousands of his indifferent followers, he learned that the righteousness of his own ideal was but a secondary factor with Christ.

2. "I will try to do a little better first." This expression serves to designate a second class of persons. whose line of descent follows closely parallel to that of the first class, from generation to generation. It is the temporizing reply of a large proportion of such as know or regard themselves as being at least a notch--perhaps a number of them--down in the moral scale. They forget that Christ came not to call the righteous, but sinners. Further, that he came to call them to repentance. Consequently the natural pride of the human heart stands in their way. Frank confession of sin is prevented by a self-conceived requirement of reformation, which spiritual blindness further mistakes for the demands of Christianity or religion.

3. "I will attend church a little while, first." Another sedative, with which not a few defer the one thing needful. Striving to appease conscience and more especially, rid themselves of some admonishing friend, they trifle with that which is of overshadowing importance and demands immediate action. They misapprehend the function of the church. For the regular church services are intended not so much to start a soul on the way of life, as to help it along after the start has been determinately made by the soul itself.

4. Passing through some certain technical experience, understood to constitute "conversion," but commonly referred to as "change of heart." This error belongs to the dark side of revivals. That indefinable and unscriptural notion of conversion, which may be fittingly called by that unfortunate phrase, "getting religion," inverts the natural order of God's law. Not only so, but the error is made by many worldlings to do duty as a convenient pretext for neglecting the offers of grace and obedience to God's call.

Tolstoy, the Russian socialist, has said that "the rich are willing to do anything and everything for the poor, except get off their backs!" Through a similar but universal perversity, the unconverted man is willing, more or less, to do anything and everything toward God that might lie in his power —heathen like --except to yield him real heart-friendship!

II. There is and can be but one true requirement made by the Master upon all—the discipleship of love. He says: "Come;" "Give me thine heart." "Follow me." Rid your life of self-love as the dominant force. Fix and centre it upon your Savior and Redeemer. Sell all you have—if it should bar you from God, and God from you. Yield up your selfish life-aims—riches, pleasures, worldly ambitions. For there will come to you a recompense, in which you will find these transformed and crystallized as a part into a far greater whole!

To become a Christian consists, then, not in anything we might do or be doing; still less in any experience we might obtain. Religion's demand is neither doing nor getting but giving—our faith and love. Reason and common sense, as well as God's revealed will, require the sinner to reciprocate God's friendship, love—nothing more, nothing less.

Moreover, if we turn to him in love, we will follow him. And if we follow him, we will serve him. A service that springs from love is the most natural thing in the world. There is a story told by a man who, years ago, was taken in the Mediterranean by one of the corsairs which used to sweep those seas. He was sold as a slave, and endured the rigors of Mohammedan bondage. One day an Englishman came on board the vessel where he was, and talking with his owner, made a bargain for him, paid the price, and bought the slave. The poor captive bitterly reproached his purchaser: "You, a free-born Englishman, buy me for a slave!" But the purchaser said: "I have bought you to set you free." At once the captive's sorrow was turned to joy and his reproach to gratitude; and, falling at the feet of his new master, he said: "I will be your servant forever." Thenceforth nothing was too hard for him to do for a master who had bought him with a price that he might set him free. So Jesus has bought us, and so ought we to serve him.

Love or Legality.—A certain old merchant told me a very interesting story about his son. He has only one boy, and when he became of age the father called him into his counting-room, and said: "Now, Fritz, you are twenty-one, and I have made up my mind to take you into the firm with me." Fritz seemed very much pleased at this announcement. "Yes," said the father, "I have determined that I will give you outright one third interest in my entire business." At this further announcement Fritz beamed with joy. "But," said the father, "if I am to take you into partnership, we must of course have a regular business arrangement, just the same as if we were not related. I have drawn up a little contract here, in which I have set the limit of the amount that each one will be permitted to draw from the business. You will notice that I have placed your limit at two hundred dollars a month." At this announcement the countenance of young Fritz fell. He thought it over for a few minutes, and then said: "Father, I think I would rather be your son than your partner. You have never denied me anything in my life that I have asked for. If I wanted a hundred or a thousand dollars, you have never refused me. Let things go on just as they are. You shall own it all and I will be your son." The old man chuckled a good deal over the shrewdness of the lad. The Christian's relation to God is like that. Our morality is not a mere legal thing, but we are his sons; and when we give up our hearts to him in loving sonship, giving him our service for love's sweet sake, he will give us a blank check that will more than cover our needs.

SATAN GOT BEHIND HER

Mrs. Kilgore was the pretty young wife of the elderly villiage pastor. One day she went into the city with a friend and among other things bought a new frock. "Another frock, my dear?" said her husband. "Did you need another?"

"Yes," said the wife, hesitatingly, "I do need it, and besides, it was so pretty that the devil tempted me."

"But you should have said, 'Get thee behind me, satan.' Have you forgotten that?"

"Oh, no; but that was what made the trouble, hubby, dear. I said, 'Get thee behind me, satan,' and he did, but he whispered over my shoulder, 'It just fits beautiful in the back!' And I just had to take it then."

Tidbits of Pleasant and Useful Information

Gathered from Everywhere

Once a man mounts the tripod on Drink, The Drama, The Church, or Feminism, his friends begin to leave earlier than usual. The ancient human instinct to leave a prophet alone is wholesome.

Being a parent used to be one of the most simple, natural and inevitable developments in the world. But nowadays, one has no business to be married unless, sleeping and waking, one is conscious of the responsibility.

We are all coming to see that there should be no stifling of Labor by Capital, or of Capital by Labor; and also that there should be no stifling of Labor by Labor, or of Capital by Capital.

I believe that woman loves the arts better than does man. She is better ground for the development of a great artist, for she approaches art with sympathy, while the great bulk of men approach it with fear and dislike, shrinking from the idea that it may destroy their self-complacency.

BIBLE STORY IN NUTSHELL

One of our schoolboys wrote the following terse narrative about Elijah: "There was a man named Elijah. He had some bears and lived in a cave. Some boys tormented him. He said: 'If you keep on throwing stones at me, I'll turn the bears on you and they'll eat you up.' And they did, and he did, and the bears did."

RANSOM

The word "ransom" seems to be a concretion of two words, "ran" past tense of "run," and "sum," the whole amount; thus, "ran sum," paid in full; or if reversed thus, "sum ran," amount paid; but the concrete form of ransom, in fact, really means "the money paid to a bandit, for the release of his captive; just as "postage" means the money paid for carrying the mail; or as the word "price" refers to the money paid for the purchase or redemption of a slave. The word "liquidate" differs from "ransom" in that while "ransom" is blackmail, and is wicked; "liquidate" is legal, and righteous.—Joseph Boote.

GERMANY'S FUTURE

Nowhere will the ideals of democracy gain more ground than on German soil. For a good while already, in spite of all appearance to the contrary, the Germans have been tending toward a political and social state involving more equality (if not freedom, for which, in opposition to the Anglo-Saxons, they care almost as little as the French) than exists in America; all thoughtful observers know that if the practical part of the socialist programme is realized anywhere, this will be in Germany. Now the day when the soul of Germany will shape for herself an appropriate body is close at hand. It is to the Liberals, in particular the Socialists, not to the Junkers, that she owes her amazing strength and power; they, consequently, will shape her further destinies; there is no example in history to prove that those who did the things did not ask for and eventually acquire the corresponding rights.

DOMESTIC LIFE IN AFRICA

I went with my lantern into Ze's little hut; I sat down by the fire, and there was the family too. Mendom was heating some water in a big black kettle. The youngest, Mpioga, still without teeth, was howling in the arms of little brother. Presently to the light of my lantern Mendom brings her three-year-old; she empties her hot water into a wooden bowl; with a sponge of crushed leaves she washes first one little foot and then the other. Mother is relentless until both feet are soaked; then she opens a little leaf packet: there is salve made of the bark of the redwood tree; she adds a little palm oil to this, and very carefully she annoints the little feet. The sobs subside and the chid walks off on his heels. Now the mother pours more water into the bowl, takes the fretful baby out of the hands of little brother, stands the weeny thing in her belt of beads on the clay floor, and swabs her down with water. There is the familiar initial gasp. With her maternal hands she cleanses that little person all gittering with wet, and she says, looking at me and smiling, "God has sent me much trouble." And the father says, apropos of nothing, "All these have been baptized." I sit on my stool by the fire and feel steeped in the most human domesticity. Everywhere in the world at this hour little children are whimpering over their evening ablutions. It is a mistake to think that any child of a good mother escapes.—So much for the illusions of little boys who would like to be a heathen.—Jean Kenyon Mackenzie.

When War-Drums Shall be Still.—A gentleman residing in Hartford, Conn., has in his possession a bass-drum with a very remarkable history. The drum was made in Pittsfield, Mass., in 1836, and has been sounded on many important occassions. It has taken part in the inauguration of Presidents Van Buren, Harrison, Buchanan, Lincoln, Garfield, Cleveland, and Benjamin Harrison. It was used at the reception of Kossuth, the reception to the Prince of Wales, the opening of the Erie Canal, the opening of the suspension bridge at Niagara Falls, and at the serenade to Jenny Lind. It went to the front with the 71st New York Regiment in 1861, and was present at the first battle of Bull Run. There are two bullet-holes through the head of the drum as a mark of the battle. Some day the business of the war-drum shall cease, and that inspiriting musical instrument shall no longer incite men to deeds of blood, but shall inspire their hearts to heroic deeds in behalf of the sublimer victories of peace.

A CHRISTMAS SENTIMENT

To All Those of Like Precious Faith

To thee, kind friend, with all our love
We wish that blessings three
Would shower down from heights above
And falling, rest on thee.

These blessings three—as you might know—
Are peace and joy and health,
And if a fourth we might bestow
We'd gladly make it wealth.

CHRISTMAS HYMN

Calm on the listening ear of night
Come heaven's melodious strains,
Where wild Judea stretches far
Her silver mantled plains!

Celestial choirs from courts above,
Shed sacred glories there;
And angels, with their sparkling lyres,
Make music in the air.

The answering hills of Palestine
Send back the glad reply;
And greet, from all their holy heights,
The dayspring from on high.

On the blue depths of Galilee
There comes a holier calm.
And Sharon waves, in solemn praise,
Her silent groves of palm.

Glory to God! the sounding skies
Loud with their anthems ring;
Peace to the earth, good-will to men.
From heaven's eternal King!

Light on the hills, Jerusalem!
The Savior now is born!
And bright on Bethlehem's joyous plains
Breaks the first Christmas morn.

HOPE

Webster says: "Hope is the desire of good accompanied by expectation; anticipation; confidence; the object of hope; to expect with confidence or desire; to cherish a desire for good; trust confidently." This definition is quite complete, and should give us a clear understanding of the word, particularly as it is used in the Bible. We find it used in many places, always with "desire and exexpectation." The hope of Israel was in the time of our Savior that the kingdom would be restored to them, under the rule of the promised Messiah. They expected a descendant of David to deliver them from the Roman Government, and establish a kingdom such as David ruled over. They did not understand the Scriptures, as recorded in Luke 1:32,33: "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

This Scripture should have made it plain to them that this ruler must be immortal in order to "reign forever." They did not realize that in order for the King to fulfill this promise he must die and rise again from the dead, with the divine nature, endless life; so in putting Jesus to death they fulfilled the prophecies concerning him, and what God had decreed in his word.

Rev. 1:18: "I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell (the grave) and of death." Jesus then was qualified to fulfill the promise made by God to Mary before he was born, and in due time, when he comes again, he will fulfill all that is foretold concerning him. Isa. 9:7: "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." These, and many other passages of Scripture, are very positive; and was the hope of the Apostles; as we can see by Acts 1:6: "When they therefore were come together, they asked of him saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the mingdom to Israel?" This was their great hope, which had been blighted by his death. But now when he was alive again, they expected that the kingdom would immediately appear; and that they were to be co-rulers in it with him. In verse 7 we have his answer: "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit has come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me in Jerusalem, in Judea, in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Later, the Apostles understood those things. Paul in 2 Thessalonnians 2:3, says, "Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there first come a falling away, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition: who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

Now in conclusion, is this our hope? Are we looking for this "Kingdom to come?" Have we the hope that Abraham had when God promised to give him and his seed, the land of Caannan for an everlasting possession? If we have that hope, and live true Christian lives, "Looking unto the glorious appearing of our Lord, and Savior Jesus Christ," we may confidently expect to see him, and be like him and be "ever with the Lord."

In the hope of eternal life, J. E. Hogarth.

BROTHERHOOD OF MAN

We hear a great deal of talk nowadays about the brotherhood of man, and how the churches and all religious and secular bodies are working to that end, (and you will also notice how futile their attempts appear to be). We hear people say, "Oh! the world is much better than it used to be; and then again see how advanced we are in knowledge and how much more cultivated and refined we are to what they were only a century ago. Of course we are improving, and the brotherhood of Christ's preaching is spreading fast, and there is no doubt that this feeling of love for our fellow man will soon bring even universal peace; and then the world will go on smoothly."

Beloved, this is the teaching of the world: but let us stop to look into it.

A few years ago the world as a whole was living in peace, but because of hatred and jealousy the greatest war among the nations the world has yet seen is raging in all its bitterness, and the venom of the serpent today is as virulent in them as it was in Cain when he slew his brother Abel. How can the orthodox ministers harmonize this with the brotherhood of man? Among the nations of Europe today hatred is the dominant thought of their lives, not love.

And then again in this country where war is not stirring the hearts of men, is love for our fellow man increasing? Wherever we turn we find dissention between capital and labor: the rich are all trying to get richer, and push their less fortunate brethren aside as if they were dogs; in fact many dogs are treated much better than some human beings. Does this rush for wealth and utter disregard for our fellow man look like the brotherhood of man?

No: instead of the world getting better, it is getting worse, exactly as God has told us it would. Men are too busy today breaking God's laws to know anything about salvation. Jesus tells us in Matt. 6:19-20: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." And now notice the reason he gives for his words, in verse 21: "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." In this race for wealth this nation that is so proud of its peace, entirely ignores the word of God; how then, can we expect brotherhood or love from such people?

Paul tells us in Rom. 13:10, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." Then we see that if the pursuit of wealth worketh ill to our brother we cannot love our brother. "For brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another" (Gal. 5:13). How futile this talk of the brotherhood of man is, and how opposed to the word of God! The perilous times that we read of in 2 Tim. 3:1 are upon us, and nothing man can do or say will alter God's plans; but one thing we are sure of is that universal peace will come at last, but not till the return of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. "In his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth" (Psa. 72:7). So let us "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:14), that we may participate in that glorious peace which God has promised to those that love him and keep his commandments.

THE RESTITUTION

I well remember the first time I heard the late C. W. Tomkins reading The Restitution to about half a dozen listeners in the old gristmill in Albany, Wis., more than twenty years ago. I soon after became a subscriber, and have taken it ever since.

And I must say I am well pleased with the general tone of the articles that from week to week appear in its colunms. They are mostly well founded on the "impregnable rock of holy Scripture." But in the last issue of Nov. 28, concerning "The Spirits in Prison," there are some statements I cannot understand.

For instance, the writer says: "Christ was made alive by the spirit of God. By this same spirit, Christ went and preached to the spirits in prison." Then he asks the question, "How did he preach to them?" and says, "He sent the holy spirit upon Noah, and he did the preaching, while he was building the ark."

Now the question remains, "Who did the preaching?" Peter says that the same spirit that quickened him, he (Christ) "went and preached to the spirits in prison, who were disobedient," etc. Notice, it is not said when he did the preaching. But one thing is certain, it was not while he was dead. And if he sent the holy spirit to do it, in the days of Noah, he must have been more than thirty years of age when he commenced his public ministry, and by far older than his mother Mary. This view involves his pre-existence as a God having power to command the holy spirit upon Noah. It would be hard to harmonize this view with what is written in Acts 2:33 "Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted and having received of the Father the promise of the holy spirit he (Christ) hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." If Christ pre-existed and had control of the holy spirit in the days of Noah; how shall we account for the fact that he was dependent for it to the Father on the day of Pentecost?

In Isaiah 61:1 There is a prophecy of Christ that reads: "The spirit of the Lord God is upon me: because he hath anointed me to preach good things unto the meek: he hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." At Nazareth Christ reads this prophecy and applies it to himself and says, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears" (Luke 4: 17).

The writer says, "The term 'spirits' is used here the same as in 1st John 4:1: 'Beloved, believe not every spirit (or teacher), for many false teachers are gone out into the world.'" I often see this Scripture quoted, but have never seen it connected with its context, which reads, "Hereby know ye the spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God, and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world."

Here we have the truth in a nutshell: Christ came in the flesh of our common humanity: he was "the seed of the woman." Antichrist teaches that he came a pre-existing divine spirit, the third person of the fabled trinity. Rome is the antichrist of the Bible; and self exaltation is her most prominent mark (2 Thess. 2:4): "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called god, or that is worshiped; so that he as god sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." On the question of Christ's pre-existence, all we have to do is to inform ourselves as to what Rome teaches on the subject, and you take the opposite view, and you have the truth, and will be in harmony with every writer in the Bible from Moses to John. And furthermore, you will be in your faith supported by the facts of history all through this dispensation.

A THANKSGIVING SERVICE

The church in Salem, Ohio, met in their church building on Thanksgiving Day, as previously arranged, to observe the day as requested by proclamation of President Wilson and Governor Willis. Our service was informal; we had no previously arranged programme. Each brother and sister was requested to have a part in the service as they wished. The services were opened by music and prayer, after the writer, who had the services in hand, offered a few remarks tracing the history of the day briefly, and stating the chief reason why we observe the day. Not because of the custom of observing, but because we as a people are looking anxiously and prayerfully for the coming of the Lord, who will create the true Thanksgiving Day. Our faith enabled us to observe the rising of that morning when the Sun of Righteousness will arise with healing beams. We fancy that we can feel the movements of the atmosphere that proclaim his coming.

We then announced that an opportunity would now be given all present to respond in their way in the morning service. If there was any hesitancy that we would call the names, giving all an opportunity to respond. As usual, all hesitated, when we called upon Brother Townsend, who responded very readily with a well prepared paper. Before reading his paper we designated Brother Buckman to follow. This was the order through the exercise, which lasted an hour. The most of the readings were selected from the Psalms and expressed true thanksgiving. After the response of each member of the church, others were called upon. The following responded: Mr. Heart, a young man who has charge of the gas wells in the vicinity of Brother and Sister Townsend, and makes his home with them. He was followed by Mr. Coy, the father of Brother Coy, who read a portion of the first chapter of John's gospel. Two of our Sunday school responded: Wilber Coy, by reading a portion of Psalm 95; and Walter Coy reciting a verse. Both are sons of Brother and Sister Coy, who are bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. We had Brother and Sister Pottorf with us, for which we were thankful. Brother and Sister Morron, of Springfield, Illinois, sent in selections from the Psalms, but they came too late to be read. However, they showed that their hearts are in accord with the church where they previously worshiped.

After services all were invited to assemble in the home of Brother and Sister Buckman, where a bountiful dinner was served of all good things of the land. A special feature of this dinner was that the children were seated at a separate table and served as were the older persons. After dinner the time was spent in friendly conversation and music. Near the close of the day we separated with a good will and good bye. Our prayer is that the next thanksgiving may see the Lord on earth again.

Your brother, D. C. Robison.

Lesson XV

Subject. Scattering of Israel and Judah

Memory Text

"And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people from the one end of the earth even unto the other; and there shalt thou serve other gods" (Deut. 28:64).

1. "And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord and served Baalim;

2. "They forsook the Lord God of their fathers, which brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed other gods, of the gods of the people that were round about them and bowed themselves unto them and provoked the Lord to anger.

3. "And they forsook the Lord and served Baal and Ashtaroth" (Judges 2:11-13).

4. "And he gave them into the hand of the heathen, and they that hated them ruled over them.

5. "Many times did he deliver them, but they provoked him with their counsel and were brought low for their iniquity" (Psa. 106:41,43).

6. "And the Lord God of their fathers sent to them by his messengers, rising up betimes, and sending; because he had compassion on his people and on his dwelling place.

7. "But they mocked the messengers of God and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy.

8. "Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary and had nocompassion upon young man or maiden, old man or him that stooped for age: he gave them all into his hand.

9. "And they burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof, and them that escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon" (2 Chron. 36:15-20).

10. "Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest" (Micah 3:12).

11. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not.

12. "Behold your house is left unto you desolate" (Matt. 23:37,38).

13. "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21:24).

14. "Behold, the eyes of the Lord are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth; saving that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord.

15. "For lo, I will command and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth" (Amos 9:8,9).

Practical Truths

The Hebrews properly began as a distinct people at the time that Jacob and his family went down into Egypt. After four hundred years of increase the family of seventy had grown to 600,000 warriors, besides old men, women and children. At Sinai they received the law, and after about forty years, came into Caanan. In the land of promise they prospered into a kingdom with God as their king; but soon desired a king of their own choice and rejected the Lord. Three kings, viz: Saul, David and Solomon ruled over the kingdom of God, united (1 Chron. 29:23; 1 Sam. 10:1), but after Solomon's death the kingdom was divided. Ten tribes were ever after known as the house or kingdom of Israel and two tribes as the house or kingdom of Judah. In the kingdom of Israel, a line of nineteen kings brings us to the overthrow as a kingdom, and to the time when they were carried away beyond Babylon. A line of twenty kings, in the kingdom of Judah brings us to Zedekiah, and the seventy years captivity. Under Ezra and Nehemiah a partial restoration took place of the kingdom of Judah (Ezra 1:5; 2:1-64), the wall and temple were rebuilded, and the sacrifices partially restored. This kingdom of Judah continued until A. D. 70, when under Titus, the Romans destroyed Jerusalem and 1,100,000 perished, and the remainder were sold into slavery, and scattered among all nations. For over eighteen hundred years they have been scattered, yet are a separate people among the nations of the earth. Theirs is indeed a sad history, yet God has not forgotten them, and will yet "restore again the kingdom to Israel" through Jesus their long looked for Messiah.

Notes on the Lesson

Other Gods.—The heathen nations at the time Moses wrote this were wholly given up to serving idols of their own make.

1. Baalim.—The sun god of the Tyrians which Ahab, the king of Israel, served instead of the Lord (Ant. Jews 9:6).

3. Ashtaroth.—Ashtaroth, the name of the goddess of the Zidonians and in some way connected with the worship of the moon: probably the "queen of heaven" of Jer. 7:18; 44:17.

4. He Gave Them.—God permitted their enemies to defeat them in battle and rule over them.

5. Many Times.—God's goodness is seen in the frequency with which he exerted his power for their deliverance, until at last they are brought low for their iniquities, as we witness their condition nationally at the present time.

6. Messengers.—The prophets and others who bore messages and reproofs to them to turn them from their evil way.

7. Mocked.—Treated with contempt—ridiculed the messages—sneered at them.

Misused His Prophets.—To treat ill, to abuse. Such conduct on the part of any people towards God's messengers will always meet with a just recompense.

8. House of their Sanctuary.—The temple.

9. Wall of Jerusalem.—Built of stone and which enclosed the city.

10. Be Plowed as a Field.—Josephus says that "The wall was so thoroughly laid even with the ground by those who dug it up, to the foundation, that there was nothing left to make those who came thither believe it had ever been inhabited."

13. Times of the Gentiles.—The time that the city of Jerusalem remains under their control. During this age or dispensation.

15. Among All Nations.—How literally this prediction has been fulfilled! Will not the prediction of a regathering be as literally fulfilled?

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. Judah and Israel.—Give a brief history of the kingdom of Israel up to the time of Solomon. What division occurred soon after his death? By what name were the ten tribes known after this event? How many tribes followed Rehoboam? By what name was that division known? How many kings reigned in Israel? How many in Judah? Under whose reign was the kingdom of Israel overthrown and scattered? (Ans. Hosea. 2 Kings 17:6,18,23). To what country were they taken? Under whose reign was the kingdom of Judah scattered? (Ans. Zedekiah. 2 Kings 25). How long were they to be in captivity? When they were restored under whose direction were the city and temple rebuilt? How long did the second temple remain? What Roman general destroyed Jerusalem and temple and scattered the Jews or people of the kingdom of Judah? At what date? (Ans. A. D. 70). Has there ever been a restoration since that time?

2. Disobedience.—Why were the houses of Israel and Judah scattered? Why did God repeatedly send them warnings? (6). What prediction did Jesus make concerning Jerusalem? (13).

3. Scattered Among the Nations.—Where have Israel and Judah been scattered?

4. Remembered Still.—Has God forgotten and cast that nation off forever (Rom. 11)? Where in the Bible are we told that he earnestly remembers them still? (References: Jer. 31:8,35-40; Ezek. 37:13-28).

RESURRECTION AND JUDGMENT

"Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming in which all that are in the grave shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation" (John 5:28,29). "Therefore thou art inexcusable O man, whosoever thou art that judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things. But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth against them which commit such things. And thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the gudgment of God" (Rom. 2:1,2,3)? "For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived that he might be Lord both of the dead and living. But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? For we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God" (Rom. 14:9-12).

"For we must all appear before he judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad" (2 Cor. 5:10).

These Scriptures teach the resurrection and judgment, and are referred to by some speakers frequently, the purpose being to warn believers of the judgment to come. Some good brethren are fearful of the judgment seat because they are continually dwelling on these passages of Scripture, and others of like nature.

They overlook the fact that there is a righteous class, which had its beginning in righteous Abel, and on account of their works they have been manifest. See Hebrews 11th chapter.

This righteous class did not nor do they need to fear the judgment seat, because "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit" (Rom. 8:1).

"Verily, verily I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into judgment (Diaglott), but is passed from death unto life" (John 5:24).

Some brethren think and teach that all in Christ Jesus must give an account at the judgment seat of all their shortcomings. But the Scriptures do not so teach. There is a class who lived righteous, died righteous, are raised righteous, and appear before the judgment seat righteous.

Can we know in this present life who are righteous and who are not? Let the Scripture answer: "Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment, and some men they follow after. Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand, and they that are otherwise cannot be hid" (1 Tim. 5:24,25). "Ye shall know them by their fruits" (Matt. 7:16). "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit" (Matt. 7:18).

But John says, "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." To the one who confesses his sins when does the forgiveness take place? Is it at the judgment seat, or is it at the time of confession? Let the Scriptures answer: "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile" (Psa. 32:1,2). And in the 33rd verse David says: "I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord, and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sins." Thus we see that there is a class who will appear before the judgment seat without spot or blemish, whose transgressions have been covered. It will be perfectly proper for those who lived righteous to awake and sing, when they emerge from their dusty beds. "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead" (Isa. 26:19). "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust" (Acts 24:15); and Jesus will separate the righteous from the unrighteous; the righteous will go into everlasting life, the unrighteous to everlasting cutting off.

EDITORIAL

Smooth out life's wrinkles by being courteous.

Few tongues become tired of saying kind words.

Ring out the thousand wars of old; ring in the thousand years of peace.

If you wish always to have faith in your brethren and sisters, do not put them to very severe tests. They are human.

Were it not for the night we should never see the stars. And were it not for the night of afflction we might not see the star of hope.

Prices and wages are going up still. But there is no increase or decrease in the wages of sin. "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23). They are fixed, and are paid when due.

Without root-forces we shall die. In speech, in friendship, in religion, there must ever be more than is seen. The mightiest forces work in secret. God himself is invisible.

As long as sin and rightousness are in the world there will be weeping Jeremiahs and grieving Marys. Personally we had rather be a sorrowful saint than a happy sinner.

Sister Anna Lehman writes that Brother Pearson made an unsuccessful attempt to call us to attend a funeral recently. For the benefit of any who might wish to telephone us in an emergency like this, we state that our telephone is the Bell, Garfield 5671J.

Long visits long stories, long essays, long exhortations, long sermons and long prayers seldom profit those who have to do with them. Life is only broken fragments of eternity, golden moments, very precious. Learn to condense, abridge, intensify. We can bear things that are dull, if only they are short. We can endure an ache, however severe, if it is over soon; while even pleasure grows insipid, and pain intolerable, if they are long extended. Be short. Lop off the branches; stick to the main facts in the case. If you write say what you want to say and quit.

A brother in the West writes: "I own a ten acre tract of land in southern Oregon, valued at one thousand dollars, clear of all incumbrance It is prairie, suitable for garden purposes. A small stream runs across it. It is about six miles from the thrifty town of Lakeview. Considerable mining in surrounding country." The brother who owns this garden land would like to sell it, as he never expects to make his home in Oregon. If any reader is interested in further information, address the Editor, who will forward the communication directly to the owner.

In this issue Brother Francis makes a criticism on Brother Corbaley's article in The Restitution of Nov. 28th. In reading the proof of Bro. Corbaley's most excellent article, "Some Misunderstood Passages of Scripture Explained," we noticed the words which Brother Francis has criticised: "By this same spirit Christ went and preached to the spirits in prison. How did he preach to them? He sent the spirit upon Noah," etc. Apparently and grammatically Christ is the antecedent noun for "he." These words make Brother Francis' strictures legitimate; but as a matter of fact we are sure Brother Corbaley intended to say nothing of the kind Just down below the words quoted and criticised, is the following clean cut sentence: "Christ did not do the preaching to them in person, but God sent the spirit upon Noah." We confess after considerable experience that it is very difficult to write and say exactly what we mean. Let writers, then, be careful, and let readers be lenient.

EDITOR'S VISIT AT ROLL, INDIANA

December the 4th we left home on an early morning train for Roll, Indiana, where we were engaged to give a series of sermons on the evenings of the week. Mr. Ely, the husband of Sister Ely, met us at Montpelier with an automobile, and we had a pleasant drive to Roll, a hamlet some six miles distance. After an enjoyable supper with Brother Brotherton, an electric storm set in, and our meeting on Monday evening was rained out.

For the rest of the evenings during the week the weather was too fine to adaquately describe-mild, clear, sunny days, and warm, calm, moonbewitching nights. The Methodist in the little town happened to take a notion to hold a meeting during the week. We say "happened," but the brethren say this "happens" every time they announce a meeting. Be this as it may, we got the crowd, the Methodist omitting meeting the last evening of our meeting, while we had our usual attendance.

The truth in Roll has had many ups and downs, and has passed through some very injurious vicissitudes. We had profitable and enjoyable visits together with Brother Brotherton, also Brother and Sister Vernon, Brother and Sister Hodson, and Sister Smith. There are a few more "names even in Roll, which have not defiled their garments" (Rev. 3:4), but they are very few. We have frequently visited in Roll; we know and love the faithful few there, and feel that we can render them considerable service by suggesting to them ways and means by which to improve their spiritual condition. With prayerful entreaty we beseech them to meditate upon the following remarks, and to consider thoughtfully the Scriptures we quote.

Returning to Rev. 3:1-5, we find the Spirit's message to the church in Sardis—a city that had but "few names" in it that could be listed among the faithful. The exhortation given to them is applicable to Roll: "Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God." Beloved brethren and sistes in Roll, you are "ready to die," and die you will if you do not get and use a divine tonic to restore yourselves to spiritual health. "But how can we do this?" you ask. The answer is divine and should be considered seriously: "Strengthen the things which remain." "And how shall we 'strengthen' ourselves?" you ask. Well, the God who commands you to "strengthen the things which remain," has not told you to do this without telling you also how to do it. Quit excessive concern about sinners; give the saints a little attention. Quit chasing the wolves; feed the lambs and the sheep. Quit preaching for awhile, and teach more—"build up yourselves in the most holy faith;" "strengthen" yourselves. Quit the public preaching which you have had for so long, and under which you have been slowly but surely dying, and resort to private effort—a course that has full Bible sanction, as witness the following texts, which are but specimens out of dozens: "I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have showed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house (privately), testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks" (Acts 20:20,21) This passage tells how Paul taught from the first day he set foot on the soil of Asia (verse 18). He added "from house to house" teaching to his public ministry, and with what success he tells us in Acts 19:10: "This continued by the space of two years, so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks." Private teaching is far better than public; and when Paul added "house to house" effort to his public endeavor, he only acted upon the wisdom which oozed from the pen of Solomon centuries before—"The words of wise men are heard in quiet (private) more than the cry (public) of him that ruleth among fools" (Ecc. 9:17). Conform your conduct to these wise dictates of the spirit of wisdom, dear brethren and sisters, and God's blessings must follow, for he always honors his own laws when they are obeyed. May God give us a heart to obey!

AFFILIATION WITH ORTHODOX SECTS CONDEMNED

From the dawn of time, there have been men who opposed the truth of God. In some instances they have seemed to hinder its progress for a time. But by studying the inspired history of opposing movements we have learned that "God doeth according to his will in the army of heaven, and none can stay his hand, or say unto him, What doest thou?"

All who learn the gospel of the kingdom come to see that the sects which compose Christendom are the worst enemies the truth has. Following this discovery these questions present themselves: "What should be my relationshim to the denominations of Christendom? Shall I listen to their teachings? Shall I throw my influence on their side by attending their meetings? Is it permissible for me to join them in worship, prayer, communion, membership?"

Beloved, hear Paul's words in Eph. 5:6, "Let no man deceive you with vain words." He then goes on and points out the only safe course for believers to pursue, "Be not ye therefore partakers with them" (verse 7). Paul knew that if believers listened to the "vain words" of false teachers, they would be "deceived" and drawn into error, and their final doom he tells them in the sixth verse, would be the visitation of the wrath of God upon them for disobedience. If it was disobedience to God for the Ephesian brethren to listen to false teachers in their day, we disobey

God when we listen to them today; if in listening to "vain words" of false teachers they were in danger of being deceived, we are in like danger today when we listen to vain words uttered from orthodox pulpits. "Be ye not therefore partakers with them." If we refuse to obey these mandatory words we are disobeying to the same extent that we disobey when we are disloyal to any other commandment of God.

"HATH PART IN"

Rev. 20:6

, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection" (Rev. 20:6).

These words are urged against the idea that the wicked can and must be raised at the coming of the Lord. Understanding that the first resurrection is "first" in rank and dignity (which indeed is the meaning of protos, first, as we showed last week); that while the "blessed and holy" emerge immortal, and occupy "thrones" and reign with Christ a thousand years, the unjust emerge from the tomb mortal, and after just retribution, return to the darkness of death forever, the statement of John in Rev. 20:6, can have no bearing in a chronological sense on the time when the wicked are to be raised. When John said, "This is the first resurrection," he was not seeing the good in the act of rising out of their graves; but "I saw thrones," says he, "and they that sat upon them, and judgment was given to them......they lived and reigned with Christ......This is the first resurrection." Emergence from the grave was past, and therefore by John only implied. He sees the "thrones" they occupy after they are enthroned, the "reign" they are priveleged to exercise with Christ; in a word, he sees them in immortality in their resurrection-state, and "this," he says, "is the first resurrection." It is not, "Blessed and holy is he that emerges from the grave when Christ comes, for only saints come out of the ground then." No! The inspired words are, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." What is it to "have part" in the resurrection John saw? Meros, translated "part" here means "a piece, part, portion, fellowship, lot, etc." (Parkhurst).

Then to "have part" in the resurrection John saw would be to have "a piece, part portion, fellowship, or lot" in the "thrones," "judgment," and "reign" of John's chief resurrection-state. Many will emerge from the grave when Christ comes who will have no "portion" or "lot" whatever in the "thrones," "judgment" and "reign" of Christ; he will refuse to own them. Only the "blessed and holy" can have "part" in these things. Being the subjects of an immortal resurrection, the second death can have no power over them; the unjust coming out of the grave mortal, have no "part" or "lot" in the kingdom glory. We have now proven by one of the strongest arguments of inferential evidence that the unjust have already been raised and have perished under the "power" (Rev. 20:6) of the second death, before the reign of Christ begins.

Though Rev. 20:6, is quoted by some against the resurrection of the wicked at Christ's coming, if properly understood, it proves by all the force of an inferential argument, that they are raised then. "Hath part in the first resurrection" stands in contrast with the wicked who have "their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death" (Rev. 21:8). Now to "have part in" is an expression the force of which depends upon its application. If one or two persons, who were fighting for a kingdom, conquered and reigned, while the other was vanquished and executed, it might be said that the former had his "part" or "lot" on a "throne," the latter on a scaffold; in which case all would understand that the victor lived and reigned, while the vanquished was put to death. Why? Because a throne is a place to live upon; a scaffold a place to die upon. Then when John represents certain persons as having part in the "first (or highest) resurrection" which, we have been told is to "everlasting life" (Dan. 12:2), we understand it to mean that they will live for ever; and when he says that other persons have "their part" in a lake of fire and brimstone, we understand as plainly, that they will not live forever; simply because we know it is impossible for human beings to live in a lake of fire. To condemn a man to be hanged is to condemn him to death: to condemn him to a lake of fire, is to consign him to a doom which necessarily involves, not merely death, but his total destruction. This is so obvious that the explanatory word of the text, "This is the second death," if only understood as asserting the fact, would be wholly unnecessary. But they mean more. "This is the first resurrection" means that the vision just described represented that resurrection to life formally foretold (John 5:29). "This is the second death" means that the lake of fire represents total destruction of the whole man—that eternal forfeiture of immortality which had been, from first to last, declared to be the doom of the ungodly. When John saw men who had been "beheaded for the witness of Jesus" (Rev. 20:4) on thrones reigning with Christ, he implies that they had formally been raised from the dead. So when he affirms that they "lived" and the second death had "no power" over them, and then directs our attention to the wicked whose "part" is in the lake of fire, he implies that they had been raised from the dead and that the second death did have "power" over them. In other words, there is the same evidence in Rev. 20 to prove the resurrection of the wicked prior to the reign of Christ as there is to prove the resurrection of the righteous: precisely the same.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Editor:

On Sunday morning of November 5th there were a series of meetings started at Brush Creek, which continued two weeks. They were very successful, weather being ideal, and attendance good. Brother J. H. Anderson spoke well and earnest to the crowds that gathered from time to time; and on Sunday morning, November 19th, quite a number gathered at a little stream of water when five worthy ones put on Christ and arose to walk in a new life. At the morning service they were received into the fellowship of the church.

A Sister.

Dear Restitution:

How full of good things the last Restitution is, as well as all the others! The paper gets better and better all the time. Your comments on the death of Pastor Russell could not be improved, to my mind. I certainly want extra numbers for that article, not to mention the other good things this number contains. We feel so rejoiced over the Linograph Fund. I am sending out papers and tracts, trying as best I can to spread the good news of Christ's coming and kingdom.

Yours in hope, Azorah M. Scroggs.

Dear Editor.

Our meetings at Brush Creek began the first Sunday in November, and lasted over the third Sunday. During the meetings Brother Anderson spoke on some very interesting subjects that any one could understand. Ezek. 3:27 says: "But when I speak with thee I will open my mouth and thou shalt say unto them Thus saith the Lord God, He that heareth, let him hear, and he that forbeareth, let him forbear; for they are a rebellious house." Some of the subjects were based on what we must do to be saved, and he also spoke on prophecy. He discoursed on subjects in the Old Testament. The subject on the last Saturday evening of the last week was baptism. Then on Sunday morning about nine o'clock, five were baptized into the all-saving name of Jesus Christ, making fifteen members during this year. Rom. 6:3 says: "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?" Mark 16:15,16: "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." In these verses Christ is speaking to his disciples telling them what to do to be saved. Brother Anderson also pointed out what people must do to be saved: we must first believe the gospel, reform, that is to turn from evil ways, repent and be baptized for the remission of our sins. Baptism is the only way that one can receive everlasting life, and if you live faithfully unto the end you may receive the crown of life that fadeth not away.

NATIONAL BEREAN COLUMN

What does the Gospel mean to you?

We have learned the word "Gospel" comes from two words meaning "Good News," and we read in Matt. 4:23 where Jesus went about preaching the Gospel of the kingdom (telling the people the good news of a future kingdom). He then gave the commission to his disciples to go into all the world and preach the Gospel (Mark 16:15).

In Dan. 7:27 it is told us where the kingdom is to be, and in Rev. 11:15 who is to be the king, and that it is to be a rigtheous reign (Jer. 23:3-6).

Now what does this message mean to us? Is it a theory or a living force in our lives? Does it prompt us to follow daily in the service of our Savior? Are we going to those in sorrow, and to those burdened with the cares of this life with words of comfort, to those with kind and encouraging words whose spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak? Are we lending assistance to those who are in material need, even though it be a sacrifice to us?

Are we going to those who have never heard of this glorious kingdom and telling them of it, and that we can be heirs if we obey the commandments given us in the Scriptures (Gal. 3:27-29)? Are we asking them to meet with us and take part in Bible study? This last is not a work for ministers alone. All of us who have this light should work for the salvation of our fellow men.

If we do these things the Gospel will mean something to us.

Mrs. Orpha Anderson-Sanford.

What is Your Life?

Of the many questions given for consideration, none are more important than that given by the apostle James, "What is your life?" Listen to the solemn warning given in answer to this question. "It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth." The vapor vanishes so quickly before the heat of the rising sun that it is given as a fitting simile of human life. As the solemnity of the question dawns upon us, we perceive the warning. Life is too brief to waste, too uncertain to allow of boastful plans for tomorrow. "If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this or that." This language shows in whom we should put our trust—in Him who is able to save or destroy.

Inspired men of old have written in a way that seriously impresses us with the importance of culture and virtue in our brief span of life. They have pointed out the folly of sinful indulgence, of selfish passion and appetite. They have marked out the way of wisdom which gives the most true happiness in this life, and a hope of life beyond. "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom" (Psa. 90:12). Life at its natural length is compared to grass. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust. As for man, his days are as grass: as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth. For the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more. But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him" (Psa. 103). All generations but the present have been swept away by the ever rushing flood of death. It is written, "Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as asleep." We can see how rigidly the decree issued at the fall of man has been carried out, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Yet God in his mercy made man subject to death that he might not live always in sin and suffering.—Selected by Florence Laning.

Deep Breathing

One day a young man found that he needed stronger lungs. So he began taking lung exercises. Every day he filledhis upper lnugs; breathing in until his chest was expanded as much as possible. Then he filled the lower part of his lungs. Then his entire lungs. He did these things fifteen or twenty times a day for several years. At the end of these years a physician who examined him said he did not believe there was a better pair of lungs in that part of New England.

Now you notice what it was that gave that young man those lungs. It was not breathing that did it. Everybody breathes In order to live, people have to breathe fresh air into their lungs and let it out again. It was not breathing that gave him his strong lungs: it was deep breathing; it was taking in, day after day, more air than people usually do.

This helps us to understand something else. Air is all around us; we are always breathing air; but we have to practice deep breathing in order to get strong lungs. So, too, it is also in our relations with God. God is everywhere. He is always with us.

"Nearer is he than breathing, Closer than hands and feet."

But still God does not seem to help and use most of us very much—why is this? It is because most of us take just so much of God as comes to us naturally, without making any try to get more of him. But when we pray, when we read God's word, when we try to know and do his will—when, day after day, we do this thoughtfully, honestly—then we find that God helps us more than he did before. This is what the Bible means when it says, "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you" (James 4:8).—Selected by a Berean.

A Christmas Wish

To The Linotype Givers and to All the Dear Ones of the Household of Faith.

What shall I wish for you, dear ones,
For coming Christmas Day?
I want good things: long-lasting things,
That will not slip from grasp away.

Love, that will shield like shadowing rock.
The Faith, that nought can dim.
Hope, that can stand time's rudest shock,
And still keep step with him.—Auntie Wince.

MY PRAYER

Lord, dear Lord—
I ask you with me this hour to dwell
In secret prayer and silence, while I tell
To thee my heart's desires, though they be Worthless and but nought to cast to sea.

Lord, dear Lord—
Art not thou the one from whom all goodly treasures flow?
And is my portion but so small and low
That I must with the wicked to that home of dread depart,
With other scoffers who have sacrificed their hearts?

Lord, dear Lord—
I better know thy plan that thou hast given,
And in my heart I love thy truths sent down
from heaven;
And Father, if thou wilt render all forgiveness
of my past,
Yea, to thy word will I be faithful to the last.

Lord, dear Lord—
Oft times in silent prayer divine
I wish one thing to understand that heart of mine.
Is it as true as I could make it while I roam?
O Lord, may I be one partaker of thy future home. —Georgia Gazeley.

A BRIGHT PAGE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Tidbits of Pleasant and Useful Information

Gathered from Everywhere

When Solomon was tried by the Queen of Sheba as to his wisdom, the rabbis tell us that she brought some artificial flowers with her, beautifully made and delicately scented, so as to be facsimiles of real flowers. She asked Solomon to discover which were artificial and which were real. The wise man bade his servants open the window, and when the bees came in they flew at once to the natural flowers, and cared nothing for the artificial. So you will find that children have their instincts, and discover very speedily who is their friend and, depend upon it, the children's friend is one who will be worth knowing.—The Sermonizer.

Humane Warfare Impossible

You cannot overthrow governments or wage war without committing deeds which everybody considers crimnal under ordinary circumstances; it is as ridiculous to talk about humane executions and humane warfare as about humane rapine, murder, and rape.

Why Women Are More Religious Than Men

The real reason why women are more religious than men today is because they are more human than men. Is it not by nature that they are so. Social conditions have made them so. As we have divided the labor of the world between the sexes, the work of men is almost entirely concerned with the production and distribution of things; the work of women almost entirely with the production and sustenance of persons. We all of us at times notice the great throngs of men who go, at the call of the whistle, in and out of our great factories. To the average man's mind, these hundreds of men are "hands," and the purpose of the factories where they are employed is to produce "goods;" but to the average woman's mind, these hundreds of laborers are human beings, and the purpose of the factories is to furnish sustenance, through pay envelopes, to men and women and boys and girls and babies yet unborn. In most of our homes the man leaves human interests early in the morning, devotes the best hours of his day to the welfare of things, and returns to persons again only for the evening's relaxation. His wife, meanwhile, has hardly done an act of labor all the day, has hardly made a plan or had a thought, which is not with considerable intimacy related to human beings—her husband, her children, her neighbors.

Mirrors and Morals.—An old trapper who recently attended church in a Western city said that he heard the preacher assert that what the savage needed was a mirror—that the savage has no mirror, but if he had he would be more cleanly. Commenting on it, the old backwoodsman remarked that all our American savages pride themselves a great deal on their mirrors. He spent his youth among the Umatillas, Nez Perces, Snakes, and Blackfeet, and, while they did not have full length mirrors in their wigwams, fully two thirds of the warriors had hand-mirrors tied on to the horns of their saddles by buckskin strings, and they used these mirrors continually. The savages were proud of their own ugliness, which seemed to them to be beauty. And so there are many men who are going on in sin today who are proud of the very scars caused by their sins. Morally they are ugly and loathsome, but they do not know it. It is only when you can bring a man face to face with Jesus Christ, and he sees in the pure and noble Christ what manhood ought to be, that he gets a proper idea of the ugliness of his sins.

Catholic Edict Against Dancing

Many church people, particularly adherents of the Methodist and Baptist churches, among the most aggressive of the Protestant denominations, are opposed to dancing because they consider its effects evil, demoralizing and inimical to the work of the church. The discipline of the Methodist church contains an express prohibition against the amusement and at the general conference of Methodists some time ago it was voted to retain this prohibition, although a decidedly liberal tendency is generally in evidence at present.

A papal decree issued from Rome recently orders the Catholic church in all parts of the world under severe penalty to prohibit dancing of any kind "at church entertainments, whether arranged for already or planned for the future." The decree recites that "in the last century in the United States the custom sprang up of gathering Catholic families to balls which used to be protracted to a late hour at night by entertainments and other forms of amusements," that officials of the church, noting "the perils and losses caused by the growing custom, considered it their duty to forbid them" and accordingly issued an order for priests to take care to remove entirely that abuse in which entertainments and balls are held for the purpose of promoting pious objects."

In time, however, this order was forgotten, it is recalled, and the balls again became common "and even spread into the neighboring Dominion of Canada."

High officials of the church, after counseling together and studying the matter, decided that the order should be restored and obedience to it enforced and with the approbation of the Pope "decreed that all priests, secular and regular, and other clerks are absolutely forbidden to promote or foster the said balls, even though if in aid of and in support of pious works, or any other pious end; moreover, all clerks are forbidden to be present at these balls if they happen to be promoted by laymen. This decree the sovereign pontiff ordered to become a part of public law and to be observed religiously by all, everything to the contrary notwithstanding."

The decree has occasioned considerable discussion. Some believe that it will materially curtail the revenue of the Catholic church, as the balls are employed in many quarters to raise money for church purposes; in Chicago alone, it is said, the enforcement of the edict will cut off hundreds of thousands of dollars a year from the church's income. Others believe that the effect on the finances as a whole will scarcely be appreciable.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 69 CLEVELAND, O. DECEMBER 26, 1916 NUMBER 1

A PART IN THE PLAN

Because my life is what it is,
Shall I despair,
And offer up bitter complaints
Instead of prayer?
Because my life is what it is,
I may instead
Be drawn the closer unto God,
And comforted.

And the comfort wherewith
He comforteth,
Makes precious every need
And life as it is, if he wants it so,
Is precious to me indeed.

Because my life is what it is,
His Canaan seems more sweet,
And every joy that finds me out,
I rise to meet,
With keen surprise, because my life
Is what it is,
The least in that stupendous plan
Of Deity's.

For my part in the plan is but Weakness,
My place in the structure small,
But what a thing for a worm of the dust
To be in the plan at all!

THE TRUE GOD AND ETERNAL LIFE

By M. Joblin, Deceased

Beloved in the Lord: Your attention is invited to the words of the Spirit in 1 John 5:20,21, "This is the true God, and eternal life. Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen." So the apostle ends his letter. These words are probably not only the close of this epistle, but among the last words, chronologically, of Scripture. The dear old man who leaned on Jesus' breast seems to have gathered up his ebbing force to sum up his life's work in a sentence which might be remembered, though much else be forgotten. Last words stick. Doubtless, too, he was directed to write for the benefit of us in these last days. At all events, we have what he wrote, and we are grateful. It is observable that in this final utterance, the apostle drops the triumphant "we know," reiterated with such emphasis in the previous chapters. I think he did not do this because he doubted that all his brethren would gladly confirm what he was about to say, but because it was fitting that his last words should be his very own; the utterance of personal experience, and weighty with it, and with apostolic authority. So he melts down all that he had learned from Christ, and had been teaching for fifty years, into one sentence. The feeble voice rings out clear and strong, and then softens into tones of earnest exhortation, almost of entreaty. The dying light leaps up in one bright flash, the lamp goes to pieces, so to speak, but the flash remains to shine into our lives so that we shall not walk in darkness, but have the light of life.

Here, then, is the sum of all that we need to know about God: "This is the true God, and eternal life." But whom does John mean when he says, "This is the true God?" Grammatically we may refer the word to the immediately preceding name, Jesus the Christ. But it is extremely improbably that the apostle should so suddenly shift his point of view, as he would do if, having just drawn a clear distinction between him that is true, and the Christ who reveals him, he immediately proceeded to apply the former designation to Jesus Christ himself. It is more in accordance with his teaching and with the whole of the passage, if by "This" we understand the Father, of whom he has just been speaking. And when he says, "This is the true God," he means to say, "This God of whom I have said Jesus is the sole revealer, and of whom I have been declaring that we can know through Jesus Christ, and dwell abidingly in him—This, and none else, is the true God."

But what does the apostle mean by true?—True God? A great deal could be said in answer to this question, and from several points of view: but I am of the opinion that from the environment of the apostolic church—heathenism everywhere that the words "True God," used by our Lord in John 17:3, and by Paul in 1 Thess. 1:9, and 1 John 5:20, it was intended to make him stand out in strong contrast with the numerous false and imaginary, and lifeless, gods of heathendom. Not knowing if all of you were acquainted with the mythology of Greece and Rome, I thought it might not be amiss to make some reference to it here.

Mythology is compounded of two Greek words —Muthos, a fable, and Logos, a discourse; and signifies a system of fables, or the fabulous history of the false gods of the heathen world. Fable is divided into various kinds; and the following is an example of the instructive fable: When Philip's son, the hereditary enemy of the liberty of Greece, demanded that eight of their leading men be delivered up to him as the great impediment of Mutual Amity, the famous orator addressed his fellow citizens as follows: "On a time an embassy came from the wolves to the sheep, assuring them that the dogs by which they were attended were the sole occasion of their trouble; wherefore, if they would give up the dog, all would be well, and end in lasting peace and safety. The sheep were persuaded to give up the dogs, and henceforth the wolves devoured them at pleasure."

A second sort of fable is political, as the following: "When Jupiter heard of the death of his son Sarpedon, in the rage of grief he called Mercury, the messenger of the gods, and ordered him to go instantly to the Fates and bring from them the strong box in which the eternal decrees were laid up. Mercury obeyed, and went to the three sisters—the Fates—and omitted nothing that a wise and well instructed minister of state could say, to make them pacify the will of Jove. The sisters smiled, and told him that the other end of the golden chain which secured the box with the unalterable decrees was so fixed to the throne of Jove that were it unfastened his master's seat itself might tremble." I offer this to show what sort of a field the disciples of our Lord had to sow the seed of the kingdom. Everywhere religion, law, and philosophy was a mixture taught by fables Plutarch says the most ancient theology both of Greeks and barbarians was natural philosophy; involved with fables, that physically and mystically conveyed the truth to the learned; there being nothing at all for the unlearned. And we may well wonder what of truth could reach the learned from the source indicated, when it had to be conveyed to them in fables and mysticism. O what a baseless fabric seems to rise before us as we think of the gods and goddesses, Pan, Parce, The Furies, Harpy, The River God, Jupiter Ammon, Jupiter Pluvius, Juno, Vesta, Cybele, Neptune, Pluto, Minerva, Vulcan, Mercury, Hercules, Saturn, Apollo, Diana, and a great many others of the principal heathen deities, besides a vast number of inferior gods. And when we reflect that the characters assigned to many of these deities were most abominable—it would seem that the best class of worshipers could only be inspired by dread or fear.

I cannot extend remarks in this direction except to say that it is against all such the Apostle brings to our notice the true God, whom to know, is life eternal. He is the God of all grace. The favors of all the other gods—besides being nothing at all—yes, people were taught that their favors had to be purchased by sacrifice. In other words, they had to bribe their gods to secure their good offices. Animals, such as black sheep and swine, were at first offered in sacrifice; and after this they decided to enhance the value of the offerings by human sacrifices. The Gauls and Germans were so devoted to this shocking custom that no business of any moment was transacted among them, without being prefaced by the blood of men to various gods, but particularly Hesus, Taranis and Thautates. These deities are mentioned by Lucan, when he enumerates the nations who followed the fortunes of Caesar.

Before passing on, I beg to remind you that the Apostle in the next verse—the last of the epistle—says what should make us realize that although the grosser forms of idolatry have passed away there are in reality more idols than ever, erected now. Not on the hill-tops, nor in shady groves, but in the hearts of men and women. Whatever monopolizes our affection apart from God is an idol. Says the Apostle, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." But more of this further on.

I want to emphasize the distinction between the living and true God, and the gods many of Heathendom; if I can. This true God is he, I repeat, who manifested himself to man; in whose heart I can lay my head, and in whose undying love I can repose, and upon whose light, bright as it is, I can gaze, and in whose life I can participate, in whose righteousness I can share, and to whose glory I am an heir through grace—yes, the true God is he who was manifested to us in the flesh of Jesus; this is the true God, the real God, the only God, and of whom the Apostle says: "To us there is but one God the Father, out of whom are all things—and we for him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, through whom are all things, and are through him." So that light, heat, incorruptibility and life, centre in one Eternal Substance which is the great self-existing and central power of the universe. This substance is spirit, for we are positively told that God is Spirit. He upholds all things, and in him we live, and move and have our being. This, is by the seven Spirits which is before his throne (Rev. 1:4; 3:1; 4:5; 5:6). This ungrammatical expression is a puzzler for all the commentators of the Apostacy. "Seven Spirits which is before his throne"—not which are. Thank God for Moses and the Prophets which furnish the key to this ungrammatical expression. Seven in the Book of God is the symbol of unity and perfection. You are aware that there is but one Spirit (Eph. 4:4), so, symbolically seven, they are complete in one. Hence being the representative of one spirit, the substantive verb is expressed in the third person singular, and not in the plural, as the grammar of the sentence requires. There is but one spirit there, and this one is the nominative to the verb "is." Spirit pervades the boundless universe from the throne of light, in all its space: and wherever spirit is, there God is present, and, as Paul said to the Athenians, "Not far from every one of us." This divine presence everywhere by his free spirit, is beautifully and forcibly expressed in the 139th Psalm, as follows: "Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or, whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend into the heavens thou art there; if I make my bed in Sheol, behold thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me, even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day; the darkness and the light are both alike to thee." O what a wonderful God and Father we have, and is it not more wonderful still, that he has taken notice of such worms of the dust as we are, and has drawn us to himself by amazing cords of love—adopted us into his family and granted all the rights and immunities of begotten children, made us joint heirs with the only begotten Son he had, and heirs of himself? What amazing love and condescension!

Love, like the creeping vine, withers if it has nothing to embrace.—(Niovini).

J. HENRY FABRE

"The words of the wise spoken in quiet are heard more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools" (Ecc. 9:17).

When David watched and listened by night in the wilderness by the cave of Adullum, and looked up into the blue vault above, he was impressed by the greatness of the wide creation, and his mind mounting to the conception of the majesty of the Creator through his work in the infinite, he gave expression to his lofty thoughts in so many immortal psalms that have constituted the sacred songs of many nations, "When we beheld God's heavens, the work of his fingers."

Solomon his son, however, seems to have been impressed in a different way: he was a nature student in another line. "And he spake of trees, from the cedar of Lebanon, even to the hyssop that groweth out of the wall; he spake also of beasts and of fowl, and of creeping things and of fishes;" but in both instances we observe that in the background of their thought there was the feeling after "the intelligence as well as the power that directed and propelled the forces of which these things only were the product." But David in the wilderness never could conceive of the vastness of creation such as the telescope lenses have revealed in our day; and the modern researches of science by the microscope and other means far outreaches any knowledge that Solomon possessed on the subject. Nevertheless, during the last cenutry all the efforts of a clique of so-called scientists, who have managed to pose before the public as the real and only men "with whom wisdom will die," and who also have occupied the principal "chairs" in the universities and sometimes the chief seats of synagogues, have been bent toward trying to explain how every thing tumbled out of chaos of its own accord, and the aggregation of atoms is all there is to any of us. There have been a few bold spirits that had the temerity to run counter to this great tide of atheism, which set in with LaPlace at the time of the French Revolution, and which reached its flood with Darwin and his peers, boasting loftily of their scientific attainments, and talking loudly of the irreconcilable difference between science and religion; and these few bold spirits were like voices crying in the wilderness.

But wisdom is justified of her children, and it stands to reason that the two books of God—Nature and Revelation—cannot be at variance one from the other. In fact, the earlier saints had no written revelation. Abraham had no Bible that we know of, neither had Moses. David had a small edition, so had Solomon and all the prophets; but the most of them were children of the desert and read after the tracery of the fingers of the Almighty. And we in our day, What of us? Had we not better return to the wild somewhat? Many opinions, most of the weird and fantastic ideas that are born with "freak" theologies, are the result of fever heated imagination from the artificial atmosphere of city slums. Witness Billy Sunday and his vast following among the degenerates that he himself denounces. Could such wild vaporings endure by the calm of the seaside or the hillside, or in the depths of the woods apart from the seething effervesence of the multitude.

"Go to the ant," says Solomon; "Consider the lilies of the field," says Jesus. Yes, the ant and lilly have their quiet lesson to give us on the deep practical things of God, if we know how to read aright; and if we don't know how to read aright, even the Bible is a book of mysteries that fools wrest to their own condemnation, just as they do with the other works of God.

I have been reading lately the works of the now famous naturalist, J. H. Fabre. He certainly is one of the most entertaining writers that ever wrote on the subject of natural history. Until his death last year, 1915, at the advanced age of eighty odd years, he had spent his long life in careful and truly scientific experiment, with animals of various sorts, particularly insects, which experiments and results he had recorded with his pen in quite as interesting a manner as any of Anderson's or Grime's fairy tales. These stories, of course, have to be read to be appreciated; but I thought that some of the conclusions that this great man has drawn from three quarters of a century of patient study and observation, or rather study from observation on the subject matter direct; for he has a large contempt for book knowledge. In his writings he seldom mentions the subject of God or the name, yet even while reading you feel the Presence of the Intelligence that is always shadowed in the background, sometimes unexplainable, but there just the same.

Let me translate a few passages that shew, I think, the spirit of the man very clearly. The firts is from "Mervielles de Linstinct," and is a side slap at those "Transformationists" (evolutionists) that so readily explain anything with a wave of the hand or a stroke of the pen: "What explanation do I propose to account for the marvellous facts that I set forth? None! Absolutely none! I do not explain; I narrate. From day to day more skeptical in regard to explanation that may be proposed to me, more hesitant in regard to those I would propose myself. The more I observe and experiment the clearer I see rising in the dark cloud of possibilities an enormous interrogation point."

The next, quotations are from "Les Auxiliares" (animals helpful to man in agriculture). The book is put in form of conversations between Paul the teacher and several pupils. The subject of this particular quotation is the Lerot, a little animal in his part of France something like our ground squirrel (for it must be noted that he only deals with creatures that have come under his own observation).

Emile—"They are very wise, these little animals, and they know that at the end of their winter sleep they will find no fruit in the country, and they store their eatables; but why do they not provide pears and apples, of which they are so fond?

Paul—"Because pears and apples rot, while nuts and almonds keep.

Emile—"I never thought of that, and this little Lerot did.

Paul—"Neither did this little animal. It does not know that pears rot and nuts keep, because it has never experimented. It does not foresee that at his spring waking the trees for from bearing fruit will hardly have their first leaves. It is ignorant of how long a time it will have to wait to find a pear to nibble. It knows nothing of these things with which it experiments for the first time, perhaps. Another thinks for him and inspires him with wisdom to store his nuts in a hole in the wall. It is God, the Father of man, who plants the pear, Father also of the little Lerot who loves pears so much."

This quotation shows, I think, the tender loving disposition of the author. At another place he remarks: "Remember here there is not in the animals such foolishness as results from our manner of looking at things. When we comprehend the true aim we find their actions in accord with logic that is perfect. The animal has not a choice of acts. It is made to exercise functions that are invariable and in conformity with its kind of life, determined for all time by a providential wisdom, and these creatures deprived of liberty of action may not, and cannot, commit our inconsistencise. Only man is free; by a sublime privilege he is abanoned to opposite inspirations of good and evil, to sane reason and blind passion, in order that there may be for him the meritorious struggle in view of his immortal destiny. He seeks and choses at his risk and peril, for his future grandure or his confusion, the true and the false, the just or unjust, the beautiful or the ugly. From the results of the association we obtain moral force or weakness, error or truth, light or darkness, victory or defeat. The animal not having to fight like us in the meritorious combat of life, is continually what he always was, and what he always will be; he does to day what he did yesterday, and will do tomorrow. Since ages on ages he does it without alteration, without decadence, with a logic unconscious but infallible, because he is forever ruled by the unconscious reason."

It is gratifying to know that this clear, calm voice, speaking with the authority of a ripe knowlege which is unquestionable, comes from LeBelle, France, where LaPlace and atheists had the sway a century ago. To me it is a sign of the times, and the dawn that reaches the mountain crowns first; soon after sheds light in the vales also.

I. F. Gelletly

AN EXPOSITION OF MATTHEW 25

In the last two years several have written articles on the above Scripture, and apparently have not arrived exacty at the same conclusion. I have long since learned that when two people differ upon any given subject, that the only hope of ever getting together, lies in finding a point upon which both can agree, and then reason from that point.

Let us see then if there is any point upon which we all agree in Matthew 25, and reason together from that point.

First of all, then, we agree that the parables refer to the kingdom. In Matthew 13 we notice that Jesus does say that the kingdom of heaven is like unto a sower. The reason is apparent, because it applies to the preaching of the word in this present age. The parables following this are different; for he says the kingdom of heaven is like unto certain things.

We can readily see that it would not do, and in fact it would be fatal to a correct interpretation of the scriptures, to apply the parable of the sower to the kingdom age. Jesus says in this parable, "The seed is the word of God," or in other words, the word of the kingdom. This word of the kingdom produces seed for the next sowing. So when he gave them the parable of the tares of the field, the disciples noticed something different in it, and so much so that they came to him for a private interpretation. This parable plainly refers to the kingdom age, for Jesus says in verse 14: "The Son o Man shall send forth his angels (messengers), and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and they which do iniquity." This cannot be done till the kingdom arrives. So then when Jesus says the kingdom of God is like a hidden treasure, or a woman that hid the leaven in three measures of meal, etc., he did not mean that this age was like that, but as he says, the kingdom. Our interpretation can become very faulty by applying texts to the wrong place, time, and people. What applies to the Jew will not afyly to the Gentile; so what applies to this age will not apply to the age to come. Jesus said to the woman of Canaan, "I am not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." His message then would not apply to other people. This did not prevent him, however, from casting her a crumb of that which belonged exclusively to his own people.

Now then we are prepared to know that the elements are working towards the kingdom. So that our readers may know just what we mean, we will say the old mother of harlots that meets her fate in the age to come, is already in existence. She does not develop and meet her doom all in the same age. So the things that are to be gathered out of the kingdom, are growing now. So in the past, as well as at the present time, things are growing to a head. The cabbage starts from a small plant, and develops by a slow growth to a final head. Then Jesus means when he says, "The kingdom of God is like to" certain things, that it is like the growth or development of the things likened to the kingdom. For instance, the kingdom is likened to leaven in the meal. To know, then, how it is like the leaven, it is necessary for us to study the process and learn how the leaven works in the meal. It works by slow process; just so elements are working to a final consumation in the kingdom of God.

Now we are ready to study the parable of Matthew 25. Not so much who the five wise and the five foolish virgins refer to, but more particularly to the lesson taught in general. We can all agree had the Jews been ready and had known, "The day of their visitation," the kingdom would have been set up. Inasmuch then as Jesus came "to his own," and his mission was to the Jew only, we must believe the parables were lessons for them. The house of Israel is called "a virgin," so in this parable we have ten virgins brought to view, five with oil and five without. So let us study the conditions that lead up to the kingdom.

The Jews believed and still believe in the restoration of their kingdom. Jesus made it plain to them, at least as plain as it could be made to partly blind people, that he was the one to restore their kingdom. Paul says, "They were blind in part," and that Jesus was their king was the very thing they could not see; so they were without oil, and referring to this blindness,Paul says in Acts 13:27, "For they that dwell at Jerusalem and their rulers, because they knew him not." In this parable, verse 12, Jesus said, "I know ye not," as a word of caution against like conditions. Jesus says again, verse 13, "Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour, wherein the Son of Man cometh." Here then are two classes. Jesus seems to include his followers and, of course, we have the blind, and those that see, then as now.

Now that he is done with this he seems to turn his attention to his followers in this age. To prove that the wise virgins are his followers, or servants of the present age, we turn to Mat. 24:45, which reads as follows: "Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord has made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?" To clinch the argument, verse 46 says, "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." So in both chapters he refers to his return. You will notice that in his conclusion of the parable of the ten virgins that he winds up by referring to his return. In verse 14, he turns his attention to his "own servants," whom we have found to be the wise virgins. He delivers them their ta'ents, and takes his journey into the far country, after a long time he returns to those servants and reckons with them. He seems to deem it necessary to caution these servants against a like fate of the foolish virgins, after showing the events that lead up to the kingdom, which includes the blind Jew and his own faithful servants.

He then breaks off and begins talking about the works of the kingdom. Verse 31 says, "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." The bride has made herself ready, as we have already seen in the faithful and wise servants. Further, we are all agreed that when Jesus sits on his throne the bride occupies the throne with him. The events that follow verse 31 must apply to the kingdom age, so verse 32 says. "Before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them, one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." That we cannot be mistaken in regard to this referring to the kingdom age, and being a work of Christ and his bride, we refer to verse 34, which says, "Then shall the king say." Here he calls himself "king," which is not true now.

Referring to the same class of faithful and wise servants, and the same time as we have it in Matt. 24th and 25th chapters, we quote from Rev. 2:26,27: "And he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron, as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers (or broken up or divided like the dividing of the sheep and goats), even as I receive of my Father."

That these faithful servants refer to the bride and occupy the throne with Jesus when this work of dividing the sheep and the goats is accomplished, is proven further by Rev. 3:21 which says: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne.' And then to sum up, it is plain that Jesus taught by this parable (Matt. 25) the conditions as they were then, or as he found the Jew when he came, and as he will find his bride when he returns, and then the subsequent work after he and his bride take the throne and their work among the nations. It might be thought that this seemed the fate of the Jew, but we must note that Jesus is talking about the bride and the bridegroom. The Jews as a nation lost their chance of going into the marriage by going to buy oil. This does not mean that they will have no part in the work during the kingdom age, in some other capacity. No, they lost this exalted position, but hear God in Jer. 46:28: "Fear thou not, O Jacob, my servant, saith the Lord, for I am with thee, for I will make a full end of all the nations (divide them up like a shepherd doth divide the sheep and the goats) whither I have driven thee, but I will not make a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure, yet will I not leave thee wholly unpunished."

So they have received their correction, shut out from the marriage, but that is not their full end, as God hath said. When Jesus was here he dealt with conditions as they were and as they would be. Past, present and future was in a great deal of his teachings. We find this in Rev. 1:19: "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter." Then the Jews were blind and went not into the marriage, or in other words, were not ready to receive the bridegroom. Now the getting ready of his servants to enter into the marriage when the bridegroom returns; then the occupancy of the throne together and the dividing of the nations. This is the teachings of Matt. 25. The things that then were, and the things that now are, and that which is to come.

EDITORIAL

We have gained by removal from Seattle, Washington, Brother George Dowle. Brother Dowle was taught the truth and baptized here many years ago. He has now come back to us to wait for the coming of the Lord.

With our Linograph Fund now practically raised, we are prepared to begin the new year under better conditions. And instead of dropping our efforts, which have done much for the glory of God and the advancement of his truth during 1916, we must continue them, giving them only a change in direction during 1917. Let all whose subscription is due, send their renewal soon, and let us all begin a vigorous campaign for new subscribers. We mean by "us" every reader of The Restitution in the United States and Canada.

We have no further news regarding the proposed debate between William Brown, of the Christadelphians, and Menta Sturgeon, of the Russellites. On account of Mr. Russell's death recently, Mr. Sturgeon has probably been much occupied.—Bible Truth.

We wish to remind the Editor of "Bible Truth," and through him "William Brown," that Brother Browr challenged the Editor of The Restitution to debate about a year ago, and his challenge was accepted. We have not heard from him since then. His protracted silence led us to suppose the brothre had gone out of the debating business, but from above news item he seems to be waiting for a duel with Mr. Sturgeon and the Russellites. Now we suggest that while he is waiting for the Russellites to get ready for combat, he occupies his time by debating with us. Naturally Mr. Sturgeon has been "much occupied" since Pastor Russell's demise, and will be too busy to debate for some time to come. We are not busier now than usual.

Sunday evening, December 17th, the following friends were inducted into Christ by baptism: Mr. and Mrs. Novy, husband and wife, formerly neutral; and Mr. and Mrs. Drenske, husband and wife, both formerly neutral. The truth was introduced to Brother and Sister Drenske, by Brother A. E. Griffiths, a brother who is comparatively young in the faith himself. After Brother and Sister Drenske became interested they enlisted the attention and interest of Brother and Sister Novy. "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength," is a Scripture the truth of which has again been demonstrated (Psa. 8:2). And we have told the story of how four more dear friends have become dearly beloved brothers and sisters to encourage and stimulate every reader to indefatigable and personal endeavour in the proclamation of the truth. Above two couples have been married only recently, are young people of sterling worth; and we pray that they may not only save themselves by a life of obedience, but may save others also (1 Tim. 4:16).

A SERIOUS MATTER

Attention, Brethren and Sisters

Prophecy declares that war will be a dominating feature of the last days. The god of war is now ruling Europe with an iron hand, and several eminent statesmen of America, although ignorant of God's prophetic disclosures concerning milatarism in these days, have recently said the United States must soon have war. Their foresight is clear that war is inevitable. A few states have already passed laws of universal training for our boys. Ohio is now seriously talking of universal conscription for her young men, and other states are tending in the same direction. A perplexing problem is thus presented to the Church of God. We are under divine law, and this law forbids unkindness, hatred, etc., to say nothing of murder. What are we to do, then, in view of our government passing laws which will force us to disobey God's law?

This matter was discussed in an official meeting of the Cleveland Church not long since; and as Brother George B. Alldridge was adjudged the most competent brother we have in a military sense, he having formerly been an instructor in the British Navy, we gave him instruction to take the matter in hand; and you will now soon be hearing from him through The Restitution. He thinks the proper way to proceed is by petition of the government for military exemption, provided we do it now while we are in the calm of peace. Of course, after war breaks out it will be too late. Look for his contributions on the subject, and let us follow his lead in a fight for military exemption.

EDITOR'S CHRISTMAS SERMON NOTES

Preached on Sunday, Dec. 24th, 1916

Text, Luke 1: 78,79: "Through the tender mercy of our God, whereby the dayspring (margin, sunrising) from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace."

I Our Saviour's Birth

I Set forth under the idea of "dayspring," the rising sun.

(a) In the Old Testament (Numb. 24:17; Isa. 9:2; Matt. 4:16; Mal. 4:2).

(b) In the New Testament (John 1:9; 8:12; 2 Peter 1:19; Rev. 22:16).

II He has "visited" our benighted world once, his Father-glory dimmed by the veil of flesh, his light shining but feebly through the clouds of time; but he is to appear a second time in a "morning (dayspring, sunrising) without clouds" (1 Jno. 3:1; John 1:14; 2 Sam. 23:4).

II Why He was Born

I "To give light to them that sit in darkness" (Eph. 4: 17, 18).

II "And in the shadow of death" (Job 3:5;10:21,22; 24:17; Heb. 2:14,15 Psa. 23:4).

III "To guide our feet into the way of peace" (Rom. 12:18; Luke 2:14; Rom. 5:1).

III The Mercy of God Displayed in the Birth of Christ

I "The tender mercy of our God" (Gen. 3:15; Jer. 31:20; Eph. 2:4,7)!

IV Exhortation

I How willing is God to save sinners! With what unwearied kindness and "tender mercy" does he cause the sun to rise on the just and the unjust (Matt. 5:45)!

II And how great the happiness of those who believe on Christ (Titus 3:1-3; 1 Peter 2: 9, 10)!

The Vatican at Rome has twenty courts and eleven hundred rooms; and covers thirteen acres.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother Huggins:

Please find enclosed order for $6.50; $1.50 to extend our renewal for The Restitution for another year, and $5.00 to help on The Linograph Fund. Let the good work go on of spreading the glad tidings of the soon coming king. From a Brother and Sister looking for that time to come,

Mr. and Mrs. John Baxter.

Dear Restitution:

You will find enclosed post office money order for $1.50, for which please send the good old paper for another year. I hardly know how to get along without it, we miss it so much when it fails to reach us. Our little girls will send 25c each for the Linograph Fund, which will make the order $2.00 instead of $1.50. Sorry we cannot do more, but we are poor and seeing the hardest times we ever faced, and have little hope of any better until our hope be fulfilled. Names of the girls are Mercy E. Roll, and Crystal W. Roll.

Yours in hope of life, W. W. Roll.

Dear Brother:

I enclose you $2.25 which place to the credit of the Helping Fund. This is another portion of the Lord's money which has accumulated. We are rapidly nearing the great day of God Almighty. Who that has his eyes anointed with eyesalve, can fail to read the fate of the Gentile nations, as they destroy each other and the wealth which they have accumulated by years of patient covetous industry; surely it will bring the time of trouble spoken of by Daniel the prophet, "And at that time shall Michael stand up," etc.

We enter the kingdom through much tribulation: but we pray for it.

A brother waiting, M. W. Perrine.

Dear Brother Huggins:

Enclosed please find my personal check in the amount of $2.50, which I would be pleased to have you credit on my subscription and the Linotype Fund. At the present time I am receiving two copies of The Restitution; one on account of subscription, and the other as an exchange for the Gospel Trumpet. The Trumpet under my management suspended some time ago, and I am not entitled to this copy. Please discontinue.

The Restitution is a veny welcome visitor in our home. May the Lord of heaven permit it to carry on the work till finished.

Your brother in hope of life, R. O. Turner.

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed find post office order for nine dollars for the Linograph Fund. Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Hunt $6.00; Miss Gladys Hunt $3.00. We cannot help much, but want a share in the purchase of the linograph, knowing that it will make the work and expense of The Restitution staff much lighter. The Restitution has done us so much good, even before we had subscribed for it. It has been a weekly messenger of God in the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Meade (Mrs. Hunt's people), of Clarksville for many years. May God's blessing rest upon you in the work you are doing for the coming kingdom, is the wish of your brother and sister in Christ, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Hunt and daughter Gladys.

Dear Restitution:

I am so glad to see the brethren donating so liberally to the Linotype Fund. Would like to see a number of others who have not yet responded to the call, do so quickly. We should have this machine before the first of the year.

I saw some time ago where one of our ministers asked the brethren through the paper, how much they were giving toward spreading the gospel (preachers excepted). I say, "Why except the preachers?" Let the preachers help us with this fund, and we will be surprised how quickly we will get the machine. Brother and Sister D. C. Robison are preachers, and they donated liberally.

Let us not be asleep in this matter, or any other religious matters. Think I can send you two new subscribers soon.

Yours in Christ, Hanna M. Barber.

MODERN JERUSALEM

Article Supplied by The Young People's Society

From the first days of its existence Jerusalem has been a holy city, and today, among several cities sacred in the estimation of mankind, Jerusalem easily holds first place. Jerusalem is one of those cities a student can spend a life time studying, but one which traveler can see in four or five days. It is not a large city, but no other city in the world, is famed for such a mixture of races and religions.—Greeks, Syrians, Arabs, Turks, Jews, Franks and Negros all live together, each proud of his race. Every man must belong, not only to a race, but to a sect. The Moslem is the ruling race socially, but the Turks are the civil rulers. Everything is submitted to the Sultan and decided by him.

It seems strange and we do not like to think of it, but the Christian is not regarded with very much favor in Jerusalem. They are not as honorable or trustworthy in any way as Moslems. The missionary who goes to Palestine to convert the natives has more trouble converting the so called Christian than any other sect.

The shops and markets are a snare for the traveler. If he desires to purchase a rug or a trifle, the merchant will ask a very high price for it. He does not expect to receive that price. The traveler, if he be wise, will argue with the merchant until the price comes down, and a sum agreeable to both concerned is reached. The dealers do their own advertising; the noise is rather confusing. Each fellow is calling to the people describing his wares on sale, and trying to persuade them to buy.

Fresh fruit is abundant the whole year round, oranges all winter until the apricot comes in the spring; and so on through the whole of the year.

One thing that attracts the attention of the tourist is the absence of the common beggar. There are professional beggars who are grateful for help, and are the objects of public charity. But the traveler is never annoyed there like he is in his own country.

The women of Jerusalem have a hard kind of life: they have the heaviest kind of work to do. The only pleasure they have in life is loving their children.

When the natives quarrel among themselves it is rather shocking to the outsider to listen to them. They are taught swearing and lying while very young, and it is regarded as very smart.

The Jews form about two thirds of the population of Jerusalem, but they keep to themselves. They only deal in a business way with the other people. When we look back and recall the history and former glory of the Jews in the old Jerusalem, it behoves us to take warning lest we stumble and fall through disobedience to God.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LEAF

Lesson XVI

Subject, Restoration of Judah and Israel

Memory Text

"Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd does his flock" (Jer. 31:10).

1. "And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek; and his rest shall be glorious.

2. "And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

3. "And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outsasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth" (Isa. 11:10-12).

4. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch and a king shall reign and prosper and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth.

5. "In his days shall Judah be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is his name, whereby he shall be called, The Lord our righteousness.

6. "Therefore behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

7. "But the Lord liveth which brought up, and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the North Country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land" (Jer. 23: 5-8).

8. "Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone and will gather them on every side and bring them into their own land:

9. "And I will make them all one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all.

10. "My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God and they shall be my people.

11. "And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore" (Ezek. 37: 21,22,27,28).

12. "And he (Jesus) shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:33).

Practical Truths

The division of the Hebrew nation into two kingdoms, as considered in our last lesson, and their being scattered among all nations, was a matter of prophecy for many years, and was a punishment for their sins. But the same hand that scattered them will gather and unite them into one kingdom. When the kingdom is restored to Israel (Acts 1:6,7), and the ruling power, or government, will pass into the hands and upon the shoulders of Jesus the Christ (Isa. 9:6,7; Luke 1: 32,33), he will share the kingdom with (1) David, (2) his disciples, and (3) with all the saints (Ezek. 37:24; Matt. 19:28; Rev. 2:26,27; 3:21). The kingdom will grow (Isa. 9:7; Dan. 2:44,45), until it fills the whole earth. But the nucleus is the throne or kingdom of David, which was the kingdom of Israel before its division. The prophecies quoted in our lesson have never yet been fulfilled, for Judah and Israel are yet divided and scattered among the nations; Jesus does not yet reign upon David's throne, and the Apostles are dead and must first be raised to life, as well as all the saints who are promised to share the rulership of the nations with Jesus. Will we be accounted worthy to be called to the position upon his right hand and inherit the kingdom prepared for the faithful ones from the foundation of the world?

Notes on the Lesson

He that scattered Israel.—No doubt God scattered them.

Gather Him and Keep Him.—As the shepherd gathers his sheep and keeps them from harm so too God will collect the lost sheep of the houses of Israel and Judah and watch over them for their good.

1. For an Ensign of the People.—A mark of distinction in office; formally a commissioned officer bore the flag or ensign. This ensign is to be the rallying point of the people of Israel, and also the Gentile nations will seek it as the means of blessing to them.

2. In that day.—At that time.

Again the Second Time.—Notice the definiteness of this language. "Again" may mean any number of repetitions but implies that the thing spoken of has been done before, but the numeral expression "the second time" fixes the thing spoken of to the first repetition, or in other words, this is the second gathering of that people.

3. Four Corners of the Earth.—East, West, North and South—the whole world.

4. Branch.—A descendant of a family line—referring to Christ.

Shall Reign.—Rule as king.

Judgment and Justice.—His reign will be characterized by righteousness.

In the Earth.—This fully settles the place of the kingdom and reign of Jesus.

6. Out of the land of Egypt.—Israel was brought out of Egypt by the power of God under Moses, and when they affirmed a statement they used the expression "As the Lord liveth who brought up the children oc Israel out of Egypt," but the time will come when they will say, "The Lord liveth who brought the seed of the house of Jacob from all countries where he had driven them."

8. Their Own Land.—The land of promise and covenant (Psa. 105:8-11).

9. One Nation.—At the time of this prophecy they were divided into two nations or two kingdoms. Under the Messiah they are to be united into one kingdom.

10. Tabernacle.—Dwelling place.

11. Heathen.—Gentiles.

Sanctuary. A sacred place, the holy of holies, or holy oblation (Ezek. 48:20,21), set apart in the future division of the land.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

tered? Who scattered them? What promise is made in the memory text? Who will stand as an

1. Restoration Promised.—Why was Israel scat-ensign of the people? Has Israel ever been gathered before? Does this prophecy refer to the first or to the second restoration? (2). What is meant by the "outcasts of Israel" and "the dispersed of Judah?" (3). From what place will God gather them? (3). Look over paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 and tell us if in your opinion they have yet been fulfilled.

2. Jesus Christ the Restorer.—Who is the "Root of Jesse" referred to in our lesson? Does the term "The Branch" refer to the same person? In what manner will he reign? (4). What will be the condition of Judah and Israel during his reign? (5). By what other name will he be called? (5). Will Jesus be the ensign to which the nations shall seek? (1).

3. A United Kingdom.—Will Judah and Israel so long divided and scattered, ever become one nation? (9). When once united will they ever be divided? (9). Has this prophecy ever been fulfilled?

4. Jesus the King.—What was written over Jesus' head when he was crucified (Matt. 27:37)? What good confession did Jesus make before Pilate (1 Tim. 6:13; Matt. 27:11)? What throne was promised him (Luke 1:32)? What nation shall constitute his kingdom (8 and 9; Luke 1:33)? When will he take his throne (Matt. 25:31)? Is Jesus the Nobleman who has gone to a far country to receive the kingdom and to return (Luke 19:12)?

5. Gentiles Seek the Lord.—Will the Gentiles seek the Lord after Jesus comes and the kingdom is set up? (1). Read Isa. 2:2-4 and tell us if there will be probation for any of the living after Jesus comes.

POSTSCRIPT TO ARTICLES ON "REVERENCE"

No I

I think my articles on "Reverence" were not quite concluded after all; some after-words seem necessary. For our Higher Critics say now that "Moses was only a man, and did things that were wrong, and was not permitted to enter the promised land." What of all that? There is not one thing in it to impeach the words of the living God as given to us by means of his pen.

God has chosen to work through poor fallible, human beings. He "chooses the weak things of the world to confound the mighty:" chooses them that the glory of what they do, may be his and not ours. And who else is there through whom he can speak, pray? "We have all sinned and come short of the glory of God." "There is none good, no, not one."

Moses seems to have sinned but once—wonder if our Higher Critic could have done any better under like circumstances? Think of being constantly nagged by thousands of men for forty long years! The only wonder is that he did not oftener fail. He struck the rock twice: he should have struck it but once. He said, "Ye rebels, shall I bring you water out of this rock?" He should have struck the rock but once, because that rock symbolized Christ. Christ was to suffer but once, was to offer "one sacrifice for sins forever:" he was not to be smitten twice, that the living water that quenches thirst forever might gush forth from him and save all who would drink.

Moses forgot this for the moment, forgot though he "esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward;" that the miracle of bringing enough water from the Bethel-stone, to save such a great multitude of people and their cattle as well, was to be attributed to God, and not to himself, just as the greater miracle of saving myriads of lost sinners through a suffering and risen Savior, is only through God's love and mercy.

And Moses will enter the land, for "he endured as seeing him that is invisible." His sin was forgiven for his name is on the honor-roll among those who "obtained a good report through faith," and our Higher Critics cannot take it off.

But our Higher Critics, unwillingly seemingly, to put too much blame on Moses, say "We believe that the priests may have woven ideas into the writings of Moses." "May?" what a word to hitch unbelief to! A mere supposition! But that is the fashion with our Higher Critics. Their "mays," are received as having higher authority than the messengers that came from heaven, and more of substance than faith hopes for. It is so easy to stake the issues of life on faith in a "may be so," so hard to anchor it to authenticated fact, and oath-bound promise of the ever living One.

But what about David? Part of the psalms are not prefaced by a "Thus saith the Lord," so our Higher Critics say the others are the mere words of David, or of whatever other author composed them; forgetting meanwhile that David wrote, not only as a histroian and a poet, but also as a prophet, and that therefore all that he wrote was inspired of God. He foretold "the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow;" his sorrows persecution and cruel death: his resurrection, ascension; official dignity as prophet, priest and king, his future advent and reign, the restoration of the twelve tribes to their own land, the blessings that would be the reward of the good, and the utter destruction of the wicked. Can our Higher Critics do this, unaided of God? Can they "shew us the former things what they be, that we we may consider them, and know the latter end of them * * * or show us the things that are to come hereafter?" If they cannot, they had better put their hands upon their mouths.

"UNSEXED WOMAN MENACE TO WORLD"

"Neuter" Sex Has Been Inflicting America For Years

In a sermon on "Marriage and Parenthood," the third of a series, Dr. George Birney declared last night the reluctrance of women "to fulfill their God-given functions of motherhood is a menace to the world."

"Parenthood is the divinest thing on earth," declared the speaker. "It is so wonderful—so sacred that society has safeguarded it by all possible means from contamination and besmirchment.

"If I were asked to indicate the one most ominous sign of the times, I would indicate the unsexed woman.

"In the craze for freedom from all restraints, both religious and social, the new woman is under the temptation of disregarding both her nature and her soul.

"We are told of a third 'sex' created by the European war, due to the changing status of both women and men, particularly the women outgrowing their maternal instincts.

"Such a 'neuter' sex has been afflicting America for two generations. It is represented by the woman who cares more for puppies than babies, and who thinks it more genteel to coddle a cold-nosed poodle dog than to sing cradle lullabys, who would rather be a dog trainer than a child-lover.

"I like dogs and I never see one of these poor manicured, beribboned, bewomened doggies, being cooed over, but that my pity is all for the dog.

"There is a child somewhere, it may be in the nearest orphanage, O, childless woman whose lips are waiting your kiss, for it is as motherless as you are childless."—Plain Dealer.

NEW HEAVENS AND NEW EARTH

Oriental Peculiarities of the Bible

Dear Brother Huggins: Perhaps you will find room in The Restitution for an article on the third chapter of 2 Peter. Paul might very appropriately use Peter's statement in the 16th verse of this chapter concerning Peter's writings; for there has been a tremendeous amount of theories evolved from this chapter.

In dealing with such language as Peter uses here we must remember that Peter was a Jew and is quoting the prophets. They were orientals and often used highly figurative language which is frequently the custom with eastern people. This is known as the depictive train of thought. The deductive, used generally by western nations, is well illustrated in 1 Cor. 15th chapter. God chose Paul to take the gospel to the Gentiles because he was fitted to deal with them from their own standpoint, whereas Peter's writings and speech would be well understood by the Jew.

Peter says in verse 13: "Nevertheless we according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth. wherein dwelleth righteousness." He is here quoting Isaiah 65:17: "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." The prophet in using this language is speaking from an Oriental standpoint is very evident from his statements which follow, which make it perfectly clear that he is speaking of a condition that is to be brought about on this earth among mortal men whereby life is to lengthen out again to a great age, as it was before the flood. This we know from the other Scriptures, is to occur when Christ comes again, and we know that he is coming to Jerusalem with his saints. See the 12th and 14th chapters of Zechariah.

What then does the prophet mean in this chapter by a new heavens and a new earth, and what does Peter mean when he says in verse 7: "But the heavens and the earth which are now, are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." He speaks of heavens and earth "which are now" in contrast to heavens and earth which were destroyed by water at the flood. We know that the literal heavens and earth were not destroyed at the flood. What then was destroyed at that time? The people and their governments or rulers whoever they were, were the ones that were destroyed at that time. The heavens and the earth which are to be destroyed when Christ comes are the same kind which was destroyed at the flood. The prophets frequently use the words "heavens and earth" to mean the governmnents and the people. See Isaiah 1:2; 13:13,14; 14:9-20. This last passage is taken almost universally to prove that satan came from heaven, but if this proves it, then he is dead and did not get the honor of a funeral like his predecessors who were the kings of Babylon. See also Deut. 32:1; Isa. 49:13. Turn also to Isa. 34th chapter and read it all, and you will find almost a parallel passage to this of 2 Pet. 3. This chapter is a prophecy concerning the destruction of the people of Idumea and their government, and has been literally fulfilled, as those who have visited that land recently testify. The last part of the chapter, verse 18, gives this challenge: "Seek ye out of the book of the Lord and read: no one of these shall fail: none shall want her mate; for my mouth it hath commanded, and my spirit it hath gathered them." The 9th verse tells us that the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenced night or day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever,etc. Now if this was a literal statement of the burning, how is it possible for these animals and birds to dwell there? Travelers tell us that the land is desolate, but there is no indication of fire ever having sfept that land. This chapter can not be shifted to suit any ones theories and made to apply to the time of Christ's coming; for it distinctly states that it was a prophecy concerning the land of Idumea. What, then, does the prophet mean in the chapter with his burning brimstone? Fire is frequently used in the Scriptures as a type of utter destruction. Every believer knows that Christ uses it when he speaks of men cast into Gehenna fire, not the orthodox hell, however. See Matt. 5:22,29,30. He meant that they were to be destroyed; not necessarily by fire, however. So that Peter is simply predicting the destruction of the ungodly governments when Christ comes; and we can see the tremendous necessity of that. We pray it may come soan.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves thould notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

NOTICE TO THE INDIANA BRETHREN

At the last conference in Indiana it was decided that the president should appoint a committee of one to solicit and collect funds for special evangelistic purposes. I was appointed to do that work. We have now an urgent call to help the brethren at Kokomo, Ind. They wish to hold a two week's meeting there in the near future, and then organize into a class, but they are not at present able financially to carry on the work. There are some twenty members in that vicinity, and Brother D. E. VanVactor, who has visited them, is quite enthuiastic as to the amount of good to be accomplished there.

Now brethren, here is your chance to do some real home missionary work. This is not merely a chance but an opportunity, for those who can spare a little to help in the Lord's work. It is thought fifty or sixty dollars will be required for the expenses of this meeting. Send through your church Secretary or directly to the undersigned, as soon as possible.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Two lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction" and "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates for baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

"Denying the Faith"

A sermon. Both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"The Death of Christ"

"Paradise Lost; Paradise Regained"

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

"The Bible: Its Principles and Texts"

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor, the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volume. $1.10 the copy.

THE MEANING OF WORDS

Idiotees

Another example is our English word "idiot," derived from the Greek "idiotees." Originally this word simply meant a private citizen in contrast with public officials whether religious or secular. But as private citizens, as a rule, would not be as well educated as the public officials of those days, this word, which then only indicated a man lower down in common things, got to be applied to a man lower down in intellectual matters. From this change it was an easy transition to our meaning of ignorance. But to give this word or its translation in the New Testament the sense of ignorance would be absurd. When the words "ignorant" and "unlearned" in Acts (4:3) and First Corinthians (14:16) is used it would be absurd to make them mean "ignoramus." They are translations of this word.

Think seldom of your enemies, often of your friends, and every day of Christ.—Van Dyke.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 69 CLEVELAND, O, JANUARY 2, 1917 NUMBER 1

CHRISTMAS MEMORIES

Christmas memories never pass,
Succeeding ones bring back the last;
And may each year new joys unfold,
More priceless than if bought with gold.

Some have riches and buy costly ware,
For which they never toiled or shed a tear;
No trials, no worry, have not even sighed,
As their gifts they bestow with swollen pride.

The gift of the poor is that rare gem called love,
That comes from the heart that's inspired from above;
More precious than pearls or rubies that's seen,
'Tis the key of the Kingdom where the Master is King.

THE IMPENDING CRISIS

George B. Alldridge

"Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into its place, for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. 26:52).

One hundred years ago, Europe was just beginning to recover its normal life and existence after passing through a series of wars that, at times, seemed to threaten its destruction. In 1815 the Allies met in congress in Vienna, to settle the fate of the country that Napoleon Bonaparte had lost. The negotiations of Vienna were interrupted by the news of the escape of Bonaparte, recently banished to the little isle of Elba. The danger of Napoleon again plunging Europe into the throes of a continental war, was averted by the Allies victory at Waterloo. Napoleon making his escape, reached Paris on the 21st of June; and after a brief struggle with the chambers he abdicated in favor of his son Napoleon II, and fled to Rochefort, intending to embark for America, June 29. Thus ending the hundred days of his second empire. March 21-June 29, Louis XVIII, re-entered Paris on July 8th; and Napoleon, after writing to the prince regent that "he came, like Themistocles, to throw himself on the hospitality of the British people," embarked for England on board the Bellerophon, July 15th.

By the decision of the Allies he was conveyed to the island of St. Helena, where he died on Mar. 5th, 1821. A new peace of Paris was signed by the Allies, Nov. 20th. The affairs of Europe were regulated by the congress of Vienna, which parcelled out kingdoms regardless of the wishes of their inhabitants; and a second congress at Aix-la-Chapelle, arranged for the withdrawal of the allied troops from France, September, 1818. These are the words of the historian recording events that transpired a century ago.

Today history is repeating itself, but with attendant horrors and on a scale so vast, so terrible, and ultimately becoming universal, all nations in the gigantic struggle are to become involved. No one can read the daily papers, especially the reports of General Scott, the chief of staff, now before our National Congress, and General Wood, in command of the eastern division, but must be impressed with this fact, that the people of the United States will soon be called upon to obey laws enacted by congress, that will place them in the same condition regarding conscription as the men now occupy who are fighting in the armies of Europe today.

God in his word has already anticipated all this, and much more that is hidden from the world's great statesmen. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets" (Amos 3:7). Each of the belligerants now engaged in this terrible war are only obeying, without knowing it, the proclamation of Jehovah. "Prepare war; wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near, let them come up: beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears; let the weak (the small nations) say, I am strong" (Joel 3:9,10).

The armies are gathering, munitions are being manufactured, the great and final arena is being prepared, the valley of Jehoshaphat—the great battle of Armageddon—is yet to be fought in that day when the king of the earth with his mighty armies are gathered against Jerusalem to battle. God has said he will, "rain upon him, and his bands an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone" (Ezek. 38:22). "Then the slain of the Lord shall be at that day, from one end of the earth even to the other end of the earth" (Jer. 25:33). Happy will he be that hath the God of Jacob for his refuge, and whose hope is in the Lord his God; for "he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper. The ungodly are not so, but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away. Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous. For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous, but the way of the ungodly shall perish" (Isa. 1:3-6).

The mighty hords of Russia, Germany and Japan; the millions of America, Great Britain, Italy and France, will all go down and "bite the dust" when the Son of God, as his Father's representative, goes forth with all the holy angels to fight against these nations. When he in person descends and stands upon the mount of Olives, he will cause it to cleave in twain, followed by a mighty earthquake that will engulph the mighty host encamped against Jerusalem. This is certainly a beautiful earth, so also are the many inhabitants—animals so varied, birds, fishes and reptiles, each suited to its own ways of living, God having richly provided for all.

When he created man and installed him as his representative, king and lord over the works of his hands, God himself felt so pleased as he beheld the happiness of all, that he pronounced them "very good" (Gen. 1:30.). How my mind revels with delight as it ponders over this lovely picture. There was nothing to mar; for all things were in harmony with the loving and kind author of its existence. But the king transgressed the law of his God; his disobedience brought sin into the world (Rom. 5:12-19), and all its consequences including death (Rom. 6:23).

As we look over the face of this fair world today, we see that everything is out of harmony with God. The social, political and ecclesiastical worlds are all antagonistic to him. Men great in authority oppress their fellow men, many accumulating wealth at the expense of the lives of their fellow men. On every hand oppression and greed, selfishness, which is sin, is rampant. The oppressed rise up against their oppressors, but finding the struggle to maintain their advantage too great, fall back again to a position worse than before. All mankind seems to be hoping and striving for a better and brighter day, when justice will be supreme, and all mankind will love his fellow man. But how strange and perverse human nature really is! The oppressed today becomes the oppressor tomorrow!

A small element of society having learned and obeyed the truth, believe impilcitly in the testimony of God's word, the Bible. To them God's purposes are made manifest, and yet these who strive to obey and keep his commands, find it very difficult to control the flesh and keep it in subjection to his will, and thus obey the royal law of loving their neighbor (every man) as themselves. If this is true, (and our experience proves it is true), how can it be expected that those who know not God (many of whom deny his very existence), should do the things that would eliminate war and establish universal happiness, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14). No man, nor any number of men, unaided by superhuman power, will ever be able to do this; but thank God, there is one man, "The Man Christ Jesus," who has been invested with the power to do this mighty work. He has declared himself that "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth" (Matt. 28:18). Beloved, that day is drawing near. We hear a great deal among Germans of "The Day," but only among a very few, just "a little flock" (Luke 12:32), do we hear about that glorious day, "The times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began" (Acts 3:21). When he returns and builds again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down, and builds again the ruins thereof, that the residue of men might seek the Lord.

In preparation for this day, and the part we must now take in the affairs of men, this series of articles are written.

"IF ANY MAN HATH AN EAR, LET HIM HEAR"

George Francis

The foregoing are the words of the Master; and by paying close attention to his teaching we discover that his custom was to use them at the end of one subject, and before entering on another. For instance in Matt. 13, when he had ended the parable of the sower, he says, "Who hath ears to hear, let him hear." The same idea is given in Mark 4:9-23; Luke 8:8; 14:35. The same exclamation is given at the end of the message to each of the seven churches in Asia; and in Rev. 13:9, our text is spoken.

I perceive that many in our day have failed to hear, or to grasp the significance of our Lord's use of his words at the end of one subject, and before the commencement of another. I am led to this conclusion by seeing many labor hard to connect the two-horned symbol of Rev. 13 with the leopard symbol of the same chapter, ignoring the fact that inspiration has designated it as "another" beast coming from another source. Furthermore, I perceive that the two-horned symbol of Rev. 13:11 has developed far enough so that its counterpart in the history of our times can be made so plain that, "He that hath ears to hear," will be able to locate the symbol so that successful contradiction will be impossible. And now my self-imposed task is to point to the marks of identification of this two-horned symbol, given us in the holy Scriptures.

First—What does the Bible reveal as to the chronology of this symbol? Rome, the fourth beast of Dan. 7, at the battle of Actium, 31 B. C., defeated the last of the successors of Alexander, and the leopard beast of Rev. 13:1 is a symbol of the Roman Empire, receiving his "power and authority" from the Pagan dragon of chapter 12, in the fourth century of our era. And this leopard beast after receiving the "blasphemous mouth" of verse 5, continues "forty-two months" (margin, "to make war"). This leopard beast, after he receives the blasphemous mouth, answers to the little horn of Dan. 7 into whose hand the saints were given for a time, times, and the dividing of time—according to symbolic time 1260 years. 610 to 1870 A. D., when the papacy lost its civil power. After this, and not before, the two-horned symbol is seen "coming up out of the earth."

Another item in the chronology of this symbol is that in verse 12. The leopard symbol is called twice "the first beast." Another item of chronology is found in Rev. 19:20: "And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that worked miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of burning fire with brimstone."

It appears from this testimony that "the false prophet" is another name for the two-horned symbol. It is not safe to jump to conclusions and say that the false prophet is Mahomet. The testimony examined proves that the two-horned symbol is a latter day manifestation—going alive into the lake of fire.

Second—We will examine his chronology. He was seen "coming up out of the earth." The earth is a symbol of democracy—the clay that was in the feet and toes of the image of Dan. 2. In that image there is evidence that the clay was formed into nations in the last days, before the coming of the kingdom of God, to destroy the image (Dan. 2:35): "Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold broken to pieces," etc. Now if the clay was not formed into nations, how could it be broken to pieces, like the other component parts of the image? That the earth in symbol is the common people or democracy, the following passages will prove: Deut. 32:1, "Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth." Hosea 2:21, "And it shall come to pass in that day, Iwill hear, saith the Lord, I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth."

We need only to examine Rev. 12 to find out that the earth in symbol is the common people, or the democracy. The dragon was cast out of the Roman heaven into the earth. After that he was one of the democracy, no more belonging to the royalty. The armies of Constantine, called in symbol "the earth," "opened her mouth and swallowed up the waters (people) that the dragon cast out of his mouth."

Now we have seen by the chronology, and by the genealogy of the symbol that he is a latter day democracy. And in harmony with the prophetic image, there is several democratic nations in our day: The United States, France, Switzerland, and all South America. Now which of these republics is the greatest, and has done the most wonders so that it would be likely to be noticed in the prophecy? Which has done the works ascribed to the two-horned symbol? All republics come up out of the earth, but this one has two horns, like a lamb. Horns represent power. A few years ago the United States had occasion to put Spain out of Cuba, and in doing so had to exercise her power. Did she do it like a wolf, and swallow up Cuba; or did she do it like a lamb and let Cuba manage her own affairs? We all know the answer. Quite recently in discussing the mode of warfare with Germany, the United States said "The United States asks nothing for herself, that she does not ask for humanity" (Woodrow Wilson). The cause of the dispute between the United States and Germany has been on account of Germany's inhumna sea warfare. Wilson speaks in the interest of humanity.

"But," says the objector, "how can such a humane, lamblike power speek as a dragon?" Herein comes the fine point of the prophecy: an exhibition of clear seeing of future events. It was the speech "like a dragon" of the United States that caused Germany to desist from the inhuman submarine warfare. A number of years ago the U. S. was in correspondence with England concerning a dispute England had with Venezuela about the title to land at the mouth of a river entering into the ocean. This correspondence was carried on during Cleveland's administration. Finally Secretary Olney said: "We are sovereign on this continent, and our fiat is law; that settled the question." And if that is not speaking like a dragon, what would be? It brought England to time. It now curbs Germany—two of the greatest powers on earth. A more exact fulfillment of prophecy, contrary to nature, cannot be found in all the history of the world.

THE MOUNT OF OLIVES

Article Supplied by the Young People's Society

The Mount of Olives, also called Olivet, is a rising ground about three fourths of a mile from Jerusalem, and is about 2700 feet high. It faces the Temple Mount on the east, and is divided from it by the Kidron, or Valley of Jehoshaphat. The name "Olivet" is also connected with the whole ridge which runs parallel to the east spur of Jerusalem, including the Scopus or Prospect (the site of the encampment of the Romans under Titus), east of the Temple Mount. The Prophets (so called from the tombs found there) is a southern extension of Olivet proper. The Mount of Offence also makes up part of this ridge. This mountain is about 2440 feet high, and is opposite the Pool Siloam. It was by the way of the Mount of Olives that David fled from Absalom, and was probably the site of the altars dedicated by Solomon to Chemosh (1 Kings 11:7).

At the summit of Olivet is the Church of Ascension, and on the west slope is Gethsemane, which was one of Christ's favorite resorts and was the scene of agony on the night before his death. Jerusalem can be seen from Olivet, as we know Christ beheld the city and wept over it.

Mount Olivet with Gethsemane on the west, and Bethany on the east of it, has witnessed the most affecting scenes in the history of our Redeemer. It was in connection with this mount that Christ chose to reveal more of his human nature than anywhere else on the earth; and finally, this favoured mount witnessed the glorious outcome and consummation of this mystery of sorrow and suffering. It had been watered by tears, and it likewise beheld his triumphant and glorious ascension to the right hand of his Father on high, and it is on this mountain that we look for his coming again (Zech. 14).

COST OF LINOGRAPH AND EQUIPMENT

Electrotypes of Linograph, Operator and Manager

The Linograph Fund has reached and passed the two thousand dollars ($2000.00) mark, which was the amount called for in our first call for the creation of a Linograph Fund last May.

The cost of our Linograph and the necessary equipment for its practical operation, have exceeded that amount by about $275.00 which we have no doubt will soon be raised. And before giving a detail of the expenditure of the fund, we wish to tell the many brethren friends and readers of The Restitution that the linograph is now doing our work, and has been for some time, so we have no hesitation in saying that the machine is a practical success.

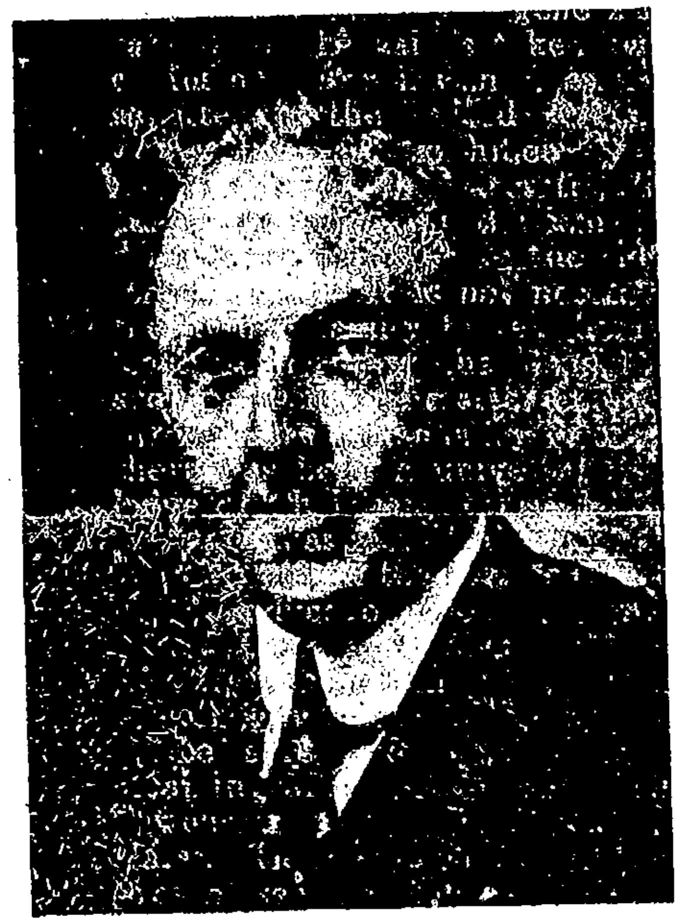
Linograph Machine

How this was accomplished, and all the equipment paid for before the fund was, or is completed, involves a story of a generous hearted brother in Cleveland, who told the Editor, and others most concerned, that he would advance whatever sum was necessary, be it five hundred or a thousand dollars, to hasten the completion of tne undertaking. With a temporary loan of five hundred dollars, the brother, who prefers to be nameless, our time of waiting to get in operation, has been materially shortened, and a saving of one hundred and fifty dollars to The Restitution effected.

Some few of our readers may have thought that the cost of the linograph alone was all there was to provide for, but the statement below will make it clear that eighteen hundred dollars ($1800.00), the price of the linograph, did not represent near all the obligation we were undertaking in our efforts to place The Restitution on a better working basis than ever before. We will soon be entering on the New Year of 1917 with vastly improved conditions, full of optimism and hope as to the prospects of The Restitution for a wider field of usefulness than the past.

Brother Chas. A. Goss, Manager

The Manager gives all the credit for making this improved condition possible to the faithful friends of "the dear old Restitution," chief among them being Auntie Wince, whose devotion to the truth is deep and sublime, and almost pathetic in its simplicity. Many fervent and kindly expressions have encouraged us through the year just closing. May their generous donations to the common object of our labors and devotion be like "bread cast upon the waters" and return to them after mnay days in a rich reward, is our sincere prayer for each and all.



Brother A. E. Griffiths, Linograph Operator

The building in which our plant is now installed stands upon the same lot with the Cleveland Church of God, and has been kindly donated to the use of the paper indefinitely by the Trustees of the church. Brother Tomlinson of the same body, has generously fulfilled his promise, given at the beginning, by giving the making of such alterations and repairs as the building required, amounting to about seventy or eighty dollars.

Sane This Time

While a certain Scotch minister was conducting religious service in an asylum for the insane, one of the inmates cried out, wildly:

"I say, have we got to listen to this?"

The minister, surprsed and confused, turned to the keeper and said:

"Shall I stop speaking?"

The keeper replied: "No, no; go along, go along; that will not happen again. That man only has one lucid moment every seven years."

THE DUTY OF SEEKING GOD

Notes of a New Year Sermon by the Editor

Text: "Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy; break up your fallow ground: for it is time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you" (Hos. 10:12).

Introduction

I Figurative language, when understood, exhibits the plainest truth in a rich variety of forms (Hos. 12:10).

I The Duty Enjoined: "Seek the Lord." The three figures are explained collectively as importing that we should "seek the Lord;" taken separately the particular manner in which we should seek him:

I In the performance of his will: "Sow to yourselves in righteousness." No man hopes to reap wheat when he sows only tares; but many expect to be saved without sowing righteousness (Gal. 6:7,8).

II In dependence on his mercy: "Reap in mercy." Death is the wages of sin; but life is not the wages of righteousness (Isa. 64:6; Rom. 6:23; Phil. 3:9).

III In a due preparation of heart to receive his blessing: "Break up the fallow ground." Sowing seed on fallow ground is futile business (Rom. 7:9; Gal. 2:19-21; Rom. 7:4; Matt. 13).

II The Arguments With Which the Duty of Seeking God is Enforced

I The urgency of the duty: "Time to seek the Lord:" in youth, in middle life, in old age (Rom. 13:11; Phil. 2:13, Gen. 6:3; Eph. 5:16).

II The certainty of success: "Till he come and rain righteousness upon you." A farmer knows if it does not rain, sowing seed is wasted effort; but he sows knowing he cannot command the showers (Prov. 11:17,18; Isa. 61:10; Ezek. 36:26; Rom. 5:17; Isa. 45:19; Jer. 4:3; Jas. 4:9, 10; 1 Cor. 15:58).

THE EDITOR STILL "PUZZLED AS TO WHEREABOUTS" OF C. T. RUSSELL

Mr Robt. G. Huggins. Dear Sir:

A copy of your worthy paper, "The Restitution," under date of Nov. 28, was recently handed to me. Was pleased to note the article headed, "Where is Charles T. Russell?" No wonder you are puzzled as to his whereabouts, since the Bible and we have always taught that the dead "sleep in the dust of the earth" until the resurrection. Your bewilderment is due to the fact that you are unacquainted with the details of the "plan of the ages" as taught by our beloved pastor, Chas. T. Russell.

We remember that Paul wrote (1 Cor. 15:51,52): "Behold, I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we (the Church class) shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," etc. God's word points out that the resurrection of the saints would take place during the presence (parousia) of our Lord, and before the complete setting up of the earthly phase of his kingdom. Bible chronology leads us to believe that our Lord has been invisibly present as a glorious spirit-being of the divine nature since 1874; that the sleeping saints were resurrected in 1878; and that since then (Rev. 14:13—"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, etc.) the saints who die do not sleep, but are instantly changed from the human to the divine nature.

This, we believe, has been our dear Brother's experience, and we believe him to be forever with the Lord—a glorious reward for a true and faithful servant! If you refer to the volumes in "Scripture Studies," the following references will bear out these thoughts:

Vol. 3, pages 239, 232, 240, 238.
Vol. 6, page 723.
Vol. 5, page 367.
Vol. 4, pages 600, 618, 622,624.
Vol. 1, page 235.

We believe "the last trump" to be symbolic, and to refer to the period of time covered by the presence of our Lord, beginning in 1874 For further thought see Vol. 2, beginning at bottom of page 147, to close of chapter subject division on page 153.

We rejoice with you in that the dear Lord has permitted us both to find the "lost piece of silver," Restitution. May he guide us to more and more appreciate his glorious plan. Again, sympathising with you in your slight misunderstanding,

In his love and service, I am,

Mrs. W. A. Wheeler.

Editor's Comments

Mrs. Wheeler writes sympathetically to us in our mental distress concerning the "whereabouts" of Russell, and our "bewilderment" about the matter she evidently feels somewhat herself, saying, "No wonder you are puzzled as to his whereabouts, since the Bible and we have always taught that the dead 'sleep in the dust of the earth' until the resurrection." In The Restitution of Nov. 28th, 1916, we pointed out that the report of Mr. Russell's death was discordant with the doctrines of man's mortality and the "sleep of the dead," two doctrines that "the Bible and we have always taught." The words used in the Pastor's obituary oppose the words of Holy Scripture; the ideas expressed will not weld together with Bible ideas. That the reader may join Mrs. Wheeler heartily in sympathy with us in our "bewilderment," we here repeat three statements that were made in "The Tower" in reporting Pastor Russell's death:

I The Pastor died in Texas;

II. He was buried in Bethel plot near Pittsburg, Pa.;

III He went to meet the Lord in the air!

From these conflicting statements "no wonder" we got "puzzled" over the matter, as Mrs. Wheeler admits. But she thinks that while the words are out of harmony with man's mortality and the sleep of the dead, yet if we only knew "the details" of God' plan, all matters of disputation would be cleared up; and she slyly intimates that "Scripture Studies" is just the book we should read. While rejecting the inspiration of "Scripture Studies" along with "Science and Health," still we have read both books; and that is just the trouble; we have read them—and the more we read them, the less we know. If we had to read one or the other of them, and were given the choice of selection, we would take Mrs. Eddy's in preference to Russell's, as she is flashy, and states her absurdities in "fine language," while Russell rambles along in platitudes, and continues longer than our endurance can bear, and we fall asleep only to dream of seeing Russell and one hundred and forty-four thousand loyal devotees living in the air with an "invisible" Christ, all of them ghosts: even Christ himself being nothing but a ghost, and an "invisible" one at that! Mrs. Eddy and Russell both reduce you to a ghost; and as both of them are now dead, we wish them a merry Christmas and a happy New Year in their newly found Ghostland. Thinking that the "details" of God's plan will give us a helping hand, Mrs. Wheeler supplies the following information: The church class shall all be changed; Christ came in 1874, and has been "invisibly present" since then; and that the saints "were resurrected in 1878," and that since then the "henceforth" of Rev. 14:13 is to be dated. Conclusion: "The saints who die (now) do not sleep, but are instantly changed from the human to the divine nature."

Now let us proceed slowly and make sure of understanding these "details." Since 1878 saints are raised from the dead when they die; they are "instantly changed from the human to the divine nature" when they die; and therefore when Russell died he was "instantly changed" from a human to a divine being. He was raised from the dead when he died! But allowing that this is so, Russell is only parading in borrowed finery, and we protest to his stealing the lightning and thunder of Swedenborgianism without due acknowledgements to the nobleman of Stockholm. Strip Russell of plagiarisms and he is a religious and literary pauper. But Mrs. Wheeler has found where Paul says, "We shall all be changed," and has rashly concluded that Paul's words indicate the Swedenborgian idea plagiarized by Russell. She says Paul says this to "the church class," meaning of course Russellites. Be it so; but read 1 Cor. 15:51, 52 in connection with 1 Thess. 4:14-18, and you find that while talking about "the church class," he divides it into two classes at the coming of Christ: those who are dead (asleep) and those who are "alive and remain" (alive). His words, then, in 1 Cor. 15:51,52 are about these two classes, and what he says, please remember, happens to them simultaneously. Paul's words are: "We shall not all sleep (die, John 11:14), but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead (the dead class) shall be raised incorruptible, and we (the living class, those who do not sleep, those who "remain"), shall be changed." When the dead are raised incorruptible, the living are changed. This is where Russellism, strutting about in the garments of Swedenborgianism, comes to utter confusion and pitiful nudity; for if the dead have been raised since 1878, the living should have been "instantly changed from human to divine beings" since that date, too! We have Russellites here in our city, and can testify from actual observation that none of them have been "changed"—all of them are "human beings" still. If Mrs. Wheeler retorts that the ones that have died were "changed," we reply that Paul is not talking of changing dead men; they are "raised incorruptible." Paul's declaration is that "we (the living) shall be changed," in contrast to the dead raised incorruptible. And to explain what he means by "changed," he adds "For this corruptible shall put on incorruptibility; and this mortal shall put on immortality" (verse 53).

Now Mrs. Wheeler, let us be frank: has Russell been "instantly changed from the human to the divine nature?" Has the "corruptible" and "mortal" part of Russell been "changed" to "incorruptibility" and "immortality"? We say No: if you say Yes, then to settle our difference, let us have the body of the pastor exhumed. You admit he was a "human being" up to the time of his death; but when he died you canonized "our beloved pastor." ("Canonized" sounds very papistical, we know, but it is not honorable to use papal ideas and withhold due credit.) Exhume the pastor's body, and Mrs. Wheeler would have to admit that it is not a living "human being;" the pale face and decomposing body would give every indication that the teeth of time will shortly reduce the "human being," now less a human being than when he was alive, to nothing. The "corruptible" and the "mortal" of Russell have not been "changed;" he had no immortal soul to "raise from the dead" when he died, like Swedenborg and current representatives of orthodoxy. Don't play hide and seek with an immortal soul, but come out in the open and tell us who Russell is and his "whereabouts," since all that made up his personality in life has died and returned to the dust.

We repeat our words in The Restitution of Nov. 28, 1916, given in exposition of 1 Thess. 4:1[illegible], and we shall believe they are unanswerable until some Russellite does answer them: "The Bible only uses the expression, 'caught up to meet the Lord in the air' once (1 Thess. 4:16-18), and in this connection: 'The Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air.' Seriously now, Was this Scripture fulfilled when Russell died at Pampa, Texas, a few days ago? When he died like a hero; did the 'Lord himself descend' from heaven? Did any Russellites hear a 'shout,' the 'voice of the archangel,' or the 'trump of God'? Did the dead in Christ rise; and were they caught up in the air, and 'together with them,' 'we which are alive'? Instead of the dead meeting the Lord in the air when they die, it is when they 'rise;' and instead of the living dying like heroes, they 'remain'! Begone, get behind us, ye Russellite Perversions and Entanglements of God's Holy Word!"

In conclusion, we are still "puzzled" and are in utter "bewilderment" as to where pastor Russell is. We may state our quandary of mind in the following propositions:

I. Russell died in Texas.

II. He is dead.

III. He is buried in Pa.

IV. His body is still in the grave in Pa., and is fast decomposing into corruption and dust.

V. He has no immortal soul or spirit for a scapegoat.

VI. He has been raised from the dead (but his body is rotting in a graveyard in Pa.).

VII. He has been "instantly changed from a human to a divine being" (but "the corruptible" has not "put on incorruptibility," nor has "the mortal put on immortality;" and he has no immortal soul, and had he had one, it would be a "divine being," change or no change).

VIII. He has gone to meet the Lord in the air!

IX. Conclusion, clear as mud: cfmwshr aoixzkg shdlo etiwr loahm biqowdfz ltnodibzef arofztmog.

Now the "puzzle" is to translate above conclusion into good English. Russell having died in Texas, is dead. The body died, but that cannot be Russell; if it were him, Russell would be dead. The body, then, is not Russell. Again, Russell is raised from the dead. But his body is not raised; that is still in the grave, wasting away every day. That is not the Russell that has been raised from the dead. Shall we try again? Russell has been changed from a human to a divine being, but the body has not been changed—except from bad to worse. The body, it is clearly evident again, is not the Russell that has been "changed." Once more: Russell has gone to meet the Lord in the air!. But his soul did not go, for he had no immortal soul, he said; his body did not go; that is in the graveyard now; and he had no immortal spirit to go. Neither soul, nor spirit, nor body was the Russell that went to meet the Lord in the air. Who and what is this Russell that is not soul, spirit, or body? Instead of playing hide and seek with the immortality of the soul, we would like to have a plain frank answer to this simple question.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother Huggins:

I read Sister Winces' letter the first of November asking us to give a thank offering; and I wanted to help at that time, but I could not. But I prayed to God, and I promised him if I got some money that was due me. I would send five dollars to help the Linograpph Fund. I am now enclosing five dollars, and I wish I could give enough to make up the rest of the fund, so God's work would commence the first of the year. I believe the time is short, and what we do we must do quickly. I pray God the Linograph Fund may be completed by the first of the year. Then Sister Wince will be able to thank God and all the rest of us. How I do love to read her pieces; they are always to the point, and I hope she may be spared for many years, if Christ does not come to take his own. God bless you, Sister Wince, and all the rest of the dear sisters and brothers, is my prayer. How I do love The Restitution! I want to do all I can for it.

Susan A. Howard.

Dear Brother:

Enclosed find five dollars for a Christmas offering for the Linograph Fund. I feel that we must do all we can for the Master. The work is great, and laborers are few. I want to be a doer of the word as well as a believer. Let us watch and pray, and labor every day, until the Master comes.
Your brother in the faith, J. M. Barb.

From Sister A. J. Martin

Dear Brother Huggins:

Thinking there might be some who would like to hear how we are getting along away down here in the sunny South, I am just writing to say:

First—That we are still strong in the precious faith of the gospel; like Abraham of old, neither fearing nor doubting, but faith makes us hold.

Second—That we enjoy reading the "dear old Restitution" as well as ever, or even better if possible, seeing it still retains its former good and wholesome teaching; that doctrinal errors have not been allowed to creep in and soil its sacred columns. I have long been a reader of the paper, and have found that it relies solely on the word of God for its teaching.

Once more: the day is drawing near which we commemorate as the birth of our dear Savior. But how few realize the significance of this day, and how few celebrate it as it should be done! Instead of carousing and gormandizing, as is commonly the case, it should be a day of praise and thankfulness to our heavenly Father for the gift of his only begotten Son. "And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be unto all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:10,11). Then why should not our hearts be full of thanksgiving to the Lord, not only at this time of the year, but at all times, for his gracious gift to mankind. "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praise unto thy name, O Most High: to show forth thy loving kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night." "Praise the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever."

Dear brothers and sisters, let us enter upon the New Year with a firm resolution to live nearer to God than ever before. Trusting our paper will continue to send out the gospel light till Jesus comes, and that we may all have an abundant entrance into his glorious kingdom at that time. Greetings to all the dear ones who love the Lord.

Remarks

During November we held a two week's meeting at Plainview, the new congregation north of Holbrook. We had a splendid meeting. Although interrupted by a storm and cold snap, yet when we resumed, the interest continued. During the meeting two took a stand for the truth: David Gordon, a young man of sterling character obeyed in baptism; the next day Miss Nora Long took on the saving name. Sister Long is a teacher, and highly respected by everyone, and makes a valuable accession to the body of Christ. We believe these young people will adorn the doctrines of God (Titus 2:10; Isa. 61:10). Like his love of Israel, so will he love and care for these young people who have set themselves apart for God's work (Jer. 31:3,4). There are many things of beauty in this world, but the most beautiful of all is the beauty of holiness (Psa. 110:3). Such is the perfection of beauty (Psa. 50:2). How beautiful the settings of these precious stones in the house of God (Ezra. 7:27). So we say to these young devotees, read ponder and keep in memory 1 Chron. 16:29, and as he said to Judah and Jerusalem, so he says to you and us (2 Chron. 20:20,21). When you have done all you can to adorn God's doctrine and to beautify your lives, and finally realize the full fruition of your labors, then will you remember Isa. 52:6-8. Let us altogether remember and repeat Psa. 90::16,17.

Almus Adams.

OBITUARY

John Alexander Bucher, son of Martin and Agnes Allison Bucher, was born in Baltimore, Maryland, September 2nd, 1836. Died in Los Angeles, California, December 9th, 1916, aged 80 years, 3 months, 7 days. While a child his parents moved from Baltimore to Wooster, Ohio, and from there to South Bend, Indiana, where he grew to manhood. About 1856 he moved with his parents to Argos, Indiana, which was his home for many years. He was the oldest of five children, only one, Mrs. Elizabeth Bliven, who lives at Tacoma, Washington, survives him. On February 13th, 1862, he was united in marriage with Sarah Alice Barnhill, daughter of Hugh Barnhill, to which union were born four children, Allison, deceased, Fanny, a resident of New York City, Harry, deceased, and Jennie B. Hayner, of Los Angeles. About 1877, during a series of meetings conducted by Elder H. V. Reed, Brother Bucher became interested in the hope of eternal life, and was baptized in Wolf Creek near Argos, Ind., and united with the Church of God, and remained a faithful student of the Scripture to his death. During the span of nearly 55 years of married life, Brother and Sister Bucher lived in Argos until about 1892, in Chicago until 1898, in Argos several years again, and have been residents of Los Angeles nearly 14 years. He is survived by his loving wife, two daughters, two grand-daughters, and a host of other relatives and friends.

Words of comfort were spoken by Brother O. J. Allard, using 1 Thess. 4:13-16 as the basis of his discourse, after which we laid Brother Bucher to rest in the beautiful Forest Lawn cemetery near Glendale, a small suburban town of Los Angeles.

A BRIGHT PAGE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Tidbits of Pleasant and Useful Information Gathered from Everywhere

Men follow progressive leaders and place their money in conservative banks.

Men and rabbits differ only in respect that the rabbit starts quicker and runs faster.

The minister was christening a child. He spoke thus before performing the rite: "He may be a Lincoln and deliver many from bondage; he may be a great orator and hold large audences spellbound; he may be a skillful surgeon and save many lives; he may be a great judge or he may be a Shakespeare." The minister then said to the mother, "Name the child, please?"

After a short pause the mother answered, "Her name is Mary Ann."

Some are so busy listening for the hoot of the owl they cannot hear the carol of the songbird; so intent on hearing the hiss of the serpent they fail to appreciate the music of the brook; so bent on finding the ugly and repulsive they fail to see the beautiful and attractive; so troubled about their enemies they fail to appreciate their friends; so worried about the thorns they lose sight of the roses; so impressed by the blackness and venom of hate they fail to realize the brightness and sweetness of love; so fearful of the machinations of the evil one they fail to realize the loving care and protection of the Father.

The preacher should preach the Word simply, so he may be understood. Cookies may be kept on the upper shelf in the home so the children can't reach them, but in the pulpit they must be placed on the lower shelf. "The common people" heard Christ gladly (Mark 12:37). Paul preached, but "not with wisdom of (men's) words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect" (1 Cor. 1:17); and in this preaching "excellency of speech or of wisdom" was barred (1 Cor. 2:1). It was a plain few-word appeal that could be understood rather "than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue" (1 Cor. 14:19). "The simplicity that is in Christ" is the thing; but minds can be "corrupted from" it (2 Cor. 11:3). Oh beloved, for simple, timely, old-time preaching with the modern frills left off! Oh for the old Jerusalem gospel with the Pentecostal glow, flow and go, with the Spirit's power and holy energy! There is so little of it. We need so much of it. If we have it we can truthfully "Preach the Word."—J. J. Schamburg.

A Tribute to Laughter

Here's to laughter, the sunshine of the soul, the happiness of the heart, the leaven of youth, the privilege of purity, the echo of innocence, the treasure of the humble, the wealth of the poor, the head of the cup of pleasure; it dispels dejection, banishes blues and mangles melancholy, for it's the foe of woe, the destroyer of depression, the enemy of grief;it is what makes kings envy peasants, plutocrats envy the poor, the guilty envy the innocent; it's the sheen on the silver of smiles, the ripple on the water's delight; the glint of the gold of gladness; without it humor would be dumb, wit would wither, dimples would disappear and smiles would shrivel, for it's a glow of a pure soul, the birth cry of mirth, the swansong of sadness.

The postage stamp teaches the secret of success. It sticks to one thing until it gets there.

How Could It?

The telephone is not making much progress in Russia. And no wonder! Fancy a man going to a phone and shouting, "Hello, is that you, Dvisaskivchsmartvoiczskic?"

"No; it is Zollemschouskaffirnocknstifsgrowoff. Who's speaking?"

"Seximochockiertryuksmxkischokemoff. I want to know if Xliferomanskefskillmajuwchzvastowskswveibierski is still stopping with Dvisostkivchsmartvioszski?"

Silly Language of Novel Writers

How silly some of the language is which the novel writers and short story writers of our day use. In their effort to avoid monotony, they resort to absurd mannerisms and cant phrases. For example they never write that one of their characters merely "said" such-and-such a thing; they have to think up some novel and more espressive term. And so instead of "said" we find them using such verbs as these: "shrugged," "sibilated," "finished," "denied," "shrilled," etc. In a recent story there occurs the following specimen: "When Casey came to himself again he was lying in bed—where, he knew not. He was conscious only that Marion, her face tear-stained and very near his own, was kneeling beside it. 'Well?' he husked." The use of the word "husk" as a verb, meaning to speak in a husky voice, is rather daring. But the professional writers seem to vie with one another to see which can drag in the most startling expressions. The publishers, it is true, want them to use just that sort of language. In fact if writers do not use it they are tabooed and their works are not allowed to see the light of day. It is a great pity that literature has to be handicapped by a mere conventionalism or formalism, as it is. But silliness carries its own defeat and after a given fad has run its course it sinks into disuse and oblivion. The language is being steadily improved, and we don't need to worry much about it.

Should the Boy be Made to Attend Church?

"My boy of fifteen not only does not like to go to church, but says it makes him feel disgusted with religion because people do not live what they profess. Ought I to insist on his going to church?"

It would have been easier to answer this quesion if you had said, "Shall I require him to go with me to church?" Religion is always a matter of personal relations, just as your declings with your children are. Family law can never properly or altogether be statute law written in a book or proclaimed in set words from a pulpit. The reason for worship is to be found in the needs of the soul; the habit of worship is to be established as a part of the education of children. A frank talk with your boy, in which you try to show him that you are responsible for his religious training as well as his food and clothing, and that you cannot renounce that responsibility without hurting your conscience, will probably put the matter before him in the right light. But you must show him that worship is a real and deep thing in your own life if the explanation is to be effective.

As to the inconsistencies of those who profess and fail to live as they profess, and who yet worship, perhaps you can show him that this unfortunate state of affairs is part of the school life of humanity. A child's immature mind expects perfection where the order of the world is growth and sorting out. This is not the kingdom where the unfaithful and the pretending are shut out; it is such an experience as that of your boy's school, where good scholars and poor, kind and unkind and bullying boys are found, and where some boys behave differently when the teacher is in sight. But you insist on his going to school and expect him to be a gentleman in his conduct toward others, in spite of the bad boys and the boys who pretend.

Perhaps also you can lay the foundations for a habit of charitable judgments in just this moment of your boy's life, bringing home to him the meaning of Christ's warning against judging others. But you must not dull his perception of the real and eternal distinction between right and wrong, truth and pretense. A boy's perceptions on this point are always keen.

He does not go to church to meet with the pretenders, he goes to keep fellowship with you in what means most to you and to meet with God. Of course, if he has reason to include you among those who do not live what they profess, the case will be difficult. But even if that were true, you would not be justified in letting him decide about a means of his education which lies outside the range of his present powers and judgment. You would have to bring your life up to his standard and to insist gently but firmly on your responsibility and his obedience. A boy of fifteen is not competent to settle the terms or method of his own education.

Schoolgirl Language

Miss Constance Van Quentin, who is given to the free use of adjectives, says the Kansas City Star, received calls last week from five young men, each of whom is "just the dearest boy in the world," has "simply died" from the heat four times, has been "tickled to pieces" six times by movie comedians, has been "driven crazy" 11 times by telephone pests, and has been "frozen just stiff" five times by the cool evening breeze while out riding in the car. All of which made up rather a strenuous week for a delicate young lady.

A Curious Epitaph

People seem to have a hard time knowing what to put on tombstones. In some old graveyards you can find some very singular statements inscribed on the stones. Here is a specially amusing one:

> 'Neath this pile of rustic stones,
> Lies the body of Mary Jones.
> Her name was Smith,
> It was not Jones;
> We called her Jones
> To rhyme with stones.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON LEAF

Published every week in "The Restitution"

This series of lessons will cover every fundamental doctrine of the Gospel, with many references and explanatory notes and practical truths drawn from each lesson, besides suggestive topics and questions to assist both teachers and scholars.

The Restitution recommends them to schools and classes desiring to teach the truth as being without the numerous errors common to other leaflets. Also for use as tracts. A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 69 CLEVELAND, O. JANUARY 9, 1917 NUMBER 2

THE FIGHT IS ON

"Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life" (1 Tim. 6:12).

"Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be you dismayed, for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest" (Joshua 1:9).

The fight is on! the trumpet sound is ringing out,
The call, "to arms!" is heard afar and near;
The Lord of Hosts is leading on to victory,
And soon in clouds of glory will appear.

Chorus. The fight is on! O Christian soldier,
And face to face in stern array,
With armour gleaming, and colors streaming,
The host of God engage today;
The fight is on! but be not fearful,
Be strong and for the truth hold fast,
Our God is for us,his banner's o'er us,
We'll sing the victor's song at last.

The fight is on! arouse ye soldiers brave and true,
Jehovah leads, and victory doth assure;
Go buckle on the armour God hath given you,
And in his strength unto the end endure.

Chorus.

The fight is on! God leads to certain victory,
The day is dawning in the eastern sky;
All nations soon the glory of the Lord shall see,
The Day-star shines, the morn of peace is nigh.

THOUGHTS FOR THE NEW YEAR

To a child of God every day should be an holy day, a day in which we put forth our very best endeavour. But somehow at the beginning of the New Year we find our mind "Resolving." A few years ago the writer made these simple resolutions his own; many times unfortunately they have been broken, but they are still good to practice during another year.

I will not worry.

I will not be afraid.

I will not give way to anger.

I will not yield to jealousy, envy or hatred.

I will be kind to every man, woman and child with whom I come in contact.

I will be courteous, cheerful and hopeful.

I will trust God at all times, and bravely face the future.

In doing this the wise exhortation of James Whitcomb Riley as expressed in one of his helpful poems will in my life be verified:

When over the fair fame of friend or foe
The shadow of disgrace shall fall instead
Of words of blame, or proof of thus and so,
Let something good be said.
Forget not that no fellow being yet
May fall so low but love may lift his head:
Even the cheek of shame with tears be wet,
If something good be said.

My prayer is that God this year will help me to be a better man, that the truth will

Let me be a little kinder,
Let me be a little blinder
To the faults of those about me.
Let me praise a little more;
Let me be, when I am weary,
Just a little bit more cheery.
Let me serve a little better
Those that I am striving for.
Let me be a little braver,
When temptation bids me wander.
Let me serve a little harder,
To be all I profess to be.
Let me be a little meeker,
With the brother that is weaker;
Let me think more of my neighbor,
And a little less of me.

THE STORY OF A STAR

S. H. THOMAS

Early in the morning of creation, Jehovah spake to all the hosts of heaven, and said: "Let us now make a star, more beautiful than any of these we have made. Let it not be barren, and cold, lifeless and frozen, but rather let it be a thing of beauty, clothed with grand forests, carpeted with green grass and lovely flowers, the happy home of countles forms of animals and insect life."

The hosts of heaven replied, "Even so, Lord." And by his mighty word it was done. And the the new star was called Earth.

And Jehovah looked upon the earth with her beautiful valleys, and grand mountains, her rushing rivers, and gurgling brooks, her placid lakes, and mighty seas, from her darkest cavern and lowest depths of ocean, to highest mountain peak, pulsing with that God-given life which eminates from him, which no man knoweth, nor can know. And looking he said, "It is good."

"Let us now make an animal, upright, and in the express image of our person, and place him in command of all these other animals and creeping things, on earth." And the hosts of heaven replied, "Even so, Lord; and let him be given endless life, and deathless nature, and the power to propogate his species, that he may increase, and multiply, on the earth."

But Jehovah answered, "Not so, but when he is tried he prove disobedient, and we soon would behold our beautiful earth forever cursed by a race of immortal rebels, whom we could neither destroy, nor control. Let us therefore make this image of us mortal by nature, and subject to nature's law of physical decay and death, that we may prove him, whether he will be obedient, or a rebel. And it was done. And God called this animal, made in the image of his person, Man. Male and female made he them.

And he also made a law, and placed the man and the woman under it, to test and to prove them whether they would be obedient or not. But they rebelled, and broke the law, thus showing their unfitness for endless life. The laws of physical decay and death were allowed to take their course, and in due time they died, and returned to the dust from which they were formed.

But Jehovah looked down in love and mercy upon the children of men, hopelessly returning to their dust, because of Adam's sin, and he said: "Perchance there be some among them who would obey. Let us therefore make another law for them, and prove them also, whether they will be obedient or no. If they will hear our voice, and obey our commands, we will call them back from the silent tomb, where Adam's transgression placed them, and give to them the very same crown of endless life and immortality, which he lost by disobedience." And all the hosts of heaven said, "Amen; let it be so."

And Jehovah sent his only begotten Son to bring the loving gospel message of hope to death-cursed man, even God's promise to open the grave and restore to life, all those of Adam's posterity, who will believe the message, and obey his commands.

But with cruel and ungrateful hands, they took this gentle and loving Son, and nailed him to a tree, and left him there to hang until death came to his relief. But thank God! his precious blood was not shed in vain: his gospel message had been faithfully delivered, and hundreds of thousands have since rendered that cheerful and willing obedience without which it is impossible to please God. Truly "to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of lambs."

It is a cad's trick to declare war until one is absolutely certain that one is not cheating one single helpless baby out of its feeding-bottle.

"KNOW YE"

"When ye shall see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand" (Luke 21:31). "When ye shall see all these things, know that he is near, even at the door" (Matt. 24:33). "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads and rejoice; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28).

Here Jesus commands certain ones who see certain signs to know that he is near, even at the door, and he bids them know that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Again, he gives them a command to look up, to lift up their heads and rejoice. Why? Because their redemption draweth nigh. Now I want to emphasise two things in these Scriptures quoted.

First,—Jesus absolutely commands those seeing certain signs to know. He does not say, 'you may be reasonably sure, or think he is near'—but know it is so. In 1 Thess. 5:4,5 the spirit of God says if we are children of light we will know when that day comes. If we do not know, it is because we are children of darkness. "The date may be copyrighted, no one knows the day or the hour. But when Jesus is at our door, our meeting is so close that our Lord calls it "near at hand." When certain signs meet our eye we may know the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

A very important question then is, How may we know? In Matt. 24:15 Jesus, in speaking to his disciples of the destruction of Jerusalem says: "When ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains." How could they know when this came to pass? By obeying Jesus' command, "Whoso readeth let him understand" (Matt. 24:15). When that crisis was near the disciples knew by reading and understanding the sign given in the Scriptures, of its near approach. In just the same way we may know when Jesus is at the door, when the kingdom of heaven is nigh at hand.

Let us look at some of these signs given us in the word of God. "But as the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be" (Matt. 24:37). What was characteristic of the days of Noah? They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark (Matt. 24:38). How is it today? It is peculiarly a time of feasting (eating and drinking). You cannot pick up a paper that you do not see these items: "The Business Association will give a banquet today;" "The welcome to the honorable Mr. —was followed by a dinner in which Mr. —was the toast-master;" "The initiation at the Lodge was followed by a supper;" "The ladies of the church will give a chicken dinner," etc. etc. If there ever was literally a time of eating and drinking in the sense of which our Savior in his great prophecy used the words, it is now

They were also "marrying and giving in marriage." That this age is unexampled among the ages as the one in which men and women marry and then quickly get unmarried, so they may marry again, no one will deny. A writer says: "Young girls marry and trip lightly into the tie that binds, with a sense of liberty which can be theirs if they choose, and change their minds after marriage." As the days of Noah, so are these days of the Son of Man. I will quote again from the same writer: "In the inspired record given us of the days of Noah we read: 'God saw that the wickedness of men was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually . . . . . The earth also was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence' (Gen. 6:5-11). As it was then it will be again. A careful and impartial survey of the present conditions of things in the world leads us to conclude that we are in the time when these words are being literally fulfilled. Violence and corruption filled the earth in Noah's time. How is it today? Think of the murders, lynchings suicides, bold outrages, and the inhuman and shocking details of unmentionable crimes and violence which are brought to our attention daily." The things which marked the days of Noah are being enacted again today, bidding us know that the Son of Man is near. As in the days of Lot, so shall it be when the Son of Man is revealed (Luke 17:28-30). I want to quote again: "Wickedness and moral corruption abound. Paul warned us that evil men would wax worse and worse. These words are fulfilling before our eyes." A methodist clergyman has well said: "Old Rome in her worst days never harbored such conditions of vice as are prevalent in our highest social orders. Never in any period of the world's history has the moral stratum been so thin."

When the earth is like Sodom the coming of the Son of God draws nigh. James speaks of a time when treasures will be heaped together for the last days (James 5:3). Let me quote again: "The increase of wealth in recent years is phenomenal. At no period in the history of the world has there been such an accumulation of wealth in the period spanning the life of one man, or one generation. Tremendous fortunes are created in a very brief period. Such collossal fortunes, such hoarding of treasures, such combinations of wealth with such rapid increase of poverty, was never witnessed before. Our age alone fills the prophetic mold." The spirit says in the last days men shall depart from the word of truth, and give heed to fables and doctrines of devils (2 Tim. 4:4). Look at Christian Science, New Thought, Higher Criticism: Do not these absolutely turn away from the true word of God? Immortal soulism denies life from Jesus because it says we have it in ourselves. Josephism denies the only begotten Son of God, and gives the glory to a mere mortal like ourselves. Are not these doctrines of devils (opposers of God)? They were to be in the last days, and they are here. Of the so called churches of God one says: "A temple left desolate! a body without the breath of life!"

In the last days men will be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God (2 Tim. 3:4). Listen to a few clippings from the secular press: "When one reflects that it is hardly twenty years since the first moving picture, the information given out by the convention of moving picture men is nothing less than astonishing. It seem all but impossible that such vast results could have been attained in so brief a time. Just digest these facts: There are in the United States 21600 such theatres. About one to every 4800 people. Two billion dollars are invested in them. That sum evenly divided would give one hundred dollars to every family of five persons. Nightly they are attended by twenty-five million people. That is one person in four in this country nightly see a movie."

Another writer says: "Theatres are more frequented by church members than is the prayer meeting;" "Church entertainments, such as suppers, festivals, and lotteries crowd the church, the place dedicated to God."

Here is an item taken from the Sacramento Union of October: "The class in society dancing at the local high school which was attempted last season as an experiment, has proven a success and will be renewed again this season. The course will be given at the noon hour, instruction will be given in modern dances, such as the fox-trot, one-step and canter." Another says: "Many church members are found in attire none too modest in the sensual whirl of the dance;" "Worldly pleasure has drowned the voice of conscience, and eaten from the heart the love of that which is holy and upright."

A minister of Sacramento commenting on the spirit of the times says: "There is no room for Jesus in our public places of education, and we are bringing up a generation of men and women ignorant of the will of God and of the way that leads to life. There is no room for Jesus in the homes of our people. In how many homes do parents speak to their children of the blessed Christ-child born in Bethlehem?" Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. What does it portend? The coming of the Lord is near at hand!

Iniquity shall abound. Does it? Listen again to the secular press: "Mr. — admitted on the stand that he had sold his infant child's clothing for liquor. His wife also told the court that he disposed of a doll, the baby's only toy, for the same article." Speaking of the means adopted to lessen the sale of liquor the paper says: "In spite of these restrictions the official figures show that in the past year England spent for alcholic beverages the enormous sum of $949,000,000, an increase of more than $87,000,000 over the previous year."

A writer speaking of the increase in depravity in these last days says: "White slavery and prostitution are doing a terrible work. The divorce courts are choked with the cases of those who hold the marriage vow as a thing of little worth. A recent exposure of blackmail showed that among the rich many have been paying over large sums of money to keep their immorality from being exposed. Sin is indeed ripening for the harvest, and the mighty reaper with the sickle is soon to come."

Statistics show that crime has doubled in the last five years. All thinking people know that crime is increasing and sin abounding. The children of light know it betokens the last days are come. "This know that in the last days perilous times shall come" (2 Tim. 3:1). A writer says: "Conditions are indeed strange and dark and perilous. Men are standing dumb before the tremendous and sudden changes which have come into the affairs of the world, and there is a grave apprehension in the minds of men that we are on the verge of some terrible and hitherto unknown events which will overturn the the very foundations of society, and usher in a new order of things." The Springfield Republican says: "Writers who can tell a stupified world what this fearful portent means, who can throw light on the great fundamental problems of the race, and give some hint as to its destiny, will have an attentive and even anxious hearing."

Five years ago Sir Edward Grey said: "It is really as if, in the atmosphere of the world, there were some mischievious influence at work which troubles and excites every part of it." This know in the last days, perilous times shall come. Why? "For (or because) men shall be lovers of their own selves, ... without natural affection" (2 Tim. 2:3). All thinking and observing persons will say that this lack of natural affection is peculiarly seen in the people of today all around us: Brother against brother, sister against sister. But more particularly is this seen in the lack of loving care children manifest for their parents. Those who have come nearly to the end of their allotted time who read this, will remember that when they were young, old age was honored. Father and mother, when no longer able to bear the burden, passed it on to their sons and daughters. The old parents leaned upon the children. The best the table afforded was laid aside for father and mother. The warmest seat at the fireplace, the easiest chair, was reserved for them. And children did not think of these things as a duty, but a labor of love. How is it in many cases today? When the "old man" and the "old woman" are no longer useful, they are shoved aside to make room for someone else. Often the almshouse receives them while living and the potters field when dead. "Without natural affection; love of their ownselves." These conditions prevail in the world and evidence that we are in the last days. "Thus said the Lord of hosts, Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation" (Jer. 24:32). "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles: Prepare war" (Joel 3:9).

I am quoting now from George B. Thomson. "In the year 1914 there suddenly broke upon the world the most terrible war which has ever been known in the history of the race. Ever since sin darkened the world there have been wars and rumours of wars, but at no period has the earth been so convulsed with war. We indeed look out on a troubled sea. About fourteen nations, marshalling the greatest armies, equipped with the most destructive implements of death ever brought upon a battlefield, are today locked in a death grapple. The toll of men and money is appalling." "The magnitude and spirit of the worldwide struggle is not parelled in the history of man." Ex-president Taft says: "Nothing like it has occurred since the world began. It is a cataclysm." Harper's weekly declares: "The most critical moment in the world's history is upon us. events are transpiring to stun the stoutest mind. We are times meridian." President Wilson said recently: "The world is on fire, and no man knows what a single day or a single hour may bring forth." Rudyard Kipling says: "This is not a war of victories, but war of extermination. . . . . universal ruin awaits us."

The children of light know what this forshadows. They can answer the queation so repeatedly asked, "What do these things mean?" They know this is the fulfilling of Jer. 25:32,33. That is the answer to God's call to the Gentiles given in Joel 3:9-12. They know it betokens the soon coming fulfillment of verses 13, 14, 16. "For by fire and his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many" (Isa. 66:16).

Already we can see the light of that great conflagration. Lord, hasten the time when the purifying fires shall pass over, and the cooling showers shall come down on the mown grass. When there shall "be peace on earth, goodwill among men, and glory to our God in the highest."

Let all who love his appearing and kingdom, lift up their heads and rejoice, knowing that their redemption draweth nigh, that their Redeemer is at the door. This subject is almost inexhaustible, but that we may give space to others we will close. One more thought we wish to offer.

There are many lines of prophetic time which God has given us for the express of showing us "Where we are on the stream of time." These evidences that the end is near we have not touched upon. We have a reason for this. Many have said to us, "I don't know enough of ancient history and ancient nations, events and customs, to understand and 'work out' prophetic times." For this reason we have called attention to plain and certain statements which any one knowing what ideas the words stand for, may know. There is nothing symbolical in the words of God, which we have given. They are plain statements of literal conditions which prevail when the end of this age draws near. They are so plain, so easy of understanding that Jesus says we may, and more; he commands us to know that he is at our door, and knowing this, bids us to rejoice in hope: the glorious hope that if we are faithful we shall soon be with our Lord never to be parted from him again.

Mrs. A. Wood.

WILLING TO SACRIFICE

By S. Roxana Wince

What a wonderfully interesting chapter it would make for our Linograph column, if each offering that has been made could tell its own tender story! We almost wish that money could talk: it could reveal so much that we would like to know, of how eyes and feet have turned resolutely away from the pretty gown, the new suit, the coveted book, that the Lord's cause might have the gold that would otherwise be spent for these. We know how the little Byers children gave up the store of pennies they were saving towards getting a piano, and how one who was sick, and poor and old gave her second dollar.

But that is all: as to the rest, we can only read between the lines. Yet we are sure that each dear one made some sacrifice, gave up something, and willingly too, that we might have the linotype. They were willing to give up the pleasures, and even the seemingly needful things of the present, because in their rapt vision looms up an ever nearing city of surpassing beauty, whose builder and maker is God. That city is to be their home. They are only tenting now. Dwellers in tents can put up with many make-shifts, for the tent life will last but a little while. Egypt's throne, and treasures, and flesh-pots when weighed in the scales of faith with the "recompense of reward," seem light as a feather. All things—affiction pain, reproach, cruel meckings, scourgings, loss of all thingscan be endured; because of the riches that lie "over there" in the deathless land, and because of him on whom our eyes are ever fixed, the seen, yet invisible One.

Jesus gave up everything for our sakes: riches, friends, comfort, honor, home and life; small wonder is it that we can so gladly surrender some small portion of the bounties showered by our heavenly Father upon us, that the whole world may ultimately come into the possession of his Son! But if the giving of our dear ones has so many tender tales to tell to our hearts, if not to our ears, just so is it with the dusky faced people of far-away lands.

The stories of some of the gifts of these people we know, and they are very sweet and wonderful and inspiring. Less than a year ago a little church was organized by the Seventh Day Adventists among the Kaffirs living near the Indian Ocean. Not a white man was connected with that church. They had been going about contentedly only a little while before, their bodies painted all over with red clay and with only a small piece of orange colored cloth for clothing. For two or three years their crops had been nearly a failure. Yet when the offering from that church came to the union conference it amounted to what would make $273.00 in our money. In Rhodesia a native woman came into the mission with a basket of grain on her head, "the tithe of all she had raised" she had walked six miles to bring it. Another old woman walked fifty miles to the school, and fifty miles back that she might be taught the lessons that can only be learned from God's holy book. A man and his wife walked one hundred miles and back again, carrying their baby and heavy packs, for the same reason. O the love of God, how strong it is to constrain the human heart!

Let us not halt in our giving, not even when all the fixtures belonging to the linotype are fully paid for. Sister Susan A. Howard, Chinook Cave, British Columbia, says that the people of her neighborhood tell her "they do not want to hear about the Bible, that they are going to get all the good they can out of life, for they do not believe there is any hereafter." Dear Sister Howard! you seem to be all alone there in that great dark wilderness of unbelief, and not at all robust. But God has placed you there for purposes of his own. He has given command that "she let her little candle shine." If this faithless people will not listen to her testimony when given by word, we must help her to reach them in some other way. Folks will read when they will not pause for lessons given in human speech. Our linotype must print tracts that will not cost more than three or four dollars per five thousand, stirring leaflets that someone must write, for use in just such fields as that which Sister Howard tells us of. We must go into the highways and hedges, and compel these lost ones to come in, that our Father's house may be filled.

We are wide awake now, let us not go to sleep again, for the Bridegroom will soon come, and we must be ready. We sacrifice now: but the crown of glory comes then.

"All peace and joy and gladness when Jesus comes."

COMMUNICATIONS

As my time is out for The Restitution, will renew for another year, which will make about forty-five years that I have been reading the same old paper, and the same old story of Jesus and his love.

I have been quite interested of late in the different writers, especially Brother Corbaly. I believe I can see a better explanation of the spirits in prison, although he gives a very good one. Peter says that Christ was put to death in the flesh, but quickened (made alive) by the spirit, that is a definite spirit or a certain one; and the same spirit taught Noah what to preach to the people while the ark was being builded, which undoubtedly was Christ. The same spirit taught it to mother Eve in the Garden of Eden; to faithful Abraham when he offered his only son a sacrifice; and Moses when he lifted up the brazen serpent in the wilderness.

Now let us see what that spirit was, or is. We find one of the New Testament writers says that God created angels ministering spirits unto himself, and one of the Old Testament writers says God made nothing but the angels did it. So now we have the angels doing the work, and God directing it. Then we find an angel talking to Noah and giving him directions for building the ark, and directing the preaching while the ark was being built, and the same angel closed the door and opened the windows of heaven that rained until all living were drowned except those in the ark. And we find when Christ was born in Bethlehem that an angel announced his birth to the shepherds, and when the devil left off tempting him, angels ministered unto him. And in the garden of Gethsemane angels came and strengthened him. When he was crucified and laid in the cold earth for three days, the angel of God descended and the guards saw it and fell like dead men for fright at the grand sight. The same angel rolled away the stone, unwrapped the Savior of the grave cloths, and folded them carefully, and laid them at the head and foot of where the Lord had laid, emparting to him the same life by order of the Father of all that the angels possess, so that he could say, "I am he that was dead, but alive for ever more."

So now we see that the same spirit (angel) that taught Noah how to build the ark and to preach Christ to them for one hundred and twen years, had the pleasure of raising Christ from the dead, and no doubt will be one of them that Christ will send to the four quarters of the earth to gather his elect when he comes.

THE IMPENDING CRISIS

"Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay saith the Lord" (Rom. 12:1.9).

All the nations now involved in "the world war" claim to be Christian (except Japan). Japan since her brilliant victory over Russia, has become one of the most powerful nations and feared by them all. Today China is being moulded and influenced by her statesmen that are quietly developing a mighty force which soon our own government must reckon with, probably by force of arms.

We profess to be followers of him who said, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you, that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek turn to him the other also" (Matt. 5:38,39). "But I say unto you which hear, Love your enemies do good to them which hate you" (Luke 6:27). "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise" (Luke 6:31). "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful."

The so called heathen nations (India, China and Japan), are quite familiar with the above quotations. They judge us not by our understanding or theory of the gospel of Jesus Christ, but by the practical demonstration of it in our daily lives.

A few years ago a book was published setting forth the "letters from a Chinese official." The following made a deep impression upon the writer's mind, especially now in the light of current events: "It is not flattering to Occidentals the comparision drawn between the two civilizations by this Chinaman, who contends that eastern profound mistrust and dislike of western ideals are based upon reason. The antiquity of Asiatic civilization he says, has given a stability to its institutions not found in the west—it embodies a moral order, while in yours we detect only an economic chaos. You profess Christianity, but your civilization has never been Christian, whereas ours is Confucian through and through. Among you, no one is contented, no one has leisure to live, so intent are all on increasing the means of living. We of the east measure the degree of civilization, not by accumulation of the means of living, but by the character and value of the life lived. . . . . And we would not, if we could rival you in your wealth, your sciences and your arts, if we must do so at the cost of imitating your institutions. . . . . While we recognize the greatness of your practical and scientific achievements yet we find it impossible unreservedly to admire a civilization which has produced manners, so course, morals so low, and an appearance so unlovely as those with which we are constantly confronted in your great cities.

"Irony of ironies, it is the nations of Christendom that have come to teach us by fire and sword that Right in this world is powerless unless it be supported by Might. Oh, do not doubt that we shall learn the lesson! And woe to Europe when we have acquired it! You are arming a nation of four hundred millions; a nation which, until you came, had no better wish than to live at peace with themselves and all the world. In the name of Christ you have sounded the call to arms! in the name of Confucius we respond!"

A few months ago the "Methodist Times" published a synopsis of several sermons preached by leading Lutheran pastors, apparently inspired by the German government, a government claiming to be more Christian in its teachings. "kultur" and practices, than any other organization today. This is one by pastor Fritz Philipps, of Berlin:

"As the almighty allowed his Son to be crucified, that the scheme of redemption might be accomplished, so Germany is destined to crucify humanity, in order that its salvation may be secured. The human race can be saved only by blood, by fire and sword. German warriors do not shed blood with a light heart. They look upon it as a sacred duty imposed on them, a duty they cannot neglect without committing sin. Our beloved Emperor hates the horrors of war. Through long years he labored to maintain the peace of the world. Germany has never employed force to menace the independence of any nation. It is really because we are pure that we have been chosen by the Almighty as his instruments to punish the envious, to chastise the wicked, and to slay with the sword sinful nations.

"The divine mission of Germany, Oh brethren, is to crucify humanity; the duty of German soldiers, therefore is to strike without mercy. They must kill, burn and destroy; any half measures would be wicked. Let it then be a war without pity. The immoral and the allies of satan must be destroyed, as an evil plant is uprooted. Satan himself, who has come into the world in the form of a great power (England). (another great nation professing to love the same leader Jesus), must be crushed. On Germany is laid the divine command to bring about the destruction of those who are the personification of evil.

"When this work is finished, fire and sword will not have been used in vain. The redemption of humanity will be achieved. The kingdom of righteousness will be established on the earth, and the German Empire, which will have created it, will remain its protector."

This mighty nation, claims the power and the authority to establish the kingdom of God on earth! Beloved, this is nothing short of sacrilege and blaspheme. This nation (Germany), the cradle of modern infidelity, masquerading under the name of Higher Criticism, has done more to bring into disrepute and derision the word of God, than any other agency, except the "Great Apostasy," in the history of man.

Where has all this wrong teaching and ursurped authority sprang from? They say "the Bible teaches it;" does it? The late Queen Victoria was once asked by an Indian Rajah "Wherein lay the secret of England's greatness." The Queen handed him "the Bible." Ah yes, beloved; this is true that any nation may become great in proportion as that nation practices and believes its precepts and teachings. But where is the nation? Is it England, America, Germany, Russia, France, Austria, Italy, Spain, the so called Christian nations? Nay, the pages of history declare the lust for gold the spirit of selfishness and not the practising of the golden rule, has made them great. Before Jesus was born God recognized only one nation on earth. "You only have I known of all the families of the earth; therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities. Can two walk together except they be agreed" (Amos 3:2,3)? This is the nation God called out of Egypt whom Solomon said God loved (1 Kings 10:9), and Moses said: "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance when he separated the sons of Adam he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance" (Deut. 32:8).

This nation God raised up to pnish the nations for their wickedness who dwelt in Canaan. Modern "Christian" nations claim to be the descendants of "the lost ten tribes of Israel;" hence the power and authority invested by God centres in them. Beloved, when Jesus told them that "Behold your house is left unto you desolate," which declaration was fulfilled in the year 70. Israel after the flesh is no longer recognized by God, or any other nation to bestow punishment upon the others because of their sin and disobedience.

But away back from the day of righteous Abel, until this day God has been quietly selecting, educating, preparing, separating a people for his name, that in his kingdom he will use under the direction of his dear Son to bring into subjection all kingdoms, both "Christian" and heathen, into harmony with his laws and desires. Peter says these are a chosen generation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light; which in time past were not a people, but are now the people fo God. Peter addresses this class as pilgrims and strangers. Paul in Heb. 11 says, speaking of those now sleeping, but the same spirit they possessed dwell in our hearts: "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. For they that say such things; declare plainly that they seek a country . . . Of whom the world was not worthy; they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise."

Daniel saw in vision all these kingdoms and their beastly system of governments; he saw also the kingdom that God intends to set up now very shortly: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever" (Dan. 2:44). "Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings; be instructed ye judges of the earth; serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are they that put their trust in him" (Psa.2: 10-12).

Now beloved, do you feel that your place is at present in the ranks of the armies as now constituted? God whom at all times we should seek to obey rather than man, forbids us to kill our fellow man, to take part in war, strife or conflict. We are patiently looking for the early personal advent of our dear Lord Jesus, who will set up and establish the kingdom of God upon this earth. The various creeds and sects now claim that the kingdom of God is now here and ruling over the hearts of men. This nondescript thing, that fills us with nausea, can we acknowledge such gross pretentions as the present governments constituting the kingdom of God?

THE BEGINNING OF THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD

The above subject suggests to our minds the fact that the gospel preached by the nominal churches is of very recent origin, not dating as far in the past as the preaching of the apostles. The gospel preached by them today has for its foundation the doctrine of the Trinity and the preexistence of Christ. The former can not be traced back farther than the fourth century A. D.; the latter is a fragment of the old Egyptian doctrine of the transmigration of the soul. They are both foreign to the gospel spoken of in these articles. They both ignore the Bible doctrine of the mortality of man. They also do away with the necessity of a resurrection and a future judgment.

When we have learned to give our text a scriptural analysis, these false doctrines will have no place in our creed. We can look forward to the establishment of the kingdom that will be the means of establishing peace through the inhabited earth. Political diplomacy only prolongs these times of trouble when men's hearts are failing them for fear of what is coming upon them. What we wish to establish in these articles is the fact that the gospel of the kingdom of God is a part of Jehovah's original purpose of filling the earth with a righteous race, from which one would be chosen as a supreme ruler. When Moses had briefly stated the evolution of the earth from the time it was submerged in water until it became a fit abode for man, he speaks of Jehovah's purpose regarding man. In Gen. 1:28 we read: "And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish (or fill the earth full), and subdue it, and have dominion." This dominion is to have rule over the whole earth, and every living thing on the earth. This was spoken to our foreparents who had been created in the image and likeness of God.

Before this blessing could be given to them they must be placed on trial. The law under which they were placed was announced in the form, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The obedience to this law would bring life from the tree, which would enable them to live forever, and would constitute them the head of a righteous race. Disobedience to the law brought death to them, and entailed death on their offspring. The rejection of Adam and his expulsion from the garden necessitated the choice of one who would be obedient, gaining eternal life for himself, and the privelege of bestowing it upon as many of Adam's race as will believe in him as God's Son and the one who will be able to destroy sin from the face of the earth. Adam was promised the rulership over every living thing in the statement, 'Have dominion.'

The beginning of the gospel of the kingdom of God is found in the promise made to the woman (Gen. 3:15). In addressing the serpent and the woman the Lord God said: "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shall bruise his heel." The seed that the woman would produce would have a victory over the serpent seed. The gospel in this text is that sin after a season should be destroyed. As Adam and Eve were placed on trial for the rulership, so must the sons and daughters of Adam, when the two sons were a proper age, they were instructed concerning the faith in that seed. "In process of time (at the end of days, marginal), it came to pass, that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground, an offering unto the Lord. Abel also brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof. And the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering: but unto Cain and his offering he had no respect." The two offerings are so modified that we may know the reason why one was accepted and the other rejected. The Cain offering was of the fruit of the ground; the Abel offering was of the firstlings of his flock, and the fat thereof. The slaying of the lamb pointed forward to the time when the heel of the seed of the woman would be bruised. That was the death of Christ, who was the lamb of God that would bear away the sin of the world. The fruit of the ground was bloodless, and therefore could have no allusion to the death of Christ. The offering was without faith in God's purpose concerning the ages. Paul wrote, "Whatsoever is not of faith, is sin." The death of Abel removed the only righteous seed in the race. Sin had triumphed in the death of Abel. A third son was born, whom the mother said was appointed in Abel's place. In this birth God has provided a means by which all may call on the name of the Lord. The marginal rendering is, "to call themselves by the name of the Lord" (Gen. 4:25,26). Young, in his translation of this text gives it thus, "A beginning was made of preaching in the name of the Lord." Men began to separate themselves from the world. The preaching in the name of the Lord must mean the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom of God. So we see that the gospel is older than the nominal churches.

ABIDING INFLUENCE

Abiding, enduring; influence, power exerted on man or things, to affect, to move: to direct, Then our abiding influence is the acts that we do that make others try to imitate us. And if our influence is such that one enjoys our company, then that one is under our influence, and is delighted to abide with us. We see a goodly number that are influenced by evil associates, and they had rather abide with them than to be seen with those that try to live near the Savior of the world. If one is influenced by card-players, so he had rather play cards than cut wood or bring water for his mother, then you will find such an one abiding with those that are ready at all times to play cards to the neglect of real duties. And if a boy or girl is influenced by their associates, so they had rather do their bidding, than father's or mother's, and such associates lead them to do things contrary to their parents wish, then you will find an undutiful child, and broken-hearted parents.

Any one is known by the company he keeps, and if that company is evil, then such an one is abiding with, and influenced by evil associates. If one is never seen trying to get with the unlawful element, but always trying to work, and associate with the best company to be found, that person's influence is for good; and if such an one is thrown in evil company, you will not find him partaking of their evil ways.

The Christian must abide with Christ, do his will, and by so doing influence others to come and abide with Christ. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 3:36). Now, if we abide in Christ, we shall believe on him and have everlasting life; but if we do not abide with Christ, we shall not see life. Do you believe this? I do. Again we read, "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever" (1 John 2:17). "Whosoever abideth in God, does not sin, and whoever sinneth, hath not seen him, neither known him" (1 John 3:6). "Whoever hateth his brother, is a murderer, and no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him." What is our abiding influence? Is it for good? If we think it is, let us examine ourselves, and see if we cannot improve upon it; and if we can, then our Christian duty is to improve it.

WORK FOR THE ISOLATED ONES

By Harriet Boice

"We are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building" (1 Cor. 3:9).

Thus the great apostle Paul, the messenger of God to the Gentiles, sets forth three supreme and vital lessons for those who are called out to stand alone, if need be, but sent forth to labor in spreading the gospel message.

First—To stand alone and labor, not in your own strength, but by going to the great storehouse for all the means and needs for our work. Laboring knowing God is with each worker to bless him and reward him. Do not worry about results: God will give the increase in his own way and time.

Second—God's husbandry. God works through human, live, active and willing workers. He can use you if you are willing to work in any way or place. We can not always choose the place we would like, nor the kind of work, for we are not all fitted for the work we might choose. We must all begin at the bottom and work up to that which we most desire to do.

Third—God's building of character. God wants strong laborers, men and women of character who like Daniel can stand alone, yet not alone, for God is always near to strengthen those who dare to live, and die if need be for the truth. The battle-scarred Paul said, in describing his first appearance before Nero, "No man stood with me; but all men forsook me." Though he was teaching contrary to the accepted opinions of the Roman world, yet so instilled into his mind and heart were his duty to proclaim the gospel, that whatever circumstances he was in, nothing prevented him from speaking the truth. He became an example to all the world, of a strong and masterful character that God could use in teaching men the way of life. God spent eighty years in training Moses for the work he was to do. He can use you if you will meet the discipline, trial and training which it takes to bring out the beauty, grace and strength of character God wants in his building. Every stone that goes into that pure temple of God must be tried, polished and fitted to the place it is to have in that building. A wise man said, you cannot dream yourself into character; you must hammer and forge yourself one. Stand alone and meet the trial that will make you grow strong and kingly among men. The trumpet messengers of God forever herald the truth that man must battle for the crown that is to be the reward of building of characters like our great example, the man of Galillee.

Then let us give serious thought to these lessons. The importance of the message God wants you to give to the world certainly should enlist you in his service. Are you afraid of what men will say of you? Be afraid of nothing but that you may not do your duty. "Every man shall receive his own reward for his own labor." Do not be afraid of doing too much.

Our young people, as well as old, could do nothing better than go as messenger and canvas your own neighborhood, and offer religious literature for sale, and leave tracts. Nothing can keep us so alive and able to stand alone as going out as messengers scattering literature and talking with people. It takes some courage and tact to go from house to house and offer religious literature for sale, or even to leave tracts, but it pays. It gives you a chance to express yourself and get others interested in Bible study. It is a training our young people need to become leaders or teachers. The one great lesson to learn is to know how other people live and what they think about. It is not a pleasant experience to go to any home and be turned down, but if you meet with people who treat you well or ill, it gives you knowledge of human nature, and teaches you to have tact. You must learn to approach people to win and not repulse them. It will also teach you a mastery of self under trying circumstances.

This work you can do and get a training you can get in no other way. It will cost you little. It will be making many strong workers with experience. Go out as Paul and Luke did as messengers for God. It will make the gospel alive and with power to you, as you go not alone, but with Jesus as your companion and guide.

OBITUARY

Cordelia Ann Lewis, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Lewis, was born in Rush county, Ind. July 6, 1844. When seven years of age she removed with her parents to Wayne township, Huntington county, Ind., where she resided until the time of her death, which occurred Dec. 13, 1916, in the 73rd year of her age.

She was united in marriage with Andrew G. Brookover Sept. 25, 1862. To this union were born seven children—five girls and two boys, four of whom survive, viz: Mrs. Eva Bowman, Mrs. Cora Biggerstaff; Mrs. Dove Bitner and Guy T. Brookover. Those who have preceded her to the grave being Ulyses Grant, Jessie and Ina May.

She leaves ten grand-children, two brothers, William Lewis, of Huntington county, Ind., and Frederick Lewis, of Mishawaka, Ind., and two sisters —Mrs. Caroline Wince, of Whitley county, Ind., and Mrs. Melissa Colvin, of Ekalaka, Montana.

Her husband, Brother A. G. Brookover, died Feb. 12, 1909, since which time she continued to reside with her son, Guy, on the old homestead, where so many happy years of her life were spent.

When fifteen years of age she was baptized in the allsaving name of Jesus Christ, and remained a faithful and devout member of the church of God the remainder of her life. She died strong in the Abrahamic faith, believing in and anxiously looking for the litral coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead and eternal life in the kingdom of God.

Sister Brookover was a woman of exceptionally kind and gentle disposition and governed her household by love rather than by fear. She was loved and adored by her family and neighbors, by whom she will be greatly missed. I have spent many a happy day in her home in years gone by, the Bible and its wonderful truths of life and restitution being the chief topics of conversation, and which she so much enjoyed.

Funeral services, conducted by Brother VanVactor, of Argos, Ind., and the writer, were held, after which we laid her in the tomb to rest until the time when all things shall be made new, and all tears shall be wiped away.

"Don't knock," said Uncle Eben. "A man is like one o' deshere motors. When he gits to knockin' it shows dais sumpin' wrong."

TWO FUNERAL SERMONS

The True and The False in Contrast

The following words of comfort would be spoken by Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles, in case he was called on to preach a funeral sermon at the funeral services of one of the sleeping saints:

A Funeral Sermon by Paul

"If we believe that Jesus died and rose again even so (in the same manner as he brought Jesus out of death, Heb. 13:20) them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with (through) him (Jesus). For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord that we which are alive and remain (alive) unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent (precede) them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first (in contradistinction to the translation of the living ones remaining to the advent): Then we which are alive and (have) remain (ed) shall be caught up together with them (the sleeping ones) in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so (by this resurrection and translation route) shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore (because this is true) comfort one another with these words" (1 Thess. 4:13-18).

Reader: does this sound good to you? It is holy spirit theology. Will you receive it?

A Funeral Sermon by a Minister of Modern Theology

The following is generally given at a funeral by preachers of current theology:

"If we believe that Jesus went to paradise with the thief the very day that he died on the cross, even so (in like manner) them also which are now in paradise, conscious, alive, and therefore not asleep, will God bring with him from paradise at the second coming of Jesus, for this we say unto you by the authority of the tradition of the church elders, song book theology and heathen speculations of Plato, that we which are alive on earth and remain unto the coming of Jesus shall not go before those alive in paradise to meet the Lord, but come far behind, for the blessed dead are already in paradise awaiting reward, and thus have preceded us, for we shall not be caught up together—en masse—to meet Jesus, but as fast as we die, we shall meet him one by one. Wherefore, we do not preach or need the second advent of Christ. So comfort one another with these words."

Reader: does this sound good to you? It is Platonic philosophy. Which will you choose? No matter how honest and earnest are its advocates the thing is error. Will you still cling to it?—J. J. Schamburg

Success after failure is more to brag about than success without failure.

Husband—I wonder why all the misers we read about are old bachelors?

Wife—Oh, married misers are so common they are not worth mentioning.

Money cannot be made plentiful by law. Hard work and thrift form the only combination which produces ready money.

The people are generally fair except in the cases where the good name of a woman or the interests of a corporation are concerned.

The death of Art can be summed up in one word: Locomotion! The steamboat and the railroad debauched the Muse and she died strangled in telegraph wires; the telephone chants her requiem.

The Germany of tomorrow will be very different from that of yesterday; the ordeal will have changed her much. Like France, like England, like Russia, she will have found her new soul, or at least be near to finding it. And this will be the soul of an intensly democratic nation.

Must Believe Something

"What is your reason for believing in the nebular hypothesis?" asked the man who is always seeking information.

"I don't know that I exactly believe in it," replied the scientist. "But after a man has gone to the trouble of finding out what it is, it seems a shame to contradict it."

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Two lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction" and "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect." A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 69 CLEVELAND, O, JANUARY 16, 1917 NUMBER 3

HAPPY NEW YEAR

How sweet on the New Year morning,
To list to the church-going bell;
We bury the last year's sorrows,
As we sound it's funeral knell.

We welcome the glad, glad future,
With it's treasures held in store;
And hope for the day eternal,
When sorrow shall be no more.

May the "Jubilee year" soon dawn,
With it's glad release from sin;
When the "trump of God' shall call,
And usher the "new age" in.

May we use the time us given,
In the Master's service here;
Waiting for the coming,
Of the "grand Sabbathic year."

AN EXPOSITION OF HEBREWS 12:25-29

By Brother John Parker

Dear Restitution: I read in the word that they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard. Now as The Restitution is a very efficient means of speaking to the brethren, I have decided to tell it my thoughts.

A sister has written me that she has found something in the Bible that she does not understand; and refers me to Hebrews 12th chapter beginning at verse twenty-five to the end of the chapter. As I wrote her a reply, the thought came to me perhaps this may interest other brethren, and so with a prayer that it may be of service to he household of faith, I send it for publication.

Hebrews is generally accepted as written by Paul. None were better qualified to write such a letter to such a people. "An Hebrew of the Hebrews" he addresses men whom he thoroughly understands. It is written to men who know the law of Moses and have believed on Christ. Before considering the five verses already referred to, I will give a brief outline of the purpose that Paul has in view. In the first verse of the first chapter he tells them that God had spoken first by the prophets, and in these last days by his Son, the appointed heir of all things; showing that the Son is greater than Moses, greater than the prophets, greater than the angels that spoke to Moses—so great that he said, "Let all the angels of God worship him."

Having thus placed Christ in his rightful place in the minds of his Hebrew brethren, he takes some time to compare the priesthood of Aaron with that of Christ. Aaron offered a lamb: Christ offered himself. Aaron served in a worldly tabernacle: Christ entered into heaven itself. Aaron could not continue by reason of death: Christ ever liveth to make intercession for us.

Having thus prepared the way, he points them to a great truth: "The just shall live by faith." This brings us to the eleventh chapter, where we learn that without faith it is impossible to please God. Then beginning at Abel he shows that before Moses and before Abraham God was saving men by faith, and more than that: he shows that the law of Moses did not set aside salvation by faith. Moses owed his life to an act of faith on the part of his mother. It was not the law of Moses that caused the walls of Jerico to fall. No; it was the obedient faith of God's people. "By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not." And yet she had no access to the tabernacle service under Moses and the law.

To my mind the one thought that Paul wished to impress on the minds of his Hebrew brethren was this: the continuance of the temple service under the law of Moses was not essential to salvation.

This may seem a long preface to my subject, but it is not easy to detach these five verses from the rest of this epistle, as it seems to me they are a summary of the thoughts running through the whole epistle.

A Warning

Heb. 12:25; "See that you refuse not him that speaketh; for if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven."

We have already learned that Moses is referred to, as he spoke on earth. Did the people hear him, that is, hear and obey him? No. We have this in 2 Chron. 36:14; "Moreover the chief of the priests transgressed very much after the abominations of the heathen. And the God of their fathers sent them messengers, because he had compassion on them. But they mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord rose up against his people till there was no remedy." Thus they refused him that spake on earth.

The Punishment

The king of Babylon's army came and slaughtered the people, sparing about four thousand, who were carried captive to Babylon; Jerusalem was burned, including the temple; the Mosaic service ceased; the ark of the covenant, the cherubim that stretched their wings over the mercy seat, the mercy seat itself—all were destroyed, even the cloudy pillar, the symbol of God's presence seems to have disappeared in the smoke of the burning temple. It is hardly possible for us to understand what this meant to the Jewish mind—the one means of approach to God to obtain forgiveness of sin was destroyed. Black despair settled on the nation, yet not on all—a little ray of hope remained in the promise, "after seventy years will I visit you." Men like Daniel by faith could still approach to God though cut off from the temple service. This fact seems to me to be an essential fact in Paul's argument.

The Second Temple

Seventy years have passed; a great king has issued a decree that the house of God at Jerusalem should be built; the foundation of the house is laid; the little band of Jews that had returned from Babylon assemble to praise God (Ezra 3:12). But many priests and Levites and chief of the fathers that were ancient men, and had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice, and many shouted for joy, so that the people could not discern the noise of the shout of joy from the noise of the weeping.

I now turn to Haggai 2:3: "Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory? And how do you see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing?" Verse 6: "Yet once it is a little while, I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; and I will shake all the nations, and the desire of all nations shall come. And I will fill this house with glory. The glory of this latter house shall be greater than the former, saith the Lord." To me it seems that the glory of this latter house was the presence of Christ. The glory of the former house was the cloudy pillar, representing God's presence. the glory of the latter house God, as represented by the Son of his love.

The Two Shakings

This brings us to the second verse of our subject, Hebrews 12:26. The Hebrew nation had been shaken to pieces and removed once by the king of Babylon. Paul is quoting from Haggai, wherein a few brief sentences the prophet tells of the glory of the second house and its destruction. Christ had warned his disciples and the Jews that Jerusalem would be destroyed: not one stone of the temple should be left upon another. At the time Paul wrote to the Hebrews, the doom pronounced by the prophets was close at hand (probauly not more than five or six years in the future). He writes to warn them to obey "him that speaketh from heaven," and to fortify their minds against despair at the awful destruction soon to come upon the city, especially the removing and setting aside of the temple service. And he points out some things "cannot be shaken," and therefore will remain. The destruction of Jerusalem is now a matter of history. About eleven hundred thousand Jews were slain, yet the Christian Jews escaped. They obeyed him that "spake from heaven," and fled out of the city before the Roman army had surrounded it, while the unbelieving Jews from all the country round crowded into it to escape from the Roman army.

Now let us look at the things that were shaken (removed), as explained in verse 27. First, there was a national removal; for years a Jew was forbidden to enter the city. Second, the temple, including the Mosaic ritual and Aaronic priesthood. The unbelieving Jew was faced with the fact that he had no longer an alter at which to worship, or a priest to make an atonement for him. They had refused to hear him that speaketh from heaven. They were banished from the city which God had chosen to set his name there.

The Things that Remain

A great high priest who for us is entered into the heavens; a hope of receiving a kingdom that cannot be moved; a promise that God will never leave nor forsake us: a right to come boldly to the throne of grace; Jesus the Christ the same yesterday, and forever; an alter whereof they have no right to eat who serve the tabernacle.

In view of the impending doom of Jerusalem, how significant are the words, "We have no continuing city, but we seek one to come." And last, but not least of the things that remain, we have salvation by faith in the Son of God.

Verse 28: "Wherefore (that is, in view of what has already been stated), we receiving a kingdom that cannot be moved (shaken), let us have grace whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear." Verse 29: "For our God is a consuming fire." He consumes the dross that the pure gold may remain.

While I believe that this epistle was written to the Jews to prepare their minds in view of the soon-coming destruction of Jerusalem, yet has it no lesson for the Gentiles? Millions of copies of God's word have been scattered among the nations. Have they heard and obeyed? If not, can they escape? Let us not therefore be highminded, but fear, and rejoice with trembling.

Faith removes mountains, but if you wish to get rid of a wart you must sear it with a red hot pin.

THE IMPENDING CRISIS

No 2

"And the brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child; and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death. And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake; but he that endureth to the end shall be saved. Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven. Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matt. 10:21,22, 32,34).

"Then said he unto them: Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Ceasar's, and unto God the things that are God's" (Matt. 22:21).

In the performance of the duties required of me while following my daily vocation, it is necessary to pass through the boiler and blacksmith shops. The terrible maddening discord resulting from the discordant tones as the several hammers beating, seems to excel in noise its neighbour, creates a veritable pandemonium. But who among us possessing only the rudimentary knowledge of music, just revel with delight every time we hear "The Anvil Chorus"? Yet this grand blending of exquisite tones, are produced by the same instruments viz: an anvil pounded by hammers! How we all delight to sing

Blest be the tie that binds
  Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of hindred minds
  Is like to that above.

Blest are the sons of peace,
  Whose hearts and hopes are one,
Whose kind designs to serve and please
  Through all their actions run.

We share our mutual woes,
  Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows
  The sympathizing tear.

Everywhere is discord; on every hand the spirit of contention stirs up hatred, feuds, controversies, backbitings and revenge; labor and capital have their hands on each others throat. An advance in wages today only whets the appetite that leads to a demand for a higher wage tomorrow. An advance in the cost of materials, results in boosting prices "skyhigh" the week following. The spirit of caste is in the air. The poor imitate the rich. Those who are in "society" strive to maintain their position with one hand, and with the other holding down their neighbor, afraid that they may outshine them.

God is loving and kind or he never would submit to witnessing all this hypocrisy, lying, cheating, subterfuge, double-dealing, sycophansy and charlatanism so prevalent today. The world is out of tune. Indeed Paul you are right: "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now" (Rom. 8:22). If we could absorb and practice in our daily lives your wise philosophy! "Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, to be content" (Phil. 4:11). "Let your conversation be without covetousness, be content with such things as ye have; for he hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee, for we brought nothing into this world, certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment, let us therewith be content. For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some covet after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou. O man of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness. Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life" (1 Tim. 6:6-12).

The spirit of these verses is the great tuning-fork that struck by the hand of the world's greatest director Jesus Christ, will bring harmony: all the present discords of rasping sounds caused by selfishness, will melt away into one great symphony. Ah yes, beloved, he is the way; already the Lord is writing the visions and making them so plain upon the tables, that he may run that readeth it (Hab. 2:2). "For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry" (Hab. 2:3). "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry" (Heb. 10:37).

Me thinks as I close my eyes, and let my mind wander off to that place where he is interceeding for me, that he is now rising up, marshalling the angelic host before him that is to accompany him on his return (1 Thess. 4:13-18). The baton is in his hand, soon he will begin to tap and then as it, under his master hand shall direct that noble company of choristers; a song shall burst forth that for beauty of expression shall excel the masterpieces of all ages, even Beethoven's "Mount of Olives." "And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne, and the beasts and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands; saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the lamb that was slain to receive power and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever" (Rev. 5:11-14).

As I again open my eyes I find that I am still on this mundane sphere, and the discordant notes again ring in my ears. We laugh to scorn the old Romans who sacrificed to heathen gods. But stay: are we any better today in sending the best of our manhood to die, some to be so maimed and crippled that death would be a blessing? Oh the hideousness of the sight of the poor human wretches, filling the hospitals and streets of the cities in Europe today! Listen: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea; and over the fowl of the air; and over the cattle; and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God, created he him; male and female created he them" (Gen. 1: 26,72). After man sinned two seeds or two families came into existence; the seed of the serpent and the seed of the woman. The seed of the serpent for six thousand years has been waging war upon the seed of the woman. Their symbols to denote their respective nations or families on the part of the serpent seed are beastly, just as God revealed them to Daniel. Even the planets they know nothing of except to speculate upon. They have named Mars "the god of war," and the eighth sign of the zodiac "the serpent," a creature which is chiefly celebrated for its deadly sting. Don't you know, beloved, that these symbols are expressive of the way nation feels towards nation? Great Britain boasts that she is the merciless lion; Russia the bear who growls and hugs your life out; Germany delights in her eagle who destroys the life of the innocent; France and our own land blaze the same symbol upon their escutcheon, and are proud of it!

If we refuse to serve under such banners, how will they treat us? France is shooting men today who, for reasons based upon the scriptures, refuse to slay their fellow man; Great Britain is casting them into prison: what will America do? Human nature is just as bad today as it ever was, and I think sometimes worse. The world does not understand us; Christ warned us of this. "Behold what mannner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God; therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew not him" (1 John 3:1). The symbol of our kingdom—the kingdom of God—is a lamb. God himself calls us sheep. There are many good men at the head of the various governments, but they do not understand us. Trajan was far from being a bad emperor; Nero and Domitian were both cruel compared to him, yet Trajan persecuted the Christians, when Ignatius, the bishop of Antioch, was brough before him Trajan said to him, "Who are you, poor devil, who are so willfully transgressing our decree, and also tempting others to their destruction?" Notice Ignatius' noble answer; how many of us could answer so intelligently and scripturally as this? "No one calls him who bears a God within him 'poor devil,' for the devils turn away from the servants of God. But if you mean that I am evil inclined towards the devils, and that I give them trouble, I confess it. For, recognizing Christ only as my king, I set at nought the plots of evil spirits."

Trajan then asked him, "And who is this that bears a God within him?"

"He that hath Christ in his heart, the hope of glory," answered Ignatius.

Trajan caught his meaning by saying: "Do not we seem to have gods in our minds, seeing we use them as allies against our enemies?"

The answer of noble Ignatius thrills me: "The devils of the nations you call gods through a mistake. For there is one God that made the heaven and the earth, and the sea, and one Christ Jesus the Son of God, the only begotten; of whose kingdom may I be a sharer."

Trajan said: "you mean him who was crucified under Pontius Pilate?"

Oh that our orthodox friends would study Ignatius' answer to this thrust: "Him who hath crucified my sin with the author of it, and hath put down all devilish error and evil under the feet of those that bear him in their hearts."

This answer puzzled Trajan. Humorously, as one who answers a fool according to his folly, he again asked: "Do you carry the crucified one in yourself, then?"

"Yes," answered Ignatius, " for it is written, 'I will dwell in them, and walk in them.'"

Beloved, Trajan in common with the nations today cannot understand this great truth, that Christ by his spirit dwells in our hearts. When we, by the spirit of Christ that dwells in our hearts, refuse to obey the mandates of our government to go forth bearing arms to slaughter or maim our fellow man, the spirit of Trajan may manifest itself by saying as he did to Ignatius:

"We decree that Ignatius, who says he bears the Crucified One within him, be led bound to Rome, there to be food of wild beasts."

EDITORIALS ON RESURRECTION ENDORSED

Editor of The Restitution:

Your editorial on "The First Resurrection," in my judgment is entirely scriptural. My study of the Bible convinces me that there is no promise of a resurrection except to those who believe and obey the gospel. Enlightened rejectors are judged by the words of Christ in the last day (John 12:28).

All who hear, believe and obey the gospel are placed on probation for eternal life. Their after conduct will determine their status at the judgment seat of Christ. Probation may be illustrated as follows: Jesus taught: "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me, though he die, yet shall he live again by resurrection. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise. As many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, and become Abraham's seed, and have their names recorded in the Lamb's book of life; and are now on probation, and have entered the race for the prize of eternal life."

So to speak, two rolls are kept. On the first are written the names of all who believe into Christ, and may be called the resurrection roll. When the Lord sends forth his angels to gather his elect from the four quarters of the earth, said messengers will have this roll to guide as to who shall be gathered, whether they be found sleeping in the dust of the earth, or among the current living.

The second scroll will be individual, on which will be inscribed the name of the believer. It is divided into three columns. In column one is recorded all the good deeds; in the second column is written all the faults, weaknesses, stumblings, doubts, and whatsoever tends to condemnation; in the third column is inscribed all the heartaches on account of sins committed, all repentance and confession, all pleading for forgiveness in the name of the advocate, mediator and high priest. When pardon is granted that cancels the misdeeds, and they are crossed out of the second column.

When the individual appears before the judge, and the scroll is inspected, if in the second column, no demerits are left uncancelled; the judge will approve and set the individual on his right hand in the sheepfold. But if in the second column appears uncancelled records that condemn, the individual will be placed on the left hand among the goats. To those on the right hand the judge will say: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom:" and they will be born of the spirit, put on incorruption, be made partakers of the divine nature, and enter into life eternal, with all the joys and pleasures that pertain to that blessed state.

To those on the left hand he will say: "Depart from me, ye cursed;" and they will be thrust out into the outer darkness, into the lake of fire, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth. This lake of fire may be fitly illustrated by the present horrible war. The western German front in France and Belgium has been a veritable lake of fire for more than two years; and the other battle fronts. If it be the fate of the erstwhile saints to be condemned to enter tie armies of the nations, who are warring with Christ and the saints to be condemned to enter the armies of the of God, to suffer the hardships of war, and the remorse of conscience of what they lost by being unfaithful to the vows that they had taken upon themselves, that will be punishment in the extreme, and which will eventually end in death, from which there will be no release. If we deem the prize of eternal life worth striving for, how careful and anxious we should be to, not only to learn, love and obey the truth, but to keep our record clean.

Solomon T. Blessing.

POSTSCRIPT TO ARTICLES ON "REVERENCE"

NO II

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." Not a single Psalm is excepted; not a book, a chapter or a verse of the Bible, whether Historical, Judicial, Doctrinal, Exhortative, Poetical, Threating, Promissory or Prophetical—all alike have come from God, and must be treated with the most sacred awe. "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you." said Moses. So we will not throw away the 23rd, the 33rd, the 43rd, nor any other psalm, because they do not happen to be prefaced by "Thus saith the Lord."

But there is more that ought and must be said about this matter. I would be a grevious sin to keep silent where so much is involved. What shall we do about these Higher Critics? Shall we give them official position in our churches, and suffer them to teach their irrevernt sentiments to our young people? What then will become of the Bible? Where will our young people drift? The truth is worth everything. If we doubt the truth of any part of the Bible, we are doubting God. There is but "one faith, one Lord, one baptism, one God, and Father of all." Let us hold fast to these, and "earnstly contend" for them. To suffer the Higher Critic to teach is to make ourselves partakers of his sins, and to put the eternal future of our young people in jeopardy. We may love the critic; we may sincerely desire his saliation, and yet we cannot allow him to do eternal harm to others because of our love and desire for him. If he will persist in questioning the truth of the Bible, let him go to his own ilk—the infidels and athiest of the world. The church is no place for him.

EDITORIAL

As January 30th is a fifth Tuesday and no Restitution will be issued, we have planned to take advantage of the omission and visit the brethren and sisters in Geneva, Ohio.

The last week in January has five Tuesdays, so there will be no Restitution published that week. Concerning the omission of an occasional issue Sister Hanna M. Barber writes: "I think the plan you spoke of in regard to omitting an issue of the paper once in awhile, is a good one. We know that paper is advancing, and we realize that in this way it would be quite a saving; and we would appreciate the paper even more when it did come. May the Lord bless you in your work, and finally grant you an inheritance in his glorious kingdom, is my prayer. Yours in Christ."

In response to a telegram from Brother J. F. Carpenter, of Brumfield, Ky., asking us to attend and officiate at a funeral, we left home December 3rd and arrived in Kentucky the next day, just one hour before the funeral services were due to begin. Death's victim was Brother Jacob Carpenter's wife, a sister to Jesus Christ, and a daughter-in-law of Brother J. F. Carpenter. We spoke words of cheer, hope and life to the bereaved ones excessively tired as we were, from the viewpoint of Job 14:14, "If a man die, shall he live again?" A large and sympathetic audience of brethren, sisters and friends listened attentively to the discourse. For further particulars, see obituary in this issue.

Your brother in the faith, Claus Storjohnn.

REASONS WHY I LOVE THE BIBLE

S. H. Thomas

Because I firmly believe that it is a message from God to man, telling him how he may escape from the prison house of death, and stand up alive, once again, to die no more.

Because it contains within itself, indisputable evidence that it is exactly what it claims to be, the actual words of the living God.

Because it is he only book in the world, with any degree of reliability which undertakes to tell us from whence we came, and whither we go.

Because it contains our only hope of a resurrection from the dead, to endless life in the ages to come.

Because it tells of the infinite love of God for those of his creatures who believe his word, and obey his commands, and his promise of pardon for their sins through Jesus Christ our Lord.

I wonder why the infidel hates the Bible, and would destroy if he could, the only book ever written, which gives him hope of life beyond the grave. The only book that contains any promise, that he will ever again meet the loved one, whose eyes he has just closed in death.

I wonder why he hates and would destroy a book, that contains God's message of a love so great, that he freely gave his only begotten Son to die on the cross, that we who believe on him, might not perish, but have everlasting life. When we consider his feeble, hopeless condition, how utterly powerless he is, in his own self, to escape the fate of all flesh, or prolong his life one moment. Surely his hatred of God, and the living promises contained in his word, is a thing most unaccountable. If perchance he sees a fellow man, devout, sincere and earnest, in his faith in God and the Bible as his word, he promptly proceeds to tear down that faith which comforts, and sustains his brother or sister. He sneers at it, and points out that the old Bible is no longer taken seriously, among refined or educated people as true, and the word of God. That only the weak minded and simple so regard it now days. That it is only a collection of ancient fables, and foolish fish stories. A musty relic, handed down from the days of witchcraft, and simple minded superstition. When covered with costly morocco and gilt letters, it makes a very pretty ornament, for the centre table in the best room, and is always useful to keep record of family births and deaths. But as for using it as a guide to govern our daily lives, and mould the character of our children, such idea is far too primitive for this enlightened generation.

Mr. infidel: Don't you think it a mean thing to do, to seek to tear down the faith and destroy the hope, which comforts and makes happy a fellow man? To my mind it is even worse than that. It is robbery, to destroy the faith of another, unless you are prepared to replace it with a better. Can you do it? You who contend that you know nothing, except of the few short days of sunshine and shadow, between two eternities of silence, darkness and gloom; that mankind steps out from the silence and darkness of the past, plays his little part in the drama of human life, and enters again into death and eternal forgetfulness. I am sorry for the infidel; from the bottom of my heart I pity him. No rays of hope, or beams of promise, cheer his heart, as he descends to the tomb. No more life, naught but darkness, eternal silence and gloom.

Recent explorations and discoveries in the far East, confirm the truth of the Old Testament Scriptures. James Baikie, the noted scholar and scientist author says: "The Babylonian inscriptions have thrown a flood of light, upon the patriarchal period. Although many modern cities have until recently, declared the entire historical situation different from that found in the Old Testament, They are now forced to acknowledge it to be in strict accord with the many details gathered from the monuments."

The Moabite stone was discovered on Aug. 19th 1868, on the ruins of ancient Dalon. This stone may now be seen in the Louvre, and also a plaster cast of it in the British Museum. It remains to us an unanswerable and authentic monument, to the truth and antiquity of the Bible. In 2nd Kings, chapter three, we read of war between the king of Israel; and Misha, king of Moab. And this Moabite stone, is a record of this war, caused to be written thereon by Misha, king of Moab. The stone was made 900 years B .C.; and agrees with the Bible record in 2nd Kings, except, that on the stone, the Moabite king claims the victory, while in the Hebrew record, the armies of Israel are said to have been victorious. There are many such monuments and ancient records recently discovered in ancient ruins which prove beyond question the truth and antiquity of our Bible, but space forbids individual mention.

The infidel contends that science and the Bible do not agree. We reply that the Bible and true science are now, and ever have been, in perfect accord. But the Bible has always been in advance of science. For example: for ages science believed that the stars could be counted, and early astronomers had them numbered, while the Bible taught, they were "innumerable" (Heb. 11:12).

A short time ago the great scientist Farraday discovered that pure gold could be made clear and transparent, like glass. But for centuries the Bible had been telling of "Pure gold, as it were transparent glass" (Rev. 21:21).

For ages science taught that the earth is flat, and rests on foundations, while all the time the Bible was saying, "God sitteth upon the circle of the earth," hereby teaching the earth is round.

More than a thousand years before astronomy became a science, the God of heaven called the planets by name, and they bear the same name today. 3436 years ago God asked Job: "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion? Canst thou bring forth Mazzaroth, in his season, or canst thou guide Arcturus, and his sons?"

Wherever the Bible goes, civilization and uplifting of the standard of morality, follow. Remove the Bible, and repudiate its code of morals and teachings, and man would soon return to violence, anarchy, and semi-barbarity. Why? To the infidel, death ends all. His motto is, "Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die. Why deny ourselves; the world is ours, for a short time, and the fulness thereof. Let us drain the cup of pleasure to its dregs. A short life and a merry one, and then a plunge into the land of forgetfulness from whence I came." With such a faith, how can we wonder that ninety-nine out of a hundred criminals, murderers, robbers, liars, fornicators, adulterers, etc., are infidels? Rarely indeed is one who loves and reads the Bible, convicted of crime. Will infidels tell us why?

I once read a story of an old infidel and his nephew, who, many years ago, when the country was new, had occasion to journey across the wilderness, carrying with them a large sum of money. One night they halted at a rough cabin in the woods. A brawny bearded back-woodsman, stood in the door, and they asked him for shelter for the night, which was granted, and after caring for their horses, they entered the cabin and found their host all alone and busy, preparing supper. He was sober and quiet, having little to say, and being weary with their journey, as soon as supper was over they asked to retire, and were shown to an adjoining room. They each had grave suspicions of the character of their rough looking host, and sought to fasten the door to their room, but found no lock, or means of making it secure. So they cautiously set table, and chairs against it, and arranged that one should stand guard, while the other slept. So the nephew took the first watch, and the uncle disrobed, and lay down to rest. After an hour or so, the nephew wondering what their host was doing, peeped through a crack in the partition, and saw the old back-woodsman sitting quietly, gazing into the open fire place. Presently he arose slowly, and took down from the chimney shelf, an old well worn book, and after reading a chapter, he knelt down and raised his away his pistol, and began to strip for bed. He knew that is was not necessary to stand guard with gun in hand, in a home where the Bible was read, and the fireside hallowed by the voice of prayer.

The infidel declares that the Bible has been responsible for most of the bloodshed of the world, and that the world would be a much better place in which to live, if the last Bible were destroyed. But I have always noticed, that he continues to remain close around where the teaching and principles of the old book are practiced and revered. If these teachings and principles be false and a detriment to mankind, why don't he go to some country where the old book is not known? To Turkey, or China, or the South Sea islands? His life and property might not be so safe, as where Bible principles rule. But he can get away from the Bible if he really wishes to do so.

I once heard a good story which beautifully illustrates this point. During a terrific gale, a large ship was driven ashore and wrecked on a canibal island, the inhabitants of which were known to be savages, of the lowest type. The few survivers of the lost ship, exhausted and weakened, by their battle with the sea, and without food or arms to defend themselves, huddled together in terror, expecting each moment the coming of the bloodthirsty savages. At last one of their number, more courageous than his fellows, crept to the top of a hill which hid the interior of the island, and peeped over. For several moments he crouched motionless, gazing inland. Then he jumped and leaped, and shouted like a crazy man, wildly beckoning his comrades to come up. Had his sufferings indeed destroyed his reason? Oh no! He had seen a church steeple over there. The Bible had got there before him, and he knew that it made him safe on that canibal island.

The infidel says that Moses made mistakes, that Jacob lied to his poor old blind father, and cheated Esau out of his blessing and birthright, and that king David, the man after God's own heart, fell in love with another man's wife, and caused her husband to be killed, so that he might have the woman. And that according to the Bible itself, every last one of those holy men of old, were guilty of evil and disreputable acts, just like men of today. Mr. Infidel, you are right! I acknowledge the corn; your charges are true; and I cite that very fact to prove that the Bible is true, and the word of the living God. The Old Testament Scriptures, are a history of the Jewish nation, written by Jews under divine inspiration. If God had removed his influence during the making of these records of that nation, would not the natural pride of these Jewish writers, have prompted them to leave out those things, that would defame their history? When they came to that sin of king David, they would have said, "We won't say anything about that. It will do no good if recorded, and disgrace our nation." But when God writes the record of a man, or a nation, that record is true. Human nature is poor stuff, and always has been since Adam's fall. Abraham, Isaac, Moses, and king David, were but human, weak and sinful, just as we are, and the Bible is a true and faithful record of their faults, as well as their virtues. If the Scriptures had described them as superior beings, entirely free from sin, we then might with reason, doubt its truth. If God should write on my forehead, a record of all the acts of my life, can you guess how I would wear my hat? Very low down in front. And not only I but the best of men would do likewise!

Infidelity may be all right and quite satisfying to some in the safety of home, and surrounded by a multitude of blessings, fresh from the bountiful hand of that merciful God which he disowns and dishonors. But when at sea, the storm rages, and billows roll mountains high, and the old ship is foundering, and about to sink, it is then, on bended knees, the trembling infidel calls upon God for help and mercy, and realizes all too late, that in time of trouble, infidelity is a miserable failure. Thousands have been known to bitterly regret on their death bed, that they were infidels. But there are two things which the writer never expects to see:

First.—Two mountains, with no valley between; and Second.—A dying man, who is sorry he is a Christian.

BEREAN COLUMN

Edited by National Berean Society
Leota B. Hanson, Editor,
3776a St Louis Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Bereans:

A happy new year to all with health and happiness, with renewed zeal in the work, with a greater desire to study God's word and a more intense love for all things that our Master would have us do.

I wish at this time, to publicly thank the officers and the committees for the excellent work so far this past year. One reason that the work has been so successful is because the work has been team work. All have been pulling together towards the same goal—the unity of the young people, in organization, in study, in work for others, and in Christian fellowship and love that breaks down all state lines and church dissensions. No one has been afraid of overstepping into another's department, and so we have had wonderful results and a harmony that is beautiful.

Do not fail to read the corresponding secretary's notice about Nebraska. Sister State, we are rejoiced to have you with us. Your zeal, your activity and go-ahead-ness has been wonderful. What you have accomplished since your organization in August has been somewhat of a rebuke to those of us who have been organized longer. Write and tell us how you did it. We welcome you, Nebraska, and we hope that you will soon learn to take advantage of all our departments, that your articles will appear in our columns: that you will join in the social correspondence work with the isolated, the new converts and any who wish to write to those of like precious faith: to take advantage of the tracts that are free for all, and to cover your state well with them.

There have been many enquiries from isolated members, and some from isolated societies, as to whether or not they can join the National Bereans. If you are isolated you must join through some state organization, and if you do not know where to apply, write to Anna E. Drew, 629 N. Galena Ave. Dixon, Illinios, and she will take care of you. If you are an organized local society, and there is no state organization where you are, you can join the National Bereans, and you can write to Evelyn K. Harsch, 5447 Ohio St. Chicago, Ill. (note change of address) and she will give you all the information you desire. If you are not organized and want to work in a systematic way, write to Lydia Railsback, 621 S. Fellows St. South Bend, Ind., or to Idona Romine, 1815 South St. Lincoln, Neb. and they will tell you how to get to work to bring about the desired results.

See our list of tracts in the last Berean column. They are to be had for the asking. Send to Lydia Railsback for them.

If you want to write an open letter to the Bereans, or send an article for our column and you have no state committee, send it to our National Editor, Leota B. Hanson, 3736 A. St. Louis Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

The time is short, Bereans, so let us make every day count. Let us be faithful to our lesson work, in our living the Christian's life and in our church work. The Berean work is not ended when the Berean class is ended, but it extends into every line of church work, and unity and faithfulness is our motto. Let it tell in our lives during this year.

May the God of peace keep us all in his care and gather us, an unbroken company at the appearing of his beloved Son.

Your president,
Leila E. Whitehead.

It is a great pleasure to announce that the Nebraska State Berean Society has joined the National Berean Society, and is now affiliated with us in all our work. Your enthusiasm is a great inspiration to us, and we welcome you gladly.

Lesson XVIII

Subject, The Time of Reward

Memory Text

"For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels and then he shall reward every man according to his works" (Matt. 16:27).

1. "Behold, I come quickly and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22:12).
2. "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants, the prophets and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth" (Rev. 11:18).
3. "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind;
4. "And thou shalt be blessed; for they can not recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just" (Luke 14: 13,14).
5. "That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire might be found unto praise, and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. 1:7).
6. "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth and hath long patience for it until he receive the early and latter rain.
7. "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (Jas. 5:7,8,).
8. "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment.
9. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation" (Heb. 9:27,28).
10. "For I am now ready to be offered and the time of my departure is at hand.
11. "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith.
12. "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing" (2 Tim. 4:6-8).
13. "And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory.
14. "And when these things begin to come to pass, look up and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:27,28).

Practical Truths

Our lesson today is on "the time of reward." To the faithful believer in Christ no day could be more welcome than the day of reward. Then he will lay down the cross of suffering for the crown of rejoicing and glory; the transitory for the eternally enduring. Some good people think the reward is given at death, but the Scripture passages quoted above show that it will be given at the second coming of our Lord, and the resurrection of the dead. God's word on this important topic should settle the question.

Notes on the Lesson

Son of Man.—Jesus is called the Son of Man several times in the Scriptures and so styles himself in our memory text. He is a great many times called the Son of God. He was truly both. In the genealogies as given in the first chapter of Matthew and the third of Luke his descent is traced through David. He was made of the seed of David according to the flesh (Rom. 1:3). He was begotten by the Holy Spirit (Luke 1:35; Matt. 1:18). Our faith should comprehend both of these plainly revealed truths as setting forth his relationship to both God and man.

1. To Give Every Man According as his Work Shall be.—The judgment of God is according to truth (Rom. 2:2), so in the rendering of rewards through his Son to whom he has committed all judgment, it will be done in harmony with the principles of truth, justice and mercy. He will render to the righteous all things embraced in his exceeding precious promises and inflict upon the wicked the punishment threatened in his Divine word. Against the assertion of his chosen people that his way was not equal he affirmed his way equal and their way unequal.

4. Recompensed.—To make a return to, to render an equivalent to, for service, loss, etc. (Webster). The recompense or reward promised to God's people is infinitely more than an equivalent for service, loss and suffering. It is a gift bestowed by the hand of Divine goodness and mercy exceeding in value all that we do or suffer as eternity outmeasures a few short years.

Resurrection of the Just.—There will be two resurrections: one at the comnig of Christ, the other at the close of the 1000 years reign.

5. Trial of Your Faith.—Trying or testing in any manner. Here it comes through persecution. God has, in every age, tested the faith of his people.

Gold Tried by Fire.—To purge away or destroy the dross leaving the precious metal: so a tested faith is pure, more precious than gold, and will be honored or rewarded at the coming of the Lord.

9. Bear the Sins of Many.—The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all (Isa 53:6). These and similar figures of speech are employed to set forth the great leading thought that Jesus died for us or was made a sin offering for us.

12. That Day.—The day of the Lord's appear ance when he shall judge the quick and dead. The phrase occurs several times in the epistles of Paul, all having reference to the same time.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. When the Son of Man Comes.—In our memory text with what event is the giving of the reward connected? Will you please read verses 24. 25 and 26 of Matt. 16th? Also Luke 9:24,25,26,? These texts refer to those who would lose their lives for the sake of Christ. What are such called? When will these martyrs get their reward? Is this coming of the Son of Man a coming in person? Has this event already taken place in the past, or is it yet in the future? Will our Lord bring the reward when he comes? Can we get the reward before his return?

2. All of the Righteous Rewarded at the Same Time.—Can you give the proof? See 2nd paragraph in Scripture quotations. Do you think that the persons mentioned in this text as servants, prophets, saints, and them that fear God's name, include the church of all time down to the period of the resurrection? Will all be perfected together (Heb. 11:40)? Do you know of a single text which teaches that God rewards his people one at a time?

3. At the Judgment.—God has appointed a day in which he will judge the world (Acts 17:31). With what event is the judgment connected in point of time (2 Tim. 4:1; 1 Cor. 4:5)? Will God reward men before the judgment? Before the hidden things of darkness are brought to light and the counsels of the heart made manifest?

4. In the World to Come.—When will the righteous get eternal life (Luke 18:30)? What is meant by "world to come?" In his argument with the Sadducees in Luke 20:35, does Jesus refer to the same world or age? With what does he connect it? "Worthy to obtain it." What is meant by this language? Will this worthiness entitle us to all the good things belonging to that world?

5. Should the Children of God Pray for the Time to Come?—If all the promises are to meet their fulfillment then, is it resonable to desire that day to come? Do we pray for it to come when we pray for the kingdom to come? Do all the Scripture proofs bring us to the same conclusion as regards the time?

OBITUARY

Mrs. Flora Russell Carpenter, daughter of Jno. M.and Laura B. Russell, of Washington Co., Ky., was born Dec. 26, 1883, died Jan. 3, 1917, aged 33 years and 7 days. She was married to Jacob E. Carpenter Jan. 21, 1905. Three little daughters, Chessie, nine years, Nettie, seven years, and Ethel, two years, and her husband are left, besides her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Russell, nine brothers and two sisters.

She was baptized into Christ by J. W. Williams about seven years ago. She was a firm believer and consistent follower of the lowly Nazarene. Thus death is still collecting his toll. The little flock in Kentucky have been robbed of two of its members in less than four months. Yet it is the Lord's will to hide them in the grave until the indignation be overpast. We can only say, "Thy will be done " For we sorrow not as others who have no hope. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again even so them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. Raised to immortal glory, when there will be no more sorrow or pain.

Brother Robt. G. Huggins spoke words of comfort to the bereaved not from fanciful imagination, but from the solid promises of God, which have been the hope and consolation of all God's people through the generations from Job to the present. We wish to thank Brother Huggins for breaking off from his busy home life and coming to help us in our time of sorrow. We believe our brother to be a cheerful giver of time and talent, and who shall hear the "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Remarks

In my ministerial career sickness, either of myself or family, has never hindered me in my work but very little. But this month has been greatly handicapped on account of serious illness of my son. At this writing he is a little improved, and we still have hopes. Pray for us.

On the 10th the different churches, or as many as could get away, met again with the Kennard church, and another feast from the spiritual side was indulged in. It was certainly a feast: every one seemed happy and joyful in the truth. Blair, Avery, Arlington, and Omaha were represented, and a well filled house was the result. We hope to make these meetings a feature of the work the coming year. They are enjoyed and helpful to all. The good will and good fellowship were so marked.

This New Year's day, 1916 is history and how, I wonder, do we stand in the ledger? I wonder how my account balances? I am rejoiced to know a merciful Father, who knows our hearts perfectly, has balanced the books, and knows each of our standings. If my account is not balanced there is nothing left for me to do but ask God to forgive the debt. 1916 is gone, and I can't recall it and pay the debts I owe my brethren and my heavenly Father. If I failed to pay them when due; the opportunity is gone and all I can do is to ask each one to forgive my debt. For I will have all I can do to pay the obligations of 1917. Let us all resolve to try with God's help, to keep our obligations for the year balanced up to date, and not allow our accounts with each other to accumulate. I forgive every one of their debts this New Year's day, so I will have no old accounts to send out. I close my books with all. So during the coming year if any one of you get into my debt I will send you a bill in the name of the Lord, and ask you to call and settle; and if you fail I shall have to turn it over to the great collecting agency of God and his Son, who will not fail to collect. Just so if I shall become obligated to you: send my bill and I believe I can pay on demand. Can't we keep our debts paid? and if we do there will be no debts to worry over. Dear brethren, in love and good will can't we clear up our books? If not how do we expect the book in heaven to be clear and our account with God straight? I believe 1917 will see the greatest events and those that will point the near approach of the Master than any we have ever witnessed. Let us watch and pray as Jesus said. Happy New Year to all.

Almus Adams.

The war is said to have awakened Russia to an extent that is destined to have extremely important, far-reaching consequences, so that enormous developments in agriculture, manufactures, commerce, transportation, etc., may be expected from now on. It is predicted that if the prohibition of vodka is continued the country will leap into unprecedented prosperity after the war is concluded for the people have learned the possibilities that lie within themselves and the nation, and will never again be content with the old, unprogressive order of things. The chances are the ban on liquor will continue after the war for the officials, from the czar down, are said to believe that the benefits the country has derived from prohibition are far too valuable to be lost by returning to a less restricted use of liquor. As a result of the restrictions against the sale and use of vodka, there has been a marked falling off in crime of all kinds, absenteeism in factories has dropped 60 per cent, the number of suicides is much smaller, hospitals which were formerly crowded are not fill ed now, the efficiency of workers has increased greatly, unemployment has practically disappeared, fire damages show a marked decrease and the people are happier and far more prosperous and contented.

Minature Bibles are frequently worn as watch charms by devout Russians. They are about an inch square and three-eights of an inch in thickness. It is seldom that Russians wearing these charms study their contents as the aid of powerful magnifying glasses would be required. Still they gain much solace from the thought that the word of God is always with them.

A MORNING PRAYER

Just Today

Listen, dear Father, while I pray:
Lead me aright, just today;
Cause my lips and tongue to say
Things that please thee all the way.

May I strive, just today,
To obey thy command;
For thou doth say the whole law is fulfilled
When we love our brother as thou hast willed.

I am unworthy, weak, undone;
While I love, still I am the one
To love my brother like self, I see,
Matters not how much he may love me.

Is exactly what our Lord commands,
Then help me, O Lord, just today,
To follow thee in thy humble way,
Forgetting what others do to me,
Remembering to love others
As thou hast loved me.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD WITH REFERENCE TO THE PROMISE MADE TO ABRAHAM

We are astonished to know that well disciplined minds are not able to grasp the simple truths of the gospel. It seems that the doctrines of men fill the minds of a large portion of the human family so full of their tradition, that they reject the gospel preached in the early dawn of creation, and during every age since.

In our previous particle we found that the gospel was preached to the descendants of Seth. When Noah came out of the ark he was told to fill the earth with his offspring. He was a preacher of righteousness, and must have known the conditions of salvation, as Paul says: "He moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith" (Heb. 11:7). The flood came as a punishment to an apostate race. Thus we see that sin was checked for a season, but centuries after we find another apostacy in which the race was almost wholly given over to idol worship. Joshua in addressing Israel (24:2) said: "Your fathers dwelt on the other side of the flood (river) in olden times, even Terah, the father of Abraham and the father of Nachor, and they served other gods." Under these conditions Jehovah sent a messenger to Abraham who then lived in Ur of the Chaldees. It would seem from what has been written that Abraham was not an idol worshiper, but knew the Eternal One and worshiped him. His willingness to obey the directions of the messenger to leave his country, and his kindred, and his father's house, and go to a land that I will show thee, is further evidence that he did not worship the god of his father. Paul in Heb. 11:8 says: "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which we should afterward receive for an inheritance, obeyed, and he went out not knowing whither he went." It was faith in a future inheritance that led Abraham to leave a land of plenty and go into a land sparsely inhabited. His faith was the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. He had possessions of land and personal property in the land of his birth. The promise of Jehovah must have been more than a landed estate in the land of Canaan where he was directed to go.

In Gen. 12:2 he was promised a multitudinous seed that would make a great nation. He was also promised that his name should be great, and that he should be a great blessing; also "in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." The latter promise contained the gospel, as Paul in writing to the Galatian church says: "The Scripture foreseeing (or foretelling) that God would justify the heathen (nations) through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed" (Gal. 3:8). The "gospel" in this sentence must mean the gospel that Paul in his life time preached. In referring to Acts 26 we find that he was judged for the hope of the promise made to the fathers, who are Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. In Paul's day the fathers hoped to come into possession of these promises. When Paul went to Rome he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets. He evidently proclaimed Jesus as the Son of God and heir to David's throne. The phrase kingdom of God is a part of the message that Mark said that Jesus preached through Galilee, and directed his apostles to preach to every creature.

From the above testimony we conclude that the gospel can not be preached without preaching the same gospel that was preached to Abraham. The covenants made with the fathers, Abraham and David, must constitute the "covenants of promise" spoken of in Eph. 2:12, which reads as followers, "At that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel. and strangers to the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world." The truth that we glean from this text is that those who do not believe and teach the covenants above spoken of, are without Christ, having no hope and without God in the world. It is evident from the testimony in the following verses, 19 to 22, that these promises have their foundation in the Scriptures: "Now (since you have removed your alienship by believing the promises and changing your citizenship) you are no longer strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints and of the household of God." Paul further states that "Ye are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus himself being the chief corner stone." In the letter to the Galatians the same apostle writes, that the gospel that we preach is not after man. He further states that he received it by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

It is safe in concluding this article, to state that the gospel of the kingdom of God is very closely related to the promises made to Abraham, viz., The land of Canaan as an everlasting possession, and to bless all nations through his seed, whom Paul states in Gal. 3:16 to be Christ. The promise to this seed is that he shall possess the gates of his enemies; also that his dominion shall extend from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. Paul pronounced a curse upon any man, or even an angel from heaven, if he preach any other gospel than that which he had preached. Let us labor for the crown which is laid up for those who are looking for his coming.

THE IMPENDING CRISIS

Geogge B. Alldridge

"And it shall come to pass in the last days, the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow into it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us his ways: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more" (Is. 2:2-4). "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion, shout O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy king cometh uoto thee: he is just and having salvation: lowly, and riding upon an ass and upon a colt the foal of an ass" (Zech. 9:9).

"The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all)" (Acts 10:36).

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners, spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things by whom also he made the worlds" (Heb. 1:1,2).

To us who believe in the promises God made to Abraham, there is no name in human history which awakens so many thrilling associations as the glorious name Zion! It not only represents the church of God under the Jewish dispensation, and all that was holy and dear in her, but also the church of God during the Christian dispensation, from the day Jesus was baptized by John in the river Jordan, unto the present day. Confined to no sect and no clime and no language: it embraces in its catholicity all who love God, obey him in the things concerning the kingdom of God and in the name of Jesus Christ. This name—Zion—binds them into one holy family, brothers and sisters, Christ their elder brother. the head and provider, a tie of relationship that is more sacred than even that of husband and wife.

As we pause for a moment and take a retrospective view over her history, our heart sighs half of regret and half of affection, as her mournful history of persecution and opposition rise to our view. Zion, the church of the living God, has experienced seasons of trials and tears, but also times of gladness and raptures; sufferings as well as joys, but blessed be God, her notes of lamentaitons and discouragements have never risen as often as her songs of deliverance and thanksgivings!

God, who keeps an accurate record of all her tears, knows full well her conflicts and her trials, and that from the hour she left Egypt upon that eventful night, when the firstborn of Egypt was slain, and all through that weary forty years' journeyings in the wilderness and desert places, passing over Jordon into the "good land," the land of Canaan, till now, she has been a stranger and sojourner in a world of wickedness, who are living without God and without hope. Jesus said to his disciples, "Behold, I send you forth as sheep among wolves." Paul, his faithful follower, told the elders of the church at Ephesus: "For I know this, that after my departing, shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of yourselves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. Therefore watch, and remember that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears."

In Sunday School, in our study of the gospel, we have found but very few people really understand and believe the gospel. Paul says that if we do not believe the gospel we are lost: "But if our gospel is hid, it is hid to them that are lost; in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." Again, Paul says: "Moreover brethren, I declare unto you the gospel, which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain."

Two men, while riding together in a train, began a discussion on religious beliefs and doctrines One, the more aggressive of the two, asked his companion what "church he belonged to." He replied, "The one the Bible names." The other scratched his head for a moment and then said: "I had never thought of that. I am a rock-bound and died in the wool shouting Methodist." "Oh," the other answered, "I have read my Bible closely and I cannot think of any church God recognizes except the one he calls 'The Church of God.' "

In Paul's day, and for a few years following his death, there was only one church. The members of that body believed implicitly in the gospel of the Abrahamic promises: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many, but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ." "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free;there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

Who, then, are Abraham's seed? Those who have been baptized into Christ, and hence inducted into the family of God. known by him as the Church of God. Not much room here for cavil or preaching "Broader Hope." Brethren, we must "hew close to the line (of God's word), let the chips fall where they will." "Let God be true, but every man a liar."

What has caused all the many sects divided into two groups or schools today, known as Catholicism and Protestantism? Simply this—the meaning of the gospel. Now notice closely: "And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen (the nations) through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed" (Gal. 3:8). Every nation to whom the gospel of the kingdom has been preached have been blessed; the blessing going to those who believe and obey the requirements of the gospel. Paul said in his day, this had already been done to the then known world.

Along about the third century, when faith in the coming kingdom of God, under the rulership of his Son, the Christ, head and body, represented by the Church of God complete, began to fade. The glorious Abrahamic promises pertaining to the millennial kingdom to be established upon this earth (Rev. 20:4). False teachers, wolves in sheep's clothing, longing and lusting for power and authority, began to teach that the visible church—themselves—were to be given authority and power to establish the kingdom of God, and that in the person of themselves it exised. Under this error the papal hierarchy, known as the Holy Roman Catholic Church, rose into power until it controled (except later Turkey) practically every nation in Europe. It is not generally known that the Roman Catholic Church teaches that the one thousand years of Christ's reign is past, that we are now living in "the little season" when satan (Protestantism) is loosed to deceive the nations and gather them together for the last great conflict. The one thousand years alluded to by this great apostacy is known and spoken of by all historians as the period of "the dark ages." Many of the nations that once were held in the thraldom of this terrible system, have broken away from her, England, as far back as the reign of Henry the VIII. Today only Spain and Austria-Hungary recognize the pope's claim to temporal power which means that he (the pope) represents Christ, the cardinals, bishops and priests the administraters of this kingdom, the kingdom of God. Today why are the nations fighting? President Wilson in his recent "appeal for peace note" to the powers engaged, asked this question. Germany says she is fighting to prevent the allies from crushing her; the allies say we are fighting to keep Germany from crushing us. Both of these answers are only a subterfuge. You, the pope, claiming to be God's vicegerent upon earth, are responsible for this great war. The cruel system you are the head of, is responsible for the shedding of more innocent blood and wars than any other cause in the history of the world. But God's righteous wrath will soon be poured out upon you. "Rejoice over her ye heavens, and holy apostles, and prophets, for God hath avenged you on her. And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great mill-stone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down and shall be found no more at all" (Rev. 18:20,21).

The concordat you tried through Austria to force upon poor little Serbia, thus extending the power of your evil influence upon that nation who owned allegiance to the Greek Catholic Church, a power and influence you dread, precipitated the nations into this cruel war, all of whom, even this the United States, are under more or less your evil spell. All the nations now engaged in war think that if they are victors in this war they will be in a position to thus extend the kingdom of God, they being God's representative in so doing. Already the pope is "wire pulling" to have delegates representing him at the "congress" when it convenes to consider peace terms. You, the pope, whose mouth speaks great swelling words and blasphemies, expect the kingdoms you lost in 1870 will again be restored to you. Nay, God's word is too clear upon this proposition. Your doom is sealed: destruction and oblivion await you. Today you are trying to "hitch up horses" with the Greek and Episcopal churches; one representing Russia, the other the British Empire. Both of these are your daughters, you have taken sides with the central powers—Germany and her allies, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and the unspeakable Turk. Now you can read the writing upon the walls of the vatican, "Mene, Mene, Tekel Upharsin." You are bewildered, you are "between two stools and hence will fall to the ground."

But the true church, Zion, whom David saw in prophecy, in a burst of lofty enthusiasm, carried away by a sudden transport as he contemplates the glory and strength of this the true church exclaims: "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion: God is known in her palaces for a refuge. Let Mount Zion rejoice, let the daughters of Judah be glad for this God is our God for ever and ever." Beloved keep faithful just a little longer; Jesus will soon be here.

PRETENCE

In Phil. 1:15-18 we have a most remarkable Scripture, one we should all read and ponder well. It reads: "Some indeed preach Christ even of envy and strife, and some also of good will; the one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add afflictions to my bonds: but the other of love, knowing that I am set for the defense of the gospel. What then? notwithstanding every way, whether in pretence or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein rejoice."

Let us notice these different verses. It seems almost impossible that anyone would teach or preach things they did not believe just from envy and strife. But so it was then, and so it is now, as impossible as it may seem. We must not think for a moment that these things died with the apostles. Some people seem to be so constituted that they thrive on strife, and grow lean on peace. I know those who teach things I am as sure they do not believe, as I am they are wrong, just because they feel envious of some other teacher. They put forth every effort at their commnad to draw away "disciples after them" (Acts 20:30). They will always give themselves away finally by accusing others of wanting to be leadrs when that is their sole object in teaching perverse things. The person who sticks to the "old paths" (Jer. 6:16), humbly acknowledges that others walked in these paths before he was born, therefore cannot be accused of wanting to be simply a leader of men. He knows others are preaching and teaching the same grand truths, and rejoice in this fact. He knows just what ails the people who go off and teach strange doctrines.

But think of the fearfulness of their position. Paul does not seem to think it neccessary to tell us what their end shall be, neither does he offer any remedy, which I think proves he considered their case hopeless. How would you proceed to convince an insincere person? It is simply a waste of time to talk to them, and yet with their spirit of contention and all their insincerity, they are always able to stir up a lot of trouble. Paul said they thought they would "add affliction" to his bonds. There is always someone who is the object of their envy. Then Paul says, "Knowing I am set for the defense of the gospel." Did you ever notice such people always put the contenders for truth on the defensive, and why not? Just as soon as these perverters start in, the lover of truth begins his defense. So we not only have to preach the gospel, but just as earnestly defend it. And these invasions come from the inside as well as the outside. It does not matter so much when we have to defend the truth against the outside world, but when we are compelled to defend it against these insincere inside contenders, it becomes doubly hard. Insincere contenders, as a rule, have two methods they work by, and we find them in the Scripture.

First, they try to work upon some one of influence, thinking the people look at it just as in Christ's time: "Have any of the rulers believed on him?" A fight has to be made to prevent this, and if you succeed, you have incurred the everlasting enmity of the insincere teachers. Then they begin a personal attack, just as they did in the case of Paul. Of course if a person was insincere, and taught a thing just for selfish purposes, and you get in the way and block this purpose, that the truth may shine, they will stoop to anything in their personal attacks, and the more they see their object failing the more bitter their attacks. You see this in the life of Christ and his apostles.

Secondly, they nearly always pose as great reformers: they pretend great sincerity; and this is generally pretty catchy. The person who is able to look beneath the long, sober face and read the truth, is again the object of their hatred. Jesus could see the insincerity beneath the long sober face of the pharisees, and could tell him of his hypocricy. But what a fierce world of vituperation he brought upon himself in so doing! But did this dissuade him? No; it just put upon him the unpleasant task of telling them the truth. But Jesus went on defending the truth regardless of consequences. But how much better if the love of the truth and God's cause had dominated at all times!

Insincere contenders have another method they use quite often: they watch around for those who have a grievance, especially against the defended of the truth that they want out of the way. They think because of this grievance it will be easy to get them to side with their adverse views to "get even." Paul had all this to contend with, and it is still extant. As I have said, there is little use of trying to dissuade this class of people: the only thing is to do as Jesus and the apostles did, warn the brethren against them. If love for God, truth and each other was in the church, just as taught in the scriptures, how different it would be! But no: if a brother gets in the way, destroy him, just as they did Jesus and the apostles! No thought of forgiveness! Oh that I may be filled with the love Jesus manifested when he said to the woman taken in adultery, "Neither do I condemn thee: go and sin no more;" and the love that prompted him to say to the mob, "Father, forgive them: they know not what they do"—the love that filled the expiring heart of Stephen which prompted him to say, "Lay not this sin to their charge." Such love would never fail our brethren

As I said, these people Paul has told us about, always assume a sanctified look, are extremely righteous in their own eyes. In Prov. 7:16, Solomon says, "Be not overmuch righteous, neither make thyself overwise: why shouldest thou destroy thyself?" It has been my sad lot to meet a few of these overrighteous people, and they have always failed in the end—just as Solomon cautions. Paul had the same class in mind when he said: "He that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." There is most always an object and an insincerity behind this over righteousness. Jesus was not fooled by it, neither was Paul. A sister wrote me once and said she felt miserable because she could not feel as though she was as good as she should be, said she was trying and praying about the matter. I wrote her that was her security. Feeling her own weakness prompted her to greater efforts. On the other hand, if she ever reached the point she seemed to think she ought, of being secure and safe, she was in great danger. No, it is not every one who says, "Lord, Lord," that will be sure of the kingdom. You take the brothers and sisters who plod along day after day, making no great show of righteousness, but always doing what comes to their hand calmly and in the sweet spirit of peace, feeling always their own weakness. Our strength must be in God.

Paul teaches us that even with these insincere contenders there is a silver lining: the gospel becomes known through it, so it is not without its reward. They got Paul bound, but not the truth; so their contention caused Paul to spread the truth. May we soon triumph in the truth! No one ever yet contended for the truth unqualifiedly that escaped persecution. But this does not deter the earnest child of God. Let us conclude with Paul's words in this Philippian letter, 1:6-11: "Being confident of this very thing, that he that hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. Even as it is meet for me to think this of you all, because I have you in my heart, inasmuch as both in my bonds and the defense and confirmation of the gospel, ye all are partakers of my grace. For God is my record how greatly I long after you all in the bonds of Jesus Christ. And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that ye may approve the things that are excellent, that ye may be sincere and without offence till the day of Christ; being filled with the fruits of righteousness which are by Jesus Christ unto the praise and glory of God."

CHRISTIAN DUTIES

The question arises, are we who profess to be followers of our Lord and Savior, following the example of the apostles and the disciples of their day? If we are, all will be well; if not, why not? In the second and third chapters of Revelations we find a description of seven churches; all of them having different traits of character, some good, and commendable; but many of them objectionable; some extremely bad. Apparently the churches of the present day are in much the same condition, (perhaps worse). So it will be well for us to look around us, and see if we are doing our duty. Are we of the class that is commended, or the ones condemned? Our time here is short; even if our Lord does not come in our day. The longest life here is but a speck in comparison to eternity. It is well worth while for us to spend all our time as the apostles did, that they might obtain the "crown of life," which is promised to those who continue faithful to the end. Rev. 3:11-12: "Behold I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy thy crown. He that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God—and I will write upon him my new name."

We are commanded to "hold fast" what we have received, "that no man take our crown." How is this to be done? Let Paul answer; 2 Tim. 4:7,8, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only: but unto all them also that love his appearing." Paul was very confident about his salvation. He knew that he had "fought the good fight;" he had accomplished the work given him to do; and will receive his reward when the trump shall call the righteous dead to meet the Lord in the air, in the immortal state. "And so shall we be ever with the Lord. Comfort one another with these words." If we have the same assurance that Paul had, all will be well.

But there is another class mentioned, a different reward awaits them. Rev. 3:15,16: "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would that thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." This condition apparently represents the state that some of the churches are in at the present time: "lukewarm," no life in them, "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." The pleasures of this life, moneymaking and other things, have more attractions for them than the "reward that is laid up for the righteous;" Now in conclusion, let each person examine himself; and see if he is in the faith. Are we anxious to see "the kingdom come?" If we are, all will be well, if we are "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." When the Nobleman shall return from the far country, he will reward all that are found faithful. Let us all then be up and doing.

A proposal of the Salvation army to bring 5000 widows from England to Canada after the war is over is being strenuously objected to by Canadian women, who say that it is unfair and impracticable. The main object in bringing them over is to relieve England of the surplus female population and also afford the women opportunities to make new homes where the advantages are better.

EDITORIAL

As the month of January contains five Tuesdays this will be the last paper issued this month, so will readers please bear in mind that there will be no paper next week.

Dating Jan. 8th Brother J. F. Wagoner writes that he is slowly improving in health, and is now able to be up most of the time. He promises to write again soon.

Sister H. E. Russell writes: "A was glad to see the three electrotypes in a recent Restitution, but sorry that Sister Wince was not among the number; for I am sure all the readers of The Restitution wish to see the face of the person we have so long known through the paper, but have never seen, and who has been such an inspiring worker for the Linograph. I think we must have it, don't you? I do not know the expense, but I am willing to pay whatever it may be." Sister Russell feels about this matter like all the brethren and sisters do. And the next day after receiving Sister Russell's letter we received a photograph of Sister Wince. In due time we shall now be able to give our expectant readers a likeness of our highly esteemed and much loved Sister Wince.

COMMUNICATIONS

Our dear Brother Huggins:

This is from one of the "Avery Bunch" as we are called; and you will find enclosed a money order for three dollars: two dollars for the Linotype Fund, and one dollar for the Helping Fund. We watch for The Restitution each week as for a very welcome visitor, and if it fails to put in an appearance, we immediately turn to our leader and helpful teacher, Brother Hammond, who was the cause of our hearing and believing the truth, by enlisting our dear evangelist's Brother Adams' help. We are so happy in our newly found and proven hope, the only cloud being the moving from our midst of some of our "bunch." We try to console ourselves with the thought that by our spreading, the truth spreads also, so giving a "silver lining" to our cloud, and though only two or three are left, our "guide" declares "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." May the "Bride of Christ" soon be adorned for her returning Bridegroom.

A brother and sister in the truth,
M. E. Bray and Wife

Editor of The Restitution:

Please find enclosed two years subscription for The Restitution, as I see that you are still short of money for the Linograph and other necessary expenses. Now if each one of us would send in our new subscription for The Restitution we would soon raise the $175.87, which we are short of. I see there as only been $2098.55 donated, and the expenditures have been $2274.42. So let us not start this new year with a debt over the church paper that has such good edifying pieces and gives us so much biblical knowledge on the coming of the Lord and the prophecies of the European war in connection with those grand and glorious truths that are very important for us all to know. As we never hear the other churches say anything about this war as having any connection with the coming of the Savior. If there is a time for his return it is now, to execute justice and judgment in the earth and stop many lives from being lost, and to teach more perfectly the way of life eternal. What a glorious day when the law will go forth from the Holy Hill of Zion, with Christ as king over all the earth! There the eyes of the faithful, their Savior behold in that beautiful city of gold. Now brethren let us try to do more each day for the Master. Let us be workers or doers of the word, as well as hearers. We will never lose anything by giving unto the cause of Christ. I have ever found it a great pleasure and much knowledged gained by reading The Restitution, and comparing it with God's word. Let us ever walk in the straight and narrow way that leadeth unto life eternal is my prayer.

Your sister in Christ, E. R. Gates.

It's how you think that leads to what you think.

UNITY OF THE SPIRIT

Dear Brothers and Sisters of The Restitution:

It has been a long time since I wrote to you; nevertheless my heart yearns for you all. As I sat thinking this afternoon, that wonderful verse, 2 Pet. 3:11,12, came to my mind: "Seeing that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for, and hastening unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat?" Brothers and sisters, are we fully awake to the dangers lying around us? Are we awake to our responsibility to each other, and to God? Do we, as Paul exhorts us, "walk worthy of God, who hath called us to his kingdom and glory?" 1 Thess. 2:11,12. "called to be saints;" called to be sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty; called to be co-rulers with Christ, to sit with him on his throne, to partake of the life which is life indeed! No wonder, dear ones, that Peter breaks out as he did in our verse, "What manner of persons ought we to be?" We must put away all evil speaking, bitterness, wrath, anger and malice; we must be, as Paul tells us, kindly affectionate one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us. Let us learn to be forbearing one with another, keeping the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. It is an awful thought to feel that we have broken this unity, and unless we repent and do all in our power to restore it, our candlestick will surely be removed out of its place, and we may write "Ichabod" over our door. Fearful thought! On the other hand, if we are striving to do our best, to promote harmony, to love our brothers and sisters, in the full sense of the word, what joy is ours! Will there not be a song in our heart all the day long? Oh! brothers and sisters, let us one and all work to this end, so that when the year 1917 closes (if the Master tarries), we may have a larger balance to our account in the bank of heaven than ever before. What do trials, small or great, matter to us? They should only make us stronger to do our duty in the face of all obstacles. Our hearts may often be saddened by the false and malicious accusations of others; but what matters it? We must leave them to him who has said, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay." "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." So brothers and sisters, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake" (Matt. 5:11). Then Christ continues with the grand words of the next verse: "Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." So dear ones, I will close with those comforting words from Paul in Rom. 8:38,39, verses: "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor heights, nor depths, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Yours in Christ, Sister Cowell Hogarth.

CONCERNING THE MILLENNIUM

Lincoln, Neb., Dec. 11.—To the Editor of the World-Herald: I wish to comment on the article in the Public Pulse of Dec. 11 concerning the millennium.

Since 100 A. D. prophets have foretold the end of the world. The world still exists and will continue to exist long after the prophets that foretell the ways of Providence decides they know nothing about divine guidance. The writer of the article referred to cited Scripture and applied the prophecies therein to conditions today.

These same conditions, viz., selfishness, greed, disrespect, vanity, have always existed. As long as we call a holdup on the street "robbery" and getting your money by holding up the prices of the foodstuffs of a nation "business," we may expect selfishness and greed. As long as we turn men loose on the natural products and resources of our nation we may expect the same conditions to exist as if we turned a herd of swine loose in a feed yard, the strong and cunning get the pickings and the weak and unprotected the leavings. As long as we support kings and aristocracies that plunge nations into war we may expect the sword, pestilence and famine. As long as we support a class of millionaires whose money compels us to work and pay dividends, we may expect a nation of industrial slaves. As long as we permit land to be bought for speculation and profit we may expect rented houses and destruction of home life.

What we need is not prophecy and fear but education. Education that teaches us to cast an intelligent ballot is most needed. With intelligence in our heads and the ballot in our hands we can bring about the millennium ourselves. Away with your prophecies, dogmas and creeds. What injustice the world suffers has been done by men, whatever good there is to be accomplished, mankind will have to accomplish it.—Jesse Kinder.

Comments by Brother J. E. Hammond

The above criticism was written in response to another article, which would take up too much space to insert here, setting forth that the conditions in which we now live were foretold by the prophets, and that would culminate in the return of Christ to establish justice and order on earth. The answer given above so truly represents the sentiment we find about us on every side, that we can of a truth say, "This prophecy is fulfilled before our eyes this day." Men are trusting in their own strength and say in their hearts: "The Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil" (Zephaniah 1:12). The same spirit of unbelief is in the world today that existed when Christ was on earth. There seems but little difference between the nominal Christian world and those making no profession. The first denounce the mission of Jesus, the promised stone cut out of the mountain without hands to bring about the restitution of all things. They have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof. The latter deny the power of God, but do not blaspheme his name through a pretense to godliness. How much stress do we find today laid on God's prophetic word? In heart and deed the world proclaims, "Away with prophecy, dogma and creed." In contrast to this we are warned in 1 Peter 1:19: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise." When Pilate pleaded with Christ's accusers that he found no fault in him, they cried, "Away with him; crucify him." The means chosen by God from the foundation of the world to bring about the millennium is today lost sight of, and mortal man is striving through his own strength to establish righteousness in the earth. All the world seems to feel the urgent need of a universal government or kingdom. The God of Israel is still in control, and will manifest peace and good will among mankind in due time. Let us put our trust in him.

Lesson XIX

Subject, The Providence of God

Memory Text

"The Lord is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works" (Psa. 145:9).

1. "The eyes of all wait upon thee, thou givest them their meat in due season" (Psa. 145:15)
2. "Thou openest thine hand and satisfiest the desire of every living thing" (Psa. 145:9).
3. "Who provideth for the raven his food" (Job 38:41).
4. "He giveth to the beast his food: and to the young ravens which cry" (Psa. 147:9).
5. "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father" (Matt. 10:29).
6. "What is man, that thou art mindful of him, or of the son of man that thou visitest him" (Psa. 3:4)?
7. "That you may be the children of your Father who is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust" (Matt. 5:45).
8. "But as for you, ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive" (Gen. 50:20)
9. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose" (Rom. 8:28).
10. "Blessed be the name of God forever and ever; for wisdom and might are his: and he changeth the times and seasons; he removeth kings and setteth up kings" (Dan. 8:20).
11. 'I form the light and create darkness; I make peace and create evil; I, the Lord, do all these things" (Isa. 45:7).

Practical Truths

God's care is over all living creatures. His especial care is exercised toward men who fear and serve him; yet he cares for even the evil and unthankful. He brings good out of evil, and overrules the affairs of the nations in such a way as to accomplish his purpose. Prayer, faith and love are conditions upon our part through which we can commune with and receive his especial favor.

Notes on the Lesson

Providence.—Foresight; timely care; the act of providing or preparing for future use or application.

1. The Eyes of All Wait upon Thee.—A beautiful figure in which all creatures are spoken of as intelligent and constantly looking to God to supply their every want.

2. Openest Thine Hand.—Exerts his power—supplies their wants with a generous hand.

3. Raven.—A bird of a black color, allied to the crow, but larger; the Corvus corax.

5. Sparrows.—A small passerine bird having a conical bill and feeding on insects and seeds; several species. God is said to care even for the sparrow, whose value was in the time of our Savior stated to be only one-half farthing or about seven mills.

6. Man.—The highest type of life upon earth, yet how frail, how insignificant when compared with God's vast creation; yet God cares for him too. God is especially mindful of man because he made man to have dominion over the work of his hands.

7. Just and Unjust.—Those who are upright, honest and true, and those who are not.

8. Thought Evil.—Intended evil. A remarkable instance of God's wisdom in over-ruling evil for good.

9. His Purpose.—God's purpose is for good: and he will see that it is carried out.

11. Evil.—While God is the author of evil he is not the author of sin. We should make a distinction between evil and sin. Evil is defined as calamity, harm, suffering. Sickness or misfortune are evils but not sin. Evil may be a punishment or penalty for sin, but is not the sin itself.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. God's Goodness.—What is the meaning of the word "God?" What is meant by the providence of God? How extensive is his goodness?

2. God's Foresight and Care.—What in our lesson shows God's foresight? Where is his care shown for all creatures? How does God give the beasts their food? (4). Does God care and provide for the birds? (5). Does God care for man? Does he provide for bad men? Does God exercise special care over the righteous (Psa. 37:25; 34:7, 8)? Do you believe in special providences? Do you believe that God hears and answers prayer?

3. Good Brought out of Evil.—To whom do all things work for good? (9). Do not some things seem to work against them? Should God's children fret under what appears to be against them? Does God bring good out of evil? Give an instance. (8). Are there other instances in the Bible where God has brought good out of evil?

4. Man's Responsibility.—Is man under any obligations to God for the benefits which he receives from God? Are God's people under special obligations, for special care and favors? If God has done so much for us have we done our duty toward him? Read Prov. 3:9,10, and tell the meaning. Do you believe God will specially bless the person who contributes of his means to God's work? What is God's purpose as referred to in our lesson? (9). What is God's providence with reference to the governments of the world? (10). Does God ever make war? Is it right to fight? Does God make peace (Psa. 46:9)? Will there ever be universal peace? Where in the Bible are we taught to express gratitude for blessings received (Psa. 136:1,2)? Where are we told that every good gift comes from God (Jas. 1:17)? Where are we taught to be thankful (Eph. 5:20)?

DON'T FIND FAULT WITH OUR PAPER

By Auntie Wince

Don't find fault with our paper dear ones; we have dedicated it to God and to his service now, and it is his paper. If we find fault with it, we are finding fault with him; for Editor, Manager and Writers are, as it were, his "anointed ones," and he says: "Touch not my anointed, and do my prophets no harm."

I have been guilty of this sin in the past, but I shall try, God helping me, to be so no more. Several years ago an incident came to my notice that made me see what infinite mischief we can do by fault finding. A deacon in a certain church became dissatisfied with his pastor, because the results of his preaching were not what he thought they ought to be. He worked against the poor minister until he was driven to another field by a people who were dearer to his heart than his own life. The anguish of heart resulting from such action was too great; he could not stand up under it, and was stricken with brain-fever.

In his delirium, he kept repeating the words of the text I have quoted, "Touch not mine annointed and do my prophets no harm." The deacon heard of his ex-pastor's illness, and touched by remorse for what he had done went to see him. The pastor's wife met him at the door: "You cannot come in," she said; "you cannot see him, for this is all your work, you have broken his heart and he is going to die. He was doing the best he could with an eye single to God's glory, but instead of helping him, holding up his hands, praying for him, you drove him away. May God forgive the great sin of 'touching with harmful hands a servant of the Lord.'

In vain the deacon pleaded; in vain he told of his sorrow and remorse, he did not get in. Never to his dying day did he forget the lesson, never did he fail to quote the words, "Touch not," and to tell their story when any one came to him proposing to oust a minister.

I am trying to make the text my talisman. Instead of finding fault, and stopping my paper, I am going to do all I can to make it a blessing to its readers. This is what God asks of me, "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord." I see with clearer vision now than I did a short time ago, and with God's help, I shall not balk and in so doing, do irreparable harm to the cause of my Lord. I am saying these things to help the dear ones to do right, to think of others, to bless others.

I do not think any of us are finding fault now: we are too busy in service, too anxiously looking at the signs that betoken the near approach of our king, too much given to prayer and praise for cherishing wrong thoughts. May we be so kept through all our coming days.

TENACITY OF PURPOSE

"Tenacity of purpose is the quality of soul which enables you to hang on to the thing you have begun until you have finished it," says a recent writer, speaking of the burdens, the trials and the desperate fights with the red men in early pioneer days.

Our fathers crossed the sea to build a new nation in a new world. They had to contend not only with the wild beasts and the savage inhabitants of the wilderness, but also with their own kindred left behind them in the bonnie British Isles. But they had counted the cost; they would "resist until the last notch," for were they not building for God? We too are building for him, what we have begun we must finish. As the little lad said of his teacher, "we dare not give up." We started out determined to win the Linotype. The more we were opposed the more determined we became. Only cowards give up in the midst of a fight. How could we, when so much depends on our holding on to the end? Never so could the Land of Canaan be reached and everlasting life be won.

We imperil our own future and the future of we know not how many of our fellows when for some foolish whim, me fall out of the work. And for nothing am I more thankful than for this, that our little band have held tenaciously to their purpose to secure the Linotype. All have pulled together. Not one dear loyal soldier has wanted to be counted out.

And that tenacity of purpose has had its reward. We have had a joyful Harvest Home and a still more joyful Thanksgiving. We began bringing our offerings to the Lord the first of last May; Nov. 30th brought the song of victory (God ordered), with the Linotype itself, the extra type magazine for 2nd size type, and sundry tools paid for!

O but our God is good; we can safely trust in him. And every step of the way has been a step of trust. We knew that we were walking with him: we know it more than ever now.

November was the seventh month of our giving. To the Israelites of old the seventh month of their year, was a month of blowing of trumpets, of holy convocations, of making of extra offerings, of days of abstaining from servile work, and of atonement and blessing. Has not our November been to us something like their seventh month? It has seemed so to me, just as if trumpets ought to be blown and still larger offerings be brought. With Israel, while true to God, there was continual giving, continual praise, not a day went by without an offering be laid upon the altar of the Lord, looking forward to the coming advent of their Messiah. He has come, and we look back to him, giving with gladness and in hope that David's prayer will soon come true and all people praise the Lord, for "Then shall the earth yield her increase, and God, even our own God shall bless us. God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear him."

A little longer yet, and a few more gifts, and we shall have the electric motor, the type for title use, the type metal, the smelting pot, the freight charges, cartage, electric wiring, gas fitting and expense of installing the Linotype in its neat and comfortable little office, all made up, please God, and this, through his mercy, even before these lines reach the eyes of my beloved brothers and sisters who have so faithfully held up my hands by giving their gifts, by their letters and by their prayers. May God bless them every one.

SPIRIT OF TRUTH

Editor Buffalo Express:—Spirit beings can be present with us without us seeing them (John 3:6-8; Psa. 34:7). The word "spirit" in the Old Testament is the translation of the Hebrew word "ruach." The word "spirit" in the New Testament comes from the Greek word "pneuma." The primary significance or root-meaning is "an invisible power." "Ruach" in the Old Testament is translated "blast" four times, "breath" 28 times, "mind" six times, "smell" eight times, "wind" and "windy" 91 times. "Pneuma" in the New Testament is translated (besides ghost and spirit) "life," "spiritual" and "wind." So we understand the Holy Spirit to mean God's power exercised according to lines of justice and love. Hence, always a holy power. This power may be an energy of life, a physically creative power, or a power of thought, creating and inspiring thoughts and words, or a quickening of life-giving power, as it was manifested in the resurrection of our Lord and will again be manifested in the resurrection of the church, his body. The begetting or transforming power or influence of the knowledge of the truth is the spirit of the truth working in us to will and to do God's good pleasure. All who come under the influence of the spirit or disposition of the truth are properly described as begotten of the truth to newness of life (James 1:18; John 17:17). For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God (Rom. 8:1). "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is (1 John 3:2).

The Father draws sinners to Christ through a general enlightenment of the mind, a conviction of sin, and of their need of a redeemer. Those who accept Christ as their Savior and advocate and come to the point of full consecration to God, through Christ, are said to be begoten of God, begotten by the word of truth, begotten by the spirit of God to newness of life. That is to say, having come into harmony with divine conditions and regulations, God accepts this consecrated attitude as the proper one and passing by or covering the weakness of the flesh with the robe of Christ, righteousness, justification by faith. He accepts as "new creatures in Christ Jesus" those who desire to be guided by his spirit into all truth and to be led by that holy disposition or spirit into full obedience to the extent of self-sacrifice, even unto death. Such are said to have received "the spirit of adoption," because from henceforth God, through Christ, enters into a special covenant with them as sons. And the Father, through the captain of their salvation, guarantees to such that if they abide in the spirit of truth, he will cause that all the affairs and incidents of life shall work together for good to them.—Alex. R. Manson.

A BRIGHT PAGE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Tidbits of Pleasant and Useful Information

Gathered from Everywhere

The man who does not profit from a mistake does not know he made one.

Milly—Ninty-nine women in a hundred are naturally generous.

Billy—Yes, where one woman will keep a secret ninty-nine will give it away.

"Do you believe in the saying that language is used for the concealment of thought?"

"No," replied Miss Cayenne; "in much of the language you hear, you haven't even the comforting suspicion that there may be a thought in hiding."—Washington Star.

The most potent and beneficent forces are stillest. The strength of a sentence is not in its adjectives, but in its verbs and nouns; and the strength of men and of nations is in their calm, sane, meditative moments. In a time of noise and hurry and materialism like ours, the gospel of the still small voice is always seasonable.

The professor was explaining to his class of young women the theory of the complete renewal of the body every seven years.

"Thus, Miss Adams," he said to a very pretty young woman, "in seven years you will no longer be Miss Adams."

The young lady cast down her eyes demurely as she replied:

"Well, I sincerely hope that I shall not."

The Open Grave

The truth of the resurrection has been forcibly ilustrated by the following incident:

In the city of Hanover, Germany, is a grave known as "The Open Grave." It is that of a woman, an infidel German princes, who died over one hundred years ago, and who, on her death-bed, gave orders that her grave should be covered with a great marble slab, weighing perhaps a ton, surmounting solid block of stone firmly bound together with claps of iron, with this inscription placed on the lowermost stone of the tomb:

This Grave Purchased for Eternity,
Must Never be Opened

But no human device can thwart the plans of God, or hinder the working of life from him. It happened that a birch tree seed was buried with the princes. Soon it began to sprout. Its tiny shoot, soft and pliable at first, found its way up through the ponderous stones of the massive masonry. Slowly and imperceptibly, but with irresistible power, it grew until at last it burst the iron bands asunder, and opened this never to be opened grave, leaving not a single stone in its original position. What a rebuke to infidelity; and what a mute but striking promise that, ere long, in God's own time graves shall be opened! —Sel. by Sister Lula V. Pickering.

Placing Responsibility

Mrs. Egerton always impressed upon her little daughter Bessie that when she was naughty it was Satan who made her so. One day Bessie was particularly naughty, and finally there was considerable disturbance in the nursery, with much stamping of tiny feet and derangement of the furniture. Mrs. Egerton hastened to learn the cause of the noise.

"Why, Bessie," cried the mother, "what does this mean?"

"O," replied Bessie, "I s'pose it's your old friend Satan again!"

Ten Commandments for Girls

The following "Ten commandments" were recently given out by Rev. A. W. Williver, pastor of a Jersey City, N. J., church:

1. Thou shalt not delude thy mother.
2. Thou shalt not surrender thy modesty for the favor of unprincipled men.
3. Thou shalt not run wild and fall into the whirlpool of fashion and plunge thy famliy folk into the hopper of the nerve grinding mill.
4. Thou shalt not allow the limber tongue of the flatterer to bewilder thy head and master thy strength.
5. Thou shalt not tattle.
6. Thou shalt not let frivolity of speech or manner unclothe thee of thy attractiveness and personal charm.
7. Thou shalt not think more of the clothing of thy feet than the culture of thy head.
8. Thou shalt not smoke; thou shalt not tamper with the liquor cup.
9. Thou shalt not be slothful while others in the home toil.
10. Thou shalt find real happiness in truthfulness, hopefulness, joyfulness, peacefulness and in serving others in the spirit of the Great Master.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 69 CLEVELAND, O. FEBRUARY 6, 1917 NUMBER 5

SATIRE

By Mrs. Hattie Nett

I've heard them preach and sing and pray,
Exhort and testify,
Declare men go to heaven or hell,
The very day they die.

Now this would be all right to me,
If I could find the text,
But as I can't, I seem to be
Most terribly perplexed.

For instance, Cain his brother slew;
Of course he went to hell;
He's burning, pleading, frying still,
And yet, "He doeth all things well."

The judgment day is rolling on,
The judge will soon appear,
Who knows but some now burning there,
Might possibly come clear?

And some who took their flight to heaven,
And never yet been tried,
May find there's been a sad mistake,
And won't be satisfied.

If all the good have gone to heaven,
Have gone from this dark shore,
Here is a verse that bothers me worse, (1)
Than I ever was before.

I've heard them say that dead men know
Much more than they that live,
This bothers me, because you see,
The text they did not give.

And when I tried to find it,
I got mixed up worse and worse.
I hardly know just what to do;
I believe I have found the verse (2).

Such a text as this some do not mind,
But pass it lightly by,
But I am very much inclined,
To know the reason why.

Some say they walk the golden streets,
And praise the Lord up there,
I guess I've found the very text (3),
I am glad, I do declare!

I fear they will awake some day,
Be filled with sad surprise,
Find they have reaped iniquity,
And eaten the fruits of lies.

Yes, death is the gate to endless joy,
The only way to heaven;
To prove it I will quote
The text that Paul has given (4).

PASTOR RUSSELL LOCATED AT LAST

Mrs. Wheeler, in Reply to Our Editorial Admits that Russellites Believe in Both the Immortality of the Soul and going to "Heaven Itself" at Death!

Mr. R. G. Huggins, Dear Sir:

In response to your request, dated Jan. 2nd, for "a plain frank answer" as to "who and what this Russell is who went to meet the Lord in the air," am pleased to offer the following.

However, before continuing the discussion, would suggest that we both follow the scriptural injunction to "reason together" (Isa. 1:18); that we keep in mind "if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his" (Rom. 8:9); and "though we have all knowledge and understand all mysteries and have not charity (love), we are nothing" (1 Cor. 13:2).

Now then, as to Pastor Russell, taking your comments in order:

1. Russell died in Texas.

What does it mean to die? If the union of the breath of life and a body produces a living, sentient being (earthy, if the body be earthy; heavenly, if the body be heavenly), what does their separation mean but death or non existence (Gen. 2:7)? Thus, Pastor Russell, an earthly being, but, begotten of God's Holy Spirit, ceased to breathe in Texas. Therefore, as a human being, he ceased to exist.

2. He is dead.

He no longer has an earthy body as a vehicle for his ego, individuality.

3. He is buried in Pa.

The earthy body of Pastor Russell is buried in Pa.

4. His body is still in the grave in Pa. and is fast decomposing into corruption and dust.

Agreed! His earthy body (Gen. 3:19).

5. He has no immortal soul or spirit for a scape goat.

1 Cor. 15:36-38, Diaglott rendering. Since you use the present tense, I must disagree. He did not have an immortal soul while here on earth, any more than a child is born when it is only in embryo. He had carried out Paul's instructions in Rom. 12:1-3. According to 1 Pet. 1:3,4 and 1 John 15-18, he was, even while on earth, begotten to the divine nature. He now is an immortal soul; his former ego or individuality having been clothed with a divine body (2 Cor.5:1,2; 1 Cor. 15:52-54).

6. He has been raised from the dead (but his body is rotting in a grave in Pa).

Agree with parenthetical statement, but not your first. He was changed, but not raised. How could he be raised unless he had been in the sleep of death (Rev. 14:13; 1 Thess. 4:17,18; Dan. 12:12)? According to Bible chronology, since 1878, the saints are changed from human to divine nature at moment of death (1 Cor. 15:51).

7. He has been instantly changed from a human to a divine being.

Agreed! But please leave out your negatives in the next three clauses, and, according to the Scriptures. "The corruptible" (Pastor Russell as an earthy being) has "put on incorruptibility;" "the mortal" (Pastor Russell as a human being) has "put on immortality;" and he is an immortal soul, hence, a divine being (1 Cor. 15:49 57). Pardon the comment, but there is just as much difference in being a soul, or having a soul, as there is in being a cow, or having a cow.

8. He has gone to meet the Lord in the air.

Exactly (1 Thess. 4:17)! What is meant by air? In Scripture symbology, it refers to power, government, especially spiritual (Eph. 2:2). No doubt, in present case, it also refers to atmosphere surrounding our earth.

And what is our Lord doing there? Receiving his body members, one by one as they experience their change: the saints who slept having all been raised previous to the change of those living (1 Thess. 4:15-17). He is also shaping and over-ruling the affairs of men preparatory to the establishment of his kingdom (Dan. 2:44; Luke 19:11-15).

But, you say, what about "the shout, the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God?" Well, we believe these are all sounding now, and have been since the beginning of our Lord's "parousia" in 1874. That the trump was typified by the Jubilee trumpet, and will continue to sound till the close of millennial age. You don't believe them to be literal, do you? If so, please tell us from just what location the sounds will emanate in order to be heard in both Eastern and Western Hemispheres; and, if the other six were audible, who can testify as to having heard them? Also just where our Lord could make his descent (if a visible one) so as to be seen by all the inhabitants of the earth? Did not Jesus say before his crucifixion "Yet a little while and the world seeth me no more" (John 14:19)? Which do you prefer to take literally, a plain statement like this by our Lord, or symbolical passages which should be interpreted to harmonize with the Master's words? Why would the world see him no more? Because his existence as a human being was soon to end. "A body hast thou prepared me" (for the suffering of death) (Heb. 10:5; Luke 22:19).

If our Lord's resurrection body is the one that was crucified and laid in Joseph's tomb, then he has taken back the price of the world's redemption, and we are lost, still under the sentence of actual death, destruction. Thank God! The scriptures do not so teach! But rather that "for the joy (of redeeming the world; of obedience to the Father; of sharing the divine nature), that was set before him, he endured the cross (death as a malefactor), despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God" (Heb. 12:2; Phil. 2:5-11).

Again, read our Savior's words in John 17:5: "O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Do you think his prayer was not answered? See John 11:42.

Would it be just for Jehovah to even ask his only begotten Son, through whom the angels, men and earth were created, to divest himself of a glorious spiritual existence, humble himself to an estate lower than angels, suffer death as the price of the world's redemption, and then instead of giving him a divine body at his resurrection (as promised), to compel him to use that scarred earthly one throughout all the ages of eternity (John 1:1; Rev. 3:14; Col. 1:15; John 6:62; John 6:35,51; John 8:58)?

Another cause of our misunderstanding seems to be our interpretation of the words "immortal," "incorruptible" and "eternal." Immortality is a condition in which death is an impossibility, likewise incorruptibility: but eternal simply means continuous, unending. All the angels, and perfected mankind will have eternal life, but only the Father, Son and his bride will ever enjoy immortality, an attribute of the divine nature only (John 5:26; 1 Tim. 6:16; 1 John 3:2; 2 Pet. 1:4).

Hence, if Paul urges the church class to seek for immortality (Rom. 2:7), and our Lord himself said, "I go to prepare a place for you . . . . . . I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also (John 14:2,3), how can this signify an existence anywhere but in heaven itself? And this is what we understand the Scriptures to teach, viz., both a heavenly and earthly phaze to his glorious kingdom. Does not the promise to Abraham that his seed should be "as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the seashore" (Gen. 22:17), bear out this thought?

9. Conclusion, etc. . . . .

As to translating your "conclusion into good English," I should call it "a printers pie." But what you are doing with his pie, I don't know.

Now, Brother Huggins, if I have said anything unkind, please charge it to the fact that I sometimes send my thoughts by freight, not purposely of course I assure you that my chief desire is to honor and glorify the great God of the Universe and his Son, our now glorified Lord and head. If the interpretation of Scriptures contained herein is not correct, would be pleased to have the criticisms of both yourself and readers.

May the Scripture which says, "But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day" (Prov. 4:18), be fulfilled to us both!

In the Name of our Incoming King,

Mrs. W. A. Wheeler.

Reply by Brother George B. Alldridge

Is the late "Pastor" Russell now in heaven? According to the letter of Mrs. W. A. Wheeler, now lying before me, he is!! "But what saith the Scriptures?" "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them" (Isa. 8:20).

In dealing with error, life is too short to deal in platitudes or generalities; or to waste time "Beating about the bush." The first question asked is, "What does it mean to die?" May I ask what dies? The Scripture says that it is the soul (Ezek. 18:4,20; Isa. 53:12). Now what is the soul? Here is where Russellism first begins to depart from the teaching of the Scriptures. See Mill. Dawn, Vol. 5, pages 320-352; Watch Tower, 1906, page 382; Tract 81. The gist of the teachings in above references is this: God created man out of the ground (Gen. 2:7). He breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. The life principle, or breath of life, operating upon the body or organism produces a third thing, known as the soul. Hence Russell teaches that three elements exist, but are separate and independent of each other: The body, the life and the soul. Nowhere in Scripture does it teach that these elements can exist without the cooperation of all; each is dependent for its existence upon the others.

Please notice the Scriptures read clearly upon this point: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7). Notice sharply: man is a soul. God formed man, or made a soul, of the dust of the ground. Whatever God formed which he calls "man," is a soul. Into this soul now dormant, God breathed the spirit or breath of life. Man or soul became living, or a living soul. If the spirit of life, or breath of life stops, or is withdrawn, the man returns to his original condition, a dead soul. He ceases as an intelligent, sentient being to exist (Eccl. 3:18,20).

Secondly, you say that Mr. Russell is dead. In this we agree.

Thirdly, you admit he is buried.

Fourthly, he is still buried.

Fifthly, he has no immortal soul, or spirit. Still you talk about "ego" or "individuality." This you say, is now clothed with a divine body. You say that in life he was begotten to "the divine nature." What do you mean? The only Scripture you can quote to sustain this is 2 Pet. 1:4. Look up the meaning of the word "nature" (here used) in the original: you will find it refers to the disposition or mind. The same thought is expressed in Rom. 8:9: "Now if any man have not the spirit (or mind) of Christ, he is none of his."

When was Jesus begotten to the divine nature? Probably you will answer, "at his baptism." To this we agree. Now what was Christ's ego or individuality? Was it, as James declared, "of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures" (James 1:18)? Was it a new mind, in conformity to Rom. 12:1,2? or was it a germ placed in the womb of his organism by the holy Spirit, that jumps out at death into another body you call "an heavenly"? When Christ died the Scriptures say he "poured out his soul unto death." If his soul died, and that surely was Christ himself, what did God raise from the dead? Was Peter right when he declared to the rulers of the Jews, that if they wished to know by what means the infirm man had been cured, "By the name of Jesus of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead" (Acts 4:10-12)? Now what was "crucified?" The ego, or the soul? If God raised that which was crucified what did he raise from the dead? What feels pain, the organism or the individuality? Can there be an ego or individuality without an organism? If the peculiarity of the organism makes the ego or individuality, does not the ego or individuality absolutely depend upon the intelligent existence of the body or organism for its existence?

At death what becomes corrupt, the ego or the organism? What does Paul allude to in 1 Cor. 15:53,54, as the corruptible and the incorruptible? If "Pastor" Russell is now in heaven why does Paul exhort us to look to heaven as the place that Jesus will come from to "change our vile body, and fashion it like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:21)? Was Jesus raised from the dead or was he changed? Is your understanding of Christ's glorified body so gross as to still consider it as having the appearance it had as it hung on the cross? Does a diamond, newly dug from the mine, bear any resemblance to the finished diamond as it leaves the lapidary's hands? Does the polished diamond hold any relationship to the rough diamond? Could the one exist without the other? "So also is the resurrection of the dead. It (what? the dead, of course) is sown in corruption: it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body (wake up, Mrs. Wheeler) it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body. And so it is written, The first man Adam was made (not as Russell says "evolved") a living soul, the last Adam a quickening spirit. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterwards that which is spiritual."

Your sophistical reasons about the Lord now being in the air since 1874, does not receive the support of the Scriptures, and does not explain 1 Thess 4:13-18. Your explanation of the trump, etc., is on a par with Mr. Bouket's seven last plagues, that these are the seven volumes of Millennial Dawn! As "Pastor" Russell teaches in vol. 3, pages 39-50, that Dan. 11:36-45 refers to Napoleon, which I presume you heartily endorse; an historical summary of the preceeding sounding of the trumpets would hardly meet with your approval. However, a study of Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and Dr. Thomas' "Eureka," perhaps may enable you to see that others have some light that apparently has been withheld from even "Pastor" Russell. Your hackneyed references to the earthly and to the heavenly phase of the kingdom is worn threadbare, and no where receives the support of the Scripture. Paul knew and taught only of one kingdom. Gal. 5:6-9 makes this clear.

In conclusion, this briefly is the teachings of the Scriptures revealed in the Bible: God has chosen and appointed his Son Jesus, to become the head of a new race of immortal beings, to be evolved from the Adamic mortal race. Hence he is called "The second Adam" the Lord from heaven." The germs of this new life come from an incorruptible seed sown into good and honest hearts, called "the word of the kingdom, the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever," and "which by the gospel is preached unto you" (Matt. 8:19; 1 Pet. 1:23-25). The word of the truth of the gospel, is the seed by which this new race is begotten. Paul said to the Christians of Corinth, "In Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." The apostle was the chosen instrument to sow this seed, or give the knowledge of the gospel among the Gentiles. He made known unto them the "unsearchable riches of Christ," which were contained in the gospel. He was not ashamed to preach "Christ and him crucified," or "the kingdom of God," and to teach those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ. This gospel has a spiritual force in it, and quickens men who are dead in trespasses and sins, when it is received and cherished. It reforms men, and makes them into new creatures in Christ Jesus. They live a new life. "Old things are passed away, and behold, all things are become new" Individuals thus begotten are children of God, and if children, then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. Paul in writing to the Galatians distinctly declares that "Ye are the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ."

Natural or fleshly men become children of God according to the spiritual law of regeneration. The gospel Paul preached involves:

First—Belief of the gospel concerning the kingdom of God, and the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ.

Second—Repentance toward God, thinking with God or ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well.

Third—Immersion in water into Christ,for the remission of sins, or being born of water (Acts 28: 31; 8.12; 26:20; 3:19; 2:38; Luke 24:47; John 3:5).

Fourth—Then a patient continuance in well doing, seeking for glory, honor, and incorruptibility, will secure eternal life and the kingdom of God, by a resurrection from the dead (Rom 2:7; 2 Pet. 1:5-11).

This is the process of evolution revealed only in the Bible, taking a fleshly son of Adam and transforming him into a son of God. Thus God's plan has been made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and brought life and incorruptibility to light through the gospel (2 Tim. 1:10). Beloved, the coming of Christ is the believer's only hope, it is the one hope spoken of by Paul, the hope by which salvation comes; for "unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Every faithful follower of the Lord Jesus is looking and hoping for that promised time to come. It is the desire of every true disciple. It is in all their thoughts. They know that not until the chief shepherd shall appear, can they be delivered from sin and death, and receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away. Hence, to them the coming of Christ is a matter of life and death. He is the resurrection and the life. Eternal life is not theirs now by personal possession. It is hid with Christ in God. It is treasured up in him, and hence with him reserved in heaven until his return, so that it is absolutely necessary for him to come again, that his brethren may receive their promised life. His own words, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me," bear testimony to this; as also do the words of the apostle to the Gentiles: "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

THE GIANTS IN DEATH-GRAPPLE

That it is no longer a war of armies and navies only but of entire peoples is abundantly attested by the European dispatches of the last two or three days.

Each of the great powers is striving, according to its lights and measure of its ability, to organize and develop its resources to the limit of efficiency. It is not only to win the war. It is to avert the incalculable calamity of losing the war. Reading the dispatches and reading between the lines of the dispatches—reading what the rigorous censors have not allowed to pass—it is evident that a Great Fear is abroad in Europe. It is tugging at the heart-strings of the people, it is toppling over cabinets, menacing governments, and inducing a feverish activity on the part of the "high commands."

In Germany the commoner, Zimmerman, has displaced the Prussian aristocrat, Jagow. It is only a little while ago that that great commoner, Hindenburg, was given the high command of all military power, displacing the aristocrat Falkenhayn. The most sweepingly socialistic measure ever enacted by any government has just passed the reichstag, providing for the civil and industrial as well as military conscription of every German subject. The policy is apparently extended to the extent that it is applied to the subjects of conquered states, like Belguim, an action without precedent that has aroused the indignation of neutrals everywhere. There is a revival of submarine activity on a far greater scale than has yet been witnessed, menacing to neutrals still at peace, and there are reports of the construction of immense fleets of super-Zeppelins for use on both land and sea.

In the British Isles there are cabinet crises, widespread popular dissatisfaction and apprehension, and a forecasted early resort to more radically strenuous measures than have yet attended British conduct of the war. Here, too, it is the commoner, Lloyd-George, who is steadily forging to the front and top as the coming dictator of military Britain. "We are in a state of unparalleled gravity," says Admiral Beresford. "The crisis of the war is now. Thousands of tons of food which were waiting to come to England have been diverted to Germany " And Thomas G. Bowles, demanding "new men and new minds" to save the empire says:

"Unless the submarine menace is dealt with we shall be blockaded as well as Germany, and privation and famine prices will ensue. I can see no glimmer of an overture for peace, but if overtures for an honorable peace should come with sufficient guarantees, it will be the duty of the government to examine them. I have arrived at the conclusion, however, that this government is no more able to make peace than it is to make war."

The desperate frame of mind into which Great Britain has fallen is attested by the reported conscription and deportation of Irishmen to work in English munition factories, by the denial of safe conduct to the Austro-Hungarian ambassador to the United States, and most of all by the ruthless manhandling of Greece. For these are acts calculated to convict the British government of insincerity in its professions and to sacrifice neutral sympathy. They would be resorted to only by a power that felt itself driven by a necessity that can know no law. When it comes to a fight for self-preservation, codes and ideals alike become "scraps of paper," and one race is not greatly different from another.

Into Russia we can see only through a glass darkly. But the fragmentary reports that have been allowed to reach us of the speech of M. Purishkevish in addressing the duma are vital with significance. He spoke of the existing "chaos and disorder;" of "mismanagement and corruption" that are "extinguishing the fires of patriotism." He declared that "the present government is doing more than any other element to kill the patriotism of the people, and by want of system is awakening enthusiastic desire for neutrality." The instability of the government, he added, "made agreement between it and public opinion impossible."

This speech, be it noted, was made by a leader of the conservative group who had given little support to the campaign against the present cabinet. And it was a speech delivered in favor of continuing the war, and against the plotting of German influences within the empire for peace. When it is remembered how little news of Russian conditions is allowed to pass the censor the significance of the passing of this speech, and the reports of extreme tension between the government and the duma, can hardly be overestimated.

Even more significant, however, is the announcement to the duma made by the new Russian premier, Trepoff, with the consent of the entente powers, of the fact hitherto kept secret that in the event of victory the allies have agreed that Russia shall be awarded Constantinople and the straits as a prize of war. This is a prize for which, as Trepoff reminded the duma, Russia has been reaching and dreaming for more than a thousand years. It is a prize which Great Britain and Italy especially, and generally speaking all European peoples outside of Russia, have been determined Russia should never gain. That it is now publicly proclaimed the prize shall be granted is significant for two reasons.

It is significant, first, that the entente councils should deem it safe to have it announced. For it is only desperate conditions, and a desperate frame of the public mind, that would ever gain popular consent, in Engdand, Italy and France, to so enormous an extension of the strength and power of the Russian empire.

It is significant, secondly, that it should be deemed necessary for the Russian government to dangle this glittering promise before the eyes of the Russian people. "Russians should know for what they are shedding blood," said Trepoff. It is necessary, at length, to treat them as men and no longer as cattle! Necessary—why? Because "it is the patriotic duty of every one not to undermine the country's power." "Remember," pleaded Trepoff, "that however cruel the enemy's blows may be, the victory is ours. It is surely approaching." In other words, the time was at hand when for the salvation of Russia the government was compelled to hearten and inspire the people with this splendid promise; to purchase, with it, the people's continued loyalty.

But what a promise! Splendid for Russia, unquestionably—the pledge of "a free passage into the Mediterranean." It is a pledge that involves Russian supremacy not alone in Turkey and Constantinople but necessarily in all the Balkan territory that guards the passageway to those treasures. It means Russia supreme from the Arctic to the tropics—a Russia beneath which the Austro-Hungarian empire must crumble—a Russia which, absorbing the Balkans and dominating the Slavic states of Austria, will impinge upon Italy and the Adriatic, upon France—a Russia that will stand like a colossus over all of continental Europe.

What a promise for England and France and Italy to make as the price of Russian support to continue the war! What a price for England to pay as well as for the rest! For to the east of this mighty Pan-Slavic power will lie India; to the south, Egypt. And as the final thongs on Russian limbs will remain only British control of Suez and Gibralter, giving egress from the Mediterranean to the eastern and western worlds. If Russia twenty years ago was a menace to the British empire, what will the new Russia be?

When one half of western Europe is driven to pay so fearful a price for Russian help to crush the other half of western Europe, who can longer haggle or wonder about Greece! It is the giants of the earth that are locked in a death-grapple. There is no longer in their minds a thought of "after the war—what?" The thought is all of the present. No price is too great, no promise too suicidal, no wrong too ruthless, if only THIS war can be won.—Omaha World-Herald. Selected by Brother Adams.

A long steady pull is better than half a dozen spurts.

Out in the yard stood a gleaming snow-man in its own element of ice and frost. But with longing eyes it wished for the bright stove just beyond the window near which it stood. Do we wonder why that snow-man hungered for the stove? After the burning sun had turned it to a pool of water there was found a stove shovel which had been the snow-man's head.

BY WAY OF COMPARISON

S. H. Thomas

It has been said that comparisons are odious, but sometimes they are eloquent teachers of the truth. The condition, expectation, or hope, that suffer not by comparison, but rather shine with greater beams of glory thereby, are they which comfort us and command our confidence.

Kind reader, have you ever carefully compared the Abrahamic promises, with the faiths of mankind? Have you ever marshalled them, one by one, before the throne of your reason, and asked yourself, Which is true? which is noble? and which is most in harmony with your conception of Almighty God whose foreknowledge, justice, mercy, and love, are unlimited, and eternal?

The Mahomedan teaches that when a man dies he is not dead, but merely changed to another condition of life, wherein he is served day and night, throughout eternity, by a number of maidens, more beautiful than the mind of man can conceive, and who will never grow old, or wrinkled, and whose beauty will never fade. Nor will they ever tire, or grow weary in their efforts to anticipate, and supply the slightest desire of the one whom they serve. Such, according to Mahomet, is the condition and occupation of the faithful dead.

The Indian dreams of happy hunting grounds, where game and wild creatures are so numerous that he can slay and slaughter at pleasure and without labor, and where every day is full of bloodshed and feasting.

Orthodox Protestant creeds accept the heathen absurdity that, a dead man is not dead, and have added to the heathen fables a hell, or pit, that is bottomless, and dimensions tremendous, filled with a raging sea of everlasting fire, and huge billows of eternal heat. Into which terrible place devils are constantly plunging precious immortal souls, countless millions of whom are already there, many of them since before the flood, but their term of torment no nearer an end than when it began. God himself is also present in hell, so we are told, and by his divine power making the sensibilities of the damned infinitely more acute, so that their sufferings may be most intense, while the thunders of his wrath shake hell to its foundation. And we are told, that God, in his infinite power, love, mercy and justice, has decreed a perpetual continuation of this horrible triumph of deviltry.

According to these orthodox teachers, the righteous dead are not dead, but in heaven, playing continually on golden harps and singing praises to God, while old mother earth, which gave us birth, is condemned and doomed to sudden and complete destruction; satan having outwitted God, and blighted it with sin, beyond repair.

The Roman Catholic accepts the above absurdities as truth, but insists on adding numerous others. For example, to the orthodox hell, they add a separate compartment called purgatory, the same being a sort of anti-room, where torment exists, but not so severe as in hell proper. All mildly wicked catholics, or those who have failed to secure absolution immediately before death, are sent to this compartment, where they must remain until released, by virtue of prayers by some priest, whose intercession has been purchased by some friend or relative, of him who suffers in purgatory. This feature of the Roman Catholic faith has, from its birth, been a source of rich revenue to the church, as sorrowing friends and relatives have frequently been known to deny themselves, even the necessary things of life, to satisfy the demands of some priest, and get their loved one out of purgatory. The writer knew of a case in Dover, Delaware. A devout catholic, a poor widow, lost an only son, and she offered the priest every penny she possessed, to pray her dear son out of purgatory, but he refused, and bluntly told the grief stricken mother, that she must raise twenty dollars more, or her son would be damned forever. Millions of dollars have been paid under similar circumstances to a corrupt priesthood, who are masters in the art of bleeding the sorrowing friends and relatives of the dead. Is it not passing strange that men and women, whose judgment is sound, and reasoning powers normal in other matters, may be so easily blinded and deceived, in questions of faith and religion?

But now dear reader, let us turn from these foolish, man-made traditions, and look for a few moments at God's plan of salvation, the hope of the prophets and apostles, as revealed in the holy Scriptures. Let us go out on the hills and mountains. Lift now your eyes and view this beautiful earth, with its sunshine and shadow, its rivers, oceans, and fertile plains—lovely, and beautiful, beyond description, even now while under the blight of sin and death. Then consider what will be its condition, when God has performed his purpose, removed the curse, and restored the Edenic conditions of perfection. Perfect climate, neither too hot, nor too cold; no destructive storms, neither to much rain, nor not enough; no more floods, nor high water to destroy life and property; no more rending and tearing of flesh, and shedding of innocent blood; no more savage wars, for "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." "They shall not hurt, nor destroy, in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord;" for "the lion shall eat straw like the ox, and dust shall be the serpent's meat." "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." As we view this lovely picture, with what joy do we recall God's precious promises, "The righteous shall inherit the earth, and dwell therein for ever;" "The righteous shall never be removed, but the wicked shall not inherit the earth;" "The heaven, even the heavens are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men." No more sorrow and tears, no more suffering, sickness, nor death, no more graves. The undertaker must change his business, and the manufacturer of monuments and tombs stones his calling; the rum-seller will have no place in all the earth, neither him that debauches his fellow man. And this grand old world, the mother of us all, upon whose gentle breast we have been nourished and sustained, will, throughout the endless aions of eternity, swing through space a purified and glorified orb, peopled by a perfect and incorruptible race, the obedient ones gathered from all nations, and races, since the world began, with our blessed Lord and Redeemer at their head. When this grand culmination has been reached creation will be finished and complete. The eternal purpose of God which he purposed at the beginning, will be performed. Neither satan, nor the sins of mankind and their resulting curse, have been sufficient to prevent the ultimate accomplishment of his will.

And now, dear reader, let us compare this grand, substantial, reasonable, satisfying hope with the foolish, sensual, visionary fables of the world, and the one overshadows the other so completely, that only the wilfully blind can fail to see the truth. The God of this glorious hope, has not been defeated by satan, and compelled to admit that he has been able to save but a small remnant of his creatures from the victorious clutches of a personal devil, and that he must at last witness the total destruction of this beautiful earth, and the utter defeat of his purpose in creating it.

Thank God, O ye people, who know the truth; sing joyful songs, O ye favored few! Lift up your heads and rejoice, ye who stand in the light of his gospel! This grand old earth is God's precious gift to you. And the deed gives everlasting possession, and a guarantee of endless life with which to enjoy it. Very soon, please God, with shouts of ecstatic yoy, and the glad consciousness of the powers of an endless life, we will again embrace our loved ones who now sleep in death, and wander hand in hand with them, over the old familiar scenes. Oh how our glad hearts will leap and bound, as we realize that sickness, pain, and death, and all troubles, and sorrows, both great and small, are forever behind us, and only beams of joy and promise ahead!

Compared to man-made schemes of salvation, this glorious, God given, Bible hope is like a mountain beside a molehill, or a gnat on the horn of an ox. As the mighty oak overshadows the tiny blade of grass at its roots, even so this glorious, gospel hope overshadows all man-made faiths and creeds.

Dear reader, are these thoughts new to you? Have you been taught to believe in a home beyond the bounds of time and space? Do you sing, "When I can read my title clear to mansions in the skies; and the soul that sins, do devils plunge it down to hell, in infinite despair?" Have you been taught that you have a never-dying soul to save, and fit it for the skies? If so, we invite you to make a study of the purpose of God concerning this planet and its people, as revealed in his word, and called "the gospel of the kingdom," and if your eyes are not hopelessly blinded by the god of this world, and the traditions of men, you will cast behind you these foolish and inconsistent fables, and come out of darkness into the glorious light of the gospel.

TWO EXTREMES REFUTED

No. 6

"Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen (nations R. V.), whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all: neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: but I will save them out of all their dwellingplaces, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God. And David my servant shall be king over them; and they shall have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them. And they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt; and they shall dwell therein, even they, and their children, and their children's children for ever: and my servant David, their prince for ever" (Ezek. 37: 21-25).

Again: "Thus saith the Lord God: When I shall have gathered the house of Israel from among the people where they are scattered, and shall be sanctified in them in the sight of the heathen (nations R. V.), then shall they dwell in their land that I have given to my servant Jacob. And they shall dwell safely therein, and shall build houses, and plant vineyards: yea, they shall dwell with confidence, when I have executed judgment upon all those that despise them round about them; and they shall know that I am the Lord their God."

These texts show that David is to have rulership in Israel, be a king prince post-resurrectionally when Israel is to dwell for ever in the land promised to Jacob. Now let us find what land is promised to Jacob, and we can learn some things that have been overlooked by those who follow closely in the tracks of the late Pastor Russell: "And God said unto Jacob, I am God Almighty: be fruitful and multiply; a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee, and kings shall come out of thy loins; and the land which I gave Abraham and Isaac, to thee I will give it, and to thy seed after thee will I give the land" (Gen. 35:11-12). What land did God give Abraham? "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abraham, saying, Unto they seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates" (Gen. 15:18). Again: "And the Lord said unto Abraham, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever" (Gen. 13:14,15). Now where was Abraham when he looked? In the land of Canaan in sight of the Jordan valley, and the ancient city of Sodom (Gen. 13:11, 12). Then it is scripturally stated that Israel is after the resurrection of David to dwell in the very land of Sodom and Samaria; for they are to have the "land promised to Jacob," which is "the and given Abraham and Isaac," and is all the land between the Nile and Euphrates rivers; and includes both countries. But does not God promise to restore both Sodom and Samaria? Not in the Russellite sense: for he is going to give all the land of ancient Sodom and Samaria to Israel, as per texts quoted from Ezekiel, and Ezekiel will not contradict himself. Then Ezekiel does not say God will restore Sodom and Samaria; but "when I bring again the captivity of Sodom and her daughters, and the captivity of Samaria and her daughters, then will I bring again the captivity of thy captives in the midst of them." "When thy sisters Sodom and her daughters, shall return to their former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to your former estate" (Ezek. 16:53-55). If these texts teach that the very Sodomites that were destroyed when God rained fire and brimstone on that ancient city, are to be raised and placed upon their ancient land, they teach that Sodomites are to dwell in the land of Israel, which he gave unto his servant Jacob, and they will dwell with restored Israel; for they have not dwelt there since their destruction, and the time of the return of Israel is near at this time. What does God mean by the words, "When I bring again the captivity?" We have an answer in Job: "The Lord turned (brought again) the captivity of Job" (Job 42:10), and gave him twice as much as he had before, and also gave him seven sons and three daughters, sheep, camels, oxen, and she asses. But God did not give any of the things which had died; all were new things; he even gave him a new set of sons and daughters. Now let us see who are to return to Samaria and Sodom: "Therefore as I live, saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, even the breeding of nettles, and salt pits, and a perpetual desolation; the residue of my people shall spoil them, and the remnant of my people shall possess them" (Zeph. 2:9). Here we are positively told that Moab and Ammon are to be as Sodom and Gomorrah, and it is the remnant of my people Israel that are to possess them. Possess what? Moab, and Ammon, and Sodom and Gomorrah, to complete the likeness. Then "the remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity, nor speak lies; neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth: for they shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid" (Zeph. 3:13). The fact that Israel are to return to their own land proves that they will possess Samaria; for it was their land before the Babylonian captivity. Then we can clearly see that when God returns the captivity of Sodom and Samaria he brings a new people, as he did in Job's case, and does not bring back those wicked people he destroyed.

But you may say, "What about Sodom returning to her former estate?" What was her former estate? "And Lot looked, and beheld all the plain of Jordan, that it was well watered everywhere, before the Lord destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah, even as the garden of the Lord," etc. (Gen. 13:10). "The desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by. And they shall say, This land was desolate has become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited" (Ezek. 36:34,35). "For the Lord shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody" (Isa. 51:3). These texts show that all the land God promised Israel will become as the garden of the Lord, and hence, prove that the salt valley, the ancient estate of Sodom and Gomorrah, will become fertile, and be as it was before those cities were destroyed. When Jacob's people possess it, it will be as good as it was when given them in God's promise, and a fit place for their eternal abode. That it will not be dead Sodomites, and the wicked dead of Israel that shall inhabit those countries is patent in the teaching of Jesus:

"If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins" (John 8:24).

"Ye are of your father the adversary" (John 8:44).

"Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life" (John 5:40).

"He came unto his own, and his own received him not" (John 1:11).

"He that believeth not is condemned already" (John 3:18).

"Woe unto you! for ye build the sepulchres of the prophets and your fathers killed them" (Luke 11:47).

"Truly ye bear witness that ye allow the deeds of your fathers" (Luke 11:47). The wicked Israelites of Moses' day will not enter into the land promised (Heb. 4:7,8). Read Heb. 3:16-19;4:1,2.

If the Russell theory is true then every Sodomite will be brought back to Sodom, and every Canaanite to Canaan, and every Samaritan back to Samaria, and every Jew back to Judea, and every member of the ten tribes back to their home in which the Samaritans laterly dwelt; the Turks and Arabs of today also must be restored to some place. What a mixture! Canaanites, Samaritans, Israelites, Turks, and Arabs all claiming the same country, and not only one generation of each people; but many generations of them all! The population of the ancient countries would be so great that standing room would be scarce; leaving out all that the Bible says about building houses, planting vineyards, and sowing and reaping. Every fact is subversive to that theory, and it disolves to nothing in the light of reason.

Here we will call on Ezekiel to clinch the nail that he has so thoroughly driven: "Nevertheless, I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant. Then shalt thou remember thy ways, and be ashamed when thou shall receive thy sisters, thine elder, and thy younger: and I will give them unto thee for daughters" (Ezek. 16:60). Here it is positively told Israel that she shall receive Sodom and Samaria, and that they are given unto her for daughters. Then in the return of Israel they will be her countries and as we have seen, inhabited by her people. If we take God at his word, we must believe that all who have done evil come forth in the resurrection unto condemnation, and that includes wicked Jews, wicked Sodomites, and wicked Canaanites; for they have done evil, and suffered many afflictions in the past because they did.

THE WORD OF GOD VS. THE TRADITIONS OF MEN

"In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the traditions of men" (Matt. 15:9).

These words of Jesus, quoted by him from Isaiah 29:13, were spoken to the religious people worshiping the Lord in the time of Isaiah, and applied by Jesus to the scribes and the pharisees of his day. And if I am not mistaken, they are also equally applicable to persons of the present time, whether preacher or people, who neglect to hear or practise the commandments of God. The Bible contains God's revelation to man—first, to the nation of Israel through Moses and the Prophets, and Jesus the Christ; and then, secondly, to the Gentiles, through the apostles, to whom was committed the word of reconciliation, or the gospel, to make it known to them for the obedience of faith. Deity has made himself known through the works of creation, as possessed of almighty power and infinite wisdom: but it is in the Bible alone that we find the full revelation of his character as a Being of infinite moral attributes, such as purity, goodness, mercy, love, justice and truth. Creation does not reveal these traits of the Divine character, but revelation does. Hence it is important that we hear the word of the Lord. It is the truth—the only guide or chart we have that leads to eternal life. The traditions of men are subversive of the truth of God. But Jehovah has declared through Isaiah. "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent;" and the apostle Paul says, "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God."

There is one tradition that I now wish briefly to examine, and which is the root of many other traditions (to be examined hereafter), and that is called: The Immortality of the Soul. I place this error as the first and most pernicious of the traditions of men. It is as old as the race and almost universally believed. Protestant and Catholic. Jew and Mohammedan, pagan and savage, all believe in life after the death of the body. History goes back up the stream of time for 3,000 years and finds the ancient Egyptians holding this tradition; but where did they get it? Profane history is silent. The Bible alone can tell us. It goes back 6,000 years, and gives the lie of the serpent, "Ye shall not surely die," as the origin of the tradition. Death came upon the human race through sin. "The wages of sin is death"—"Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." But in order to escape the force of the fact that death now reigns over all, worldly wisdom steps in to explain matters. It says, it is true, that to all appearance man dies; but man is a double being—body and soul; the body dies, but the soul lives and cannot die, because it is part of God. This human philosophy is held forth as Christian doctrine, and is taught and received as true by nearly all professors of religion. And is it not strange that such a tradition should be held as Bible truth, when it cannot be found anywhere in the Scriptures? The immortality of the soul is the doctrine of Grecian philosophers—Socrates and Plato; but it was our Savior Jesus Christ, who abolished death in his own personal resurrection, that has brought life and incorruptibility to light through the gospel. This is life predicated upon a resurrection from the dead; altogether a different thing from that imagined and taught by heathen philosophers.

In all the sixty-six books composing what is called the Bible, not one of its many writers mentions, or even alludes to the immortality of the soul. In the common version the word "immortality" only occurs five times, and all in Paul's epistles. In Rom. 2:7 it is to be sought after, showing that those who seek for it do not possess it, and will not. only by a patient continuance in well-doing. In 2 Tim. 1:10, quoted above, it is made known in the gospel. In 1 Tim. 6:16 it is stated to be inherent only in God. And in 1 Cor. 15:53,54 it is put on at the time of the resurrection by the righteous only. The word "immortal" occurs only once—1 Tim. 1:17—and refers to God; and even in this passage, if properly rendered, it would read incorruptible. The Divine Being only possesses inherent immortality. The Lord Jesus also has obtained incorruptible life through a resurrection from the dead, and has also received from the Father the authority and power to give eternal salvation or life to all men that obey him (Heb. 5:9).

If the tradition be true that human beings have a spark of Divinity within them that can never die, how is it that God, who is rich in mercy, has provided a Savior or Life-giver, to save men from perishing? Do we not read that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved," or have life (John 3:16,17). What is it to perish but to be cut off from life? Future life is conditional, therefore not now in possession. The Son of God, the "Good Shepherd," promises to give his sheep—those who hear his voice, and follow him—eternal life, and they shall never perish (John 10:27,28); and the believer on the Son shall have everlasting life, "and he will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:40). The apostle John refers to this promise when he says, "This is the promise which he has promised us, even eternal life" (1 John 2:25). If we are to come to Jesus as "the way, the truth, and the life;" to believe on him as the Son of God, who giveth life to the world; to hear his voice, and follow him, in order to obtain eternal life—is not immortality conditional? And if we are exhorted to seek for it, to labor for it, to lay hold on it, to fight for it, and to be faithful unto death in order to attain this "crown of life," it is clear that it is conditional; and unless we fulfill or accept the terms we have no right to claim the promise.

The gospel contains "the words of this life" (Acts 5:20). When people reject the gospel, they reject life—like the Jews. when Paul and Barnabas preached to them they "judge themselves unworthy of everlasting life" (Acts 14:46). The gospel contains the promise of life in Christ Jesus (2 Tim. 1:1); and this constitutes the only hope of a future life that a Christian has. It is called "the hope of salvation"—"the hope of eternal life"—a lively hope, a better hope, a blessed hope, etc. (1 Thess. 5:8; Tit. 1:2; 3:7; 1 Pet. 1:3; Heb. 8:19). The hope of life centres in Jesus our Lord, who is called "our hope," "our life" (1 Tim.1:1; Col. 3:4); and this is because he is "the resurrection and the life." He will raise up those who have believed into him. There is no future life for the dead except by a resurrection. The Father has given his Son power to raise the dead. And the resurrected and glorified Jesus says, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell (grave) and of death" (Rev. 1:18). Jesus is the only one that can deliver us from the power of death and the grave; "neither is there salvatio[illegible]ny other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be [illegible]" (Acts 4:12).

Now, dear reader, contrast these plain words of the Bible (and I have only quoted a few), with the tradition we have all been taught to believe—that we are immortal, and cannot die—and I ask, Does not this doctrine of men contradict and make void the word of God? But can we safely set his word aside, as though he had not spoken? "God forbid; yea, let God be true, but every man a liar," as the apostle Paul says. And Jesus told the pharisees of his day that while they accepted traditions and taught doctrines which nullified God's commandments, their worship was in vain—it was not acceptable. And think you that Jehovah is less mindful of his word now than he was when Isaiah prophesied to the Jews, and when Jesus spoke to them? Think of the declaration of the Psalmist in regard to his word: "Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name;" if so, then it cannot be altered. changed, nullified, or neglected only at great peril. The apostle says, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Life or salvation is offered in the gospel. Jesus said to the Jews, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life;" "for if ye will not believe that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." To die in sin is to perish—"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."—B. Wilson in "Words of Truth," 1892. Selected by Sister Coy, of Salem, O.

It isn't the money you spend; it is the time you take to spend it, that causes the damage.

Be social. In speaking of his youth a man once spoke of a sabbatical old party. "But she was an awfully good sort. She preached at me a good deal when I was a boy But she gave me chocolates, too."

A catalogue of the meteorites of North America, prepared by Dr. Farrington of the Field museum of natural history, shows that the distribution of these visitors from the sky is very uneven over the continent. The three greatest showers of meteorites have all occurred in the state of Iowa and two of these were within 65 miles of each other. Nearly half of the known meteorites of the continent would be included within a circle of 300 miles radius drawn about Mt. Mitchell, N. C., as a centre. Dr. Farrington suggests that some force, such as an extra-gravitational force, an obstructive effect exerted by the high peaks, or magnetic influence may be responsible for their concentration in this area.

Scientists say that all poisonous plants have developed their poisons for self-defense purposes. Strychnine, digitalis and numerous other useful, indispensible drugs which are poisonous in overdoses are produced by the plants as a "preparedness" measure for self-defense. Similarly, the alkaloids of tobacco, cinchona, tea, etc., are developed to protect the plants which produce them.

A little boy was walking down the streets of a town where whiskey was sold when he saw the town drunkard lying in the gutter dead drunk.

He called out to the saloonkeeper to come to the front. The saloonkeeper did so and said, "Well, what do you want?"

The little fellow pointed to the drunken man and said, "I just wanted to tell you that your sign had fallen down."

✓"A man rushed violently on to the platform of a railroad station, but just missed the train. 'You didn't run fast enough,' said a bystander. 'Oh, yes I did,' was the reply; 'but I didn't start soon enough.'"

Remarkable results have been obtained in Vienna with "sun cures" in the treatment of tuberculosis and bone diseases. It is said that the proper exposure of the body to the sun's rays produces highly satisfactory results in many cases where ordinary medical treatment is of no avail.

A Mark for the Archers.—The military students of Tung-Chou, China, are said to be a conspicuous nuisance. They have a way of using the main streets in the city as convenient spots for practising archery, and citizens need to be constantly on the alert to avoid flights of arrows. People are often struck by arrows, and many are severely wounded through the arrogance and carelessness of these military archers. Our own streets are full of hurtling arrows; they fly from the saloon and the gambling-hell and the brothel. They come whirling from the liquor-store, where the archer has a government license to shoot whom he will. No man is safe from these flying arrows of evil unless he is equipped with the full armor of the Lord.

Special Texts for Special Cases

The following objections are among those most frequently met in dealing with the unsaved. The texts of Scripture indicated, as well as similar passages, may be used in such cases.

"Not today," or "Some other time" (2 Cor. 6:2; Heb. 2:3; Heb. 3:15).

"Don't feel like it" (John 3:3; Acts 4:12; Acts 17:30 and 31).

"Am too great a sinner" (Isa. 1:18; Matt. 9:13; 1 Tim. 1:15).

"Am good enough now," or "Am satisfied with myself" (James 2:10; Rom. 6:23; John 3:3).

"Too many hypocrites in the church" (Rom. 14:12; 2 Cor. 5:10).

"Couldn't hold out" (1 Cor. 10:13; 2 Tim. 1:12; 1 Pet. 1:5; Jude 24).

"The Bible: Its Principles and Texts"

The Restitution

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

A MEMORIAM

To Our Dear Parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Herron

Dear Parents, how we miss thee
As the years doth come and go,
But we know that thou art sleeping,
For the Bible tells us so.

But when Jesus descends from heaven,
With a shout of an angel band,
He will bring to thee life eternal,
For he holdeth it in his hand.

And when Jesus sets up his kingdom,
We expect to meet thee there,
For while in this mortal body,
For his kingdom thou didst prepare.

Eight children of us waiting,
For that glorioes day to come,
When with parents and loved one united,
We can say the victory's won.

Mrs. Hattie Nett, a daughter.
